LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JUNE 4, 1973

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our guests today in both galleries are students from St. Martin's Separate School of Mississauga.

Statements by the ministry.

Oral questions.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

FARM INCOMES

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there are a few gaps over there but, as usual, the Minister of Agriculture is here and ready to give any information that might be asked of him. I would like to put a question to him.

Is his information office, and I would presume that he has got an information office as have all of his colleagues, prepared to develop and issue a statement associated with the statistical information that farmers' net incomes have increased by 43 per cent this year—a statement that would be associated with the actual average dollar net income rather than that rather impressive 43 per cent which might be misleading to those people whose incomes are considerably higher than the average farm income?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Well, Mr. Speaker, we could give consideration to that. As a matter of fact, I haven't really given a lot of thought to the suggestion. Statistics Canada publishes that report annually. There have been times when it has been debated rather vigorously here in the House in the past and I don't think there was any real consensus that ever emerged from those debates, other than a political position taken by the respective parties including my own.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The minister didn't take a political position.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, but I must confess that I thought it was only fair to advance the position of the party in power which I happen to represent.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I have known the minister to do that.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): In an impartial way.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It is most unusual, Mr. Speaker, but I have been accused of this. The increased income—and certainly it has been associated with many increases in prices that have been received over the last few months—I believe is a 43 per cent increase for all of Canada and 40 per cent for the Province of Ontario.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Since the 40 per cent figure is liable to mislead people who are very much concerned with the cost of living and the cost of food, would the minister not consider that a statement from his ministry, referring specifically to the average net incomes of farmers in the province, or the range of net incomes in various areas of the farm industry, might not be valuable so that the facts are known by the consumer more specifically and in more detail than they are presently reported?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: There could be merit to that, but I don't know just how one would possibly spread that all across the province giving each particular segment of the agricultural industry the appropriate apportionment of the 40 per cent.

It is true that some of them virtually did not increase at all. I think it is important to note that the large increase, particularly in meat prices and in milk prices, is accruing directly to the producer, not specifically to other segments, and I don't think there is any question of doubt about that. There is something to be said for that, and I am not going to stand here or anywhere else and deny that the farmer's income has gone up because it substantially has gone up.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: In the minister's non-political reply or comment on his behalf of the government, has he taken some initiative to clarify the highly erroneous contention that this is a 40 per cent increase in profits, when it legitimately is going to be subject to a deduction in terms of a wage for the farmer and likely a decent capital allotment for his investment?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The hon. member is quite right, because the 40 per cent does not indicate a profit at all. It simply indicates a 40 per cent increase over what the previous net income had been, which was virtually nil.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That is the important point.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am sorry if I missed the point from the hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. MacDonald: We will have more to say later in the day.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, that may well be. I rather expected that my hon. friend from York South would have something more to say about that just as would my hon. friend from Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt). It is still a matter of fact and I have no apologies to offer whatever for the 40 per cent, because it still in many cases doesn't represent a profit at all. It is simply an income increase, an increase between what the farmer had been getting and what he is now getting, based on last year's reports. Most of that took place, Mr. Speaker, in the last three months of 1972.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Right. With the assistance of the member for York South, the Minister of Agriculture and Food and I are talking about the same thing.

Would the minister not feel that it is his responsibility and prerogative to make a statement in this connection? In fact, it might justifiably be made in connection with his estimates, which we may get to later in the day, so that with as widespread information as possible the consumers are going to know that the farmers are not turning into a bunch of profiteers. Maybe they would like to, but they have not been very successful in this. This 40 per cent increase probably leaves them with an average net income now of between $5,000 and $6,000.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I will give it consideration, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure I can have a statement like that ready between now and when our estimates are supposed to come on later today. Certainly the point is well taken. I am sure my hon. friends opposite will make that point and I will be glad to support it.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The member for York South and I will help the minister with that statement.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am sure the members will, thank you.

CHARGES BY OECA PRODUCER

Mr. R. F. Nixon: In the absence of the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells), I would like to put a question to the Premier, knowing of his personal involvement and interest in OECA—the Ontario Educational Communications Authority.

Is he going to direct the Ministry of Education to undertake an examination of the charges made now by the third high administrative official of the educational authority, Mr. Roy Shields, in his resignation statement, when he said the expenditures in programmes at OECA amount to a public scandal; and that the research and examination of OECA by Price Waterhouse have not been made public because of the damaging statements that were made about the administration of that $13 million yearly fund?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Premier): Mr. Speaker, I think the figures are somewhat in error.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Twelve-point-eight million dollars. I shouldn't have exaggerated that point.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes. The Minister of Colleges and Universities (Mr. McNie) really has the administrative responsibility.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He is absent, too.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I understand he is on his way here and I am sure he would be delighted to deal with the questions. I would just make one general observation from my own standpoint that, while one certainly has controversy in a field such as this, I think this is true also of the CBC from time to time and other organizations that are dealing basically in the area of public service broadcasting. While I certainly wouldn't comment on what Mr. Shields has said because I am not that familiar with it, I would make that general observation.

I read an article very recently from one of the Montreal papers which was extremely congratulatory as to the calibre of the programming provided by channel 19. I think it is also relevant to point out that while in any organization there certainly are problems of personalities—certainly in creative fields—over the past two or three years the calibre of the programming produced by channel 19 has received international recognition as being some of the finest of its kind being produced anywhere.

However, as it relates to the three resignations, Mr. Speaker, I understand there was some criticism that somebody related to the college field had not been appointed and there is some evidence that somebody is coming from McMaster, I believe, at the completion of his PhD to take over this aspect of the programming. Quite frankly Mr. Speaker, I do not have the details; I just learned of this this morning. The minister is on his way here and I'm sure he would be delighted to answer the questions of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary, until the minister arrives: Would the Premier undertake to make public the Price Waterhouse review of the management of OECA?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I can't give any such undertaking until discussing it with the minister and seeing what his answers are to some of the questions that I'm sure the Leader of the Opposition would wish to raise.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Is the Premier aware, since we are talking about $12.8 million which was voted a year ago, that we can expect some indications from the information officers of OECA that their programming is going to be effective? Does the Premier not realize that the taxpayers are not going to sit back and have the Legislature blindly vote another $13 million until this is cleaned up?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the minister, I understand—and I can now visually see—is here. I think it's quite appropriate for the Legislature to examine any expenditure of public funds and this includes OECA. I think it would be appropriate to do it, of course, during the estimates. I would say, Mr. Speaker, now that the minister responsible is here, perhaps the Leader of the Opposition, after he has finished his general questions, would like to direct a question to the minister.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if I might direct a similar question to the minister. Without going over them all again, can he assure the House that the Price Waterhouse report on OECA and the educational authority will be made public in this House so that we can assess for ourselves the justification for the three resignations from the top management of the organization?

Hon. J. McNie (Minister of Colleges and Universities): Mr. Speaker, to answer the member's first question, he can have a copy of the Price Waterhouse report tomorrow morning or this afternoon if he wishes.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I do wish that. If the minister would table it, that's all.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Would he table it in the House please?

Hon. Mr. McNie: I can't speak to the appropriateness of tabling it in the House, but if it's appropriate then we'll do so.

Mr. Lewis: Give it to us. We will table it for the minister.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Yes. Will the minister then undertake to make the report public? That is really what I want to know.

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, as the Premier has said, we are in estimates this week and if we can move along a little more quickly than we have in the last couple of days we will be at the OECA very shortly. Members will have full opportunity to deal with OECA at that time.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Is the minister going to request perhaps the policy minister or his colleague, the Minister of Education, to make available the services of that famous committee on the costs of education—which with the services of Dr. McCarthy, has been in operation now, I believe, for three years—to examine the functioning of OECA and particularly to see how the application of the Price Waterhouse report might be used to cut the waste of the $13 million that have been voted?

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, that was quite a mouthful.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: What about the committee?

Hon. Mr. McNie: We have a report at hand right now, which has been prepared for the field and is now in the hands of our ministers, on the subject of the role of the OECA. We are looking at it very closely and we'll have a great deal more to say about it. It has very little to do with the Price Waterhouse report which dealt, as I understand, purely with the organization. As I also understand, the majority of the recommendations have already been implemented or are in the process of being implemented.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Does the minister know, of his own knowledge, that there are $25,000-a-year directors sitting around doing nothing because the $12.8 million has been used up and they have to wait until the approval of further moneys?

Hon. Mr. McNie: The answer to that, Mr. Speaker, is no.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have two supplementaries for the minister on this.

No. 1: Surely the minister has heard, as others of us have over the last year, of the apparent administrative, programming and financial shambles which is virtually out of control within OECA? No. 2: Would he be willing to encourage the appearance before the legislative committee on estimates this week of Mr. Roy Shields and the other two senior officers of the authority who have resigned so that we can hear specifically from them what it is about the internal operation of ETV that is clearly so out of line?

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, we will have the chairman of the OECA and his staff at the meeting, and I hope we will be able to get a copy of the statement which Mr. Shields issued. This is not yet available to my office or to Mr. Ide's office.

Mr. Lewis: But if the committee so requested, would the minister agree to having Mr. Shields come before the estimates committee to put his case? As a matter of fact, I suspect—

Mr. Singer: They can read it in the Globe and Mail.

Mr. Lewis: Just a second—I suspect that even though he is leaving the Titanic, he will still be in the water by the end of this week.

Mr. Singer: No, he's boarding the Titanic. He is escaping the other thing.

Mr. Lewis: No, he's leaving it.

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to undertake that we are going to bring to the estimates committee Mr. Shields or any other employee who has left any one or another of any of the number of agencies that fall under our jurisdiction. Mr. Speaker, this is a Crown corporation, and as such I think we have to observe some of the proprieties in this particular instance.

Mr. Lewis: Well, within the propriety—whatever the devil that is—if Mr. Shields is in the process of being paid the severance amount or whatever it is at the point of departure, and in effect the resignation does not take effect until a given date later in June, under those circumstances the minister would allow him to appear, I'm sure.

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, the only thing I'm going to assure this House is that we are going to look into these allegations very thoroughly.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): That is pretty limp.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. Leader of the Opposition have further questions?

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR PRIVATE ZOO

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I'd like to ask the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development if he has been approached by officers of the Upper Canada Zoological Society for public assistance in maintaining its facilities, particularly on a basis of providing an educational facility? In addition, has government policy been arrived at in this regard, in view of the fact that the Toronto Zoological Society or whatever it is that is building the new zoo is undoubtedly getting public support at the municipal level?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, they have approached me on several occasions. We have had to say at this time that we could not provide them with public funds to support their operation. One of the reasons is that we do not have at this moment a comprehensive policy available in relation to zoos of all kinds throughout the province.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister has got one over there, though.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Not only do we want—and I think we require to have—greater controls developed over these institutions, but also we have to come up with a universal policy; so at this particular point in history we had to say no.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Since there is such a public involvement in the redevelopment of Ste. Marie-among-the-Hurons and the improvement of Wasaga Beach, would it not be possible that this could be another point in the redevelopment for tourist and educational purposes in the area somewhat similar to the funds spent on Ontario Place, say, or the proposed Ontario Place in the far north, which would serve that particular community and the whole of the community of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I think that the government has been sympathetic at all points to the requests by the society. It is a private society, and the bulk of the land, as far as I know, is privately owned; so it's not quite in the category of the Metropolitan Toronto Zoo or an educational outdoors park or something of that nature.

Perhaps if it were to be reorganized as a public institution it could be reconsidered. Perhaps also we should ask the Ministry of Natural Resources and our policy field to assess its priorities and at least give them some idea of where it would sit, in a series of such educational zoological activities.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

RECEPTION

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, won't the provincial Treasurer just take a moment to tell us about his banquet for the lucky 800 tonight? Why he is having it? What's it about? Can he just tell us a little about it?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Who's paying?

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was sent a little note fluttering down from the press gallery on this subject.

Mr. Lewis: Well, I wasn't invited.

Hon. Mr. White: That's the first I've heard of it; in fact, that is why I was about to leave.

Mr. Lewis: Oh.

Hon. Mr. White: My understanding was that a somewhat smaller group—

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Get there on time!

Hon. Mr. White:—numbering how many I don't know—several score perhaps—were going to congregate in the Macdonald Block—

Mr. Deans: Several hundred organizations?

Hon. Mr. White:—at 8 o'clock for a dish of lemonade or something, to celebrate the climax—

Mr. Lewis: A dish of lemonade?

Mr. MacDonald: Why is the minister downgrading his favourite Harvey's Shooting Sherry?

Hon. Mr. White:—to months, if not years, of very intensive labours which as the members know will end their first stage today. I will be glad to give a further report when I come back from—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Of what, regional government?

Hon. Mr. White:—my meanderings, which have that objective in view.

Mr. MacDonald: He has us as confused as he is!

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Pass that lemonade!

Mr. Lewis: He's been meandering since his appointment. Why doesn't he just sit down?

Hon. Mr. White: May I say while I am on my feet how simply delighted we are here that the member for Scarborough West is going to be staying as leader?

Mr. Lewis: I am pleased to accept it!

Hon. Mr. White: I'll give a further report in one minute.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we'd really like to know how many score it is.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Where is the Treasurer meandering to?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, are you aware as to whether this meeting is open to all those who might be interested to go?

Mr. Speaker: I have no idea.

Mr. MacDonald: You have no idea?

Mr. Deans: Are you invited?

Mr. Foulds: Have you been invited?

Mr. Lewis: Some of us have worked as detractors of this scheme for many years, I may say, and should also be invited to the celebration.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Detractors?

Mr. Lewis: Detractors, yes. Not that I understand what's happening.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I thought you were invited a few weeks ago.

Mr. Lewis: Is the Treasurer going to elaborate?

Mr. Singer: Has he got more information?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Is the Treasurer perambulating back?

Hon. Mr. White: I sought out my principal assistant meanderer to get the information.

Mr. Lewis: I see. Good.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He is out squeezing lemons.

Interjections by hon. members.

OWEN SOUND SUBDIVISION

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Minister of Natural Resources whether he has yet found the information that I asked him for a little time ago about the escarpment, relating to the use of the land across from Westhill Secondary School in Owen Sound?

An hon. member: He is looking for it.

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Natural Resources): Mr. Speaker, no petition which the member spoke of has reached my office, and I am certainly not aware of it.

But, I have the answer to another question.

Mr. Lewis: Right.

Is the House Leader here?

An hon. member: Yes, there he is.

PAYMENT OF CHAIRMAN OF SCHOOL FINANCE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Lewis: Ah, there he is.

Just by way of curiosity, has he yet managed to mobilize his meanderers to ascertain Barry Lowe's per diem as chairman of the cost committee?

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Of all three of them.

Mr. Singer: Of all his committees.

Mrs. Campbell: All his committees.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have the answer to the first question anyway.

For the chairman it's $135 per diem, and for Miss Gayfer it's $100. Dr. Tuft is on contract with the ministry. When that contract finishes he will go on the same rate. The balance of the people are seconded, and of course there is no financial implication.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The same rate as the chairman?

Mr. Singer: What does Lowes get on the other committees?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I don't have that as yet.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: He receives $135 for that one and $110 for the training schools, and the minister hasn't yet got the information about the denture therapists? I'm sure that will come soon.

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): It's like pulling teeth, too.

DENTURISTS BILL

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Minister of Health to comment in the Legislature about the accuracy—I am sure it was accurate—of the Toronto Star story that he is jettisoning his bill on the denturists?

Hon. R. T. Potter (Minister of Health): I'd be delighted, Mr. Speaker. The first I heard of it was when I read it in the newspaper. I don't know where the information came from but it didn't emanate from me, that is for sure.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Well, I'm glad. Now that he has heard about it, would he like to make a comment on the contents of the story which, as I recall, authoritatively suggested that it was likely he would be withdrawing the denturists bill; or not putting into regulation the important clauses of it? In other words a retreat from it.

Hon. Mr. Potter: As I said, Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the story came from. There is no truth in it as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Lewis: The minister intends to proceed with the bill as he indicated in the Legislature? Fine!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister indicate, then, when he will proclaim the sections which will make it illegal for denturists to practise without the supervision of a qualified dentist?

Hon. Mr. Potter: As soon as I am assured, Mr. Speaker, that those who are qualifying have passed the exams as properly set up. As of now there were 57 registered to write the examinations. One was unable to write because of illness; 56 wrote the examinations, 44 passed. These 44 will be taking their oral practical test next week. I expect very shortly after that to be advised of those who have been successful.

As of this morning I have had information on the something like 60-odd employment vacancies that now exist. I think it was 40—these are just ball park figures—I think it was 40 dentists who have applied, or indicated their interest in employing a denture therapist as soon as he is qualified. There were 100-and-some-odd who want one on a part-time basis.

So there is a need and there are vacancies for these people as soon as they are qualified. Then I'll be in a better position to see that legislation is enacted.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Further supplementary: Since it was just a year ago now that the minister's policy colleague introduced a bill that would have permitted the denturists to practise independently, could the minister say that the proclamation of those sections might be postponed for as much as six months during which time there will be further assessment of the situation?

Hon. Mr. Potter: I wouldn't want to put a time figure on it, Mr. Speaker. I want to make sure the programme is working efficiently. I want to make sure they all have an opportunity of taking the examinations and of being upgraded. We are not setting up the educational programme to upgrade those who need it, but I can't give members any definite time.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is it correct that the College of Dentists has refused to enforce the legislation; and if so how does the minister intend that the legislation will be enforced?

Hon. Mr. Potter: It is not true!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

The hon. Solicitor General has the answer to a question asked previously.

EMPLOYMENT OF HANDICAPPED

Hon. J. Yaremko (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. George asked the following question:

Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Solicitor General. I am afraid it is the third time I have had to make reference to the subject matter. Can the Solicitor General today tell this House whether or not the Fire Marshal is advising employers not to employ the handicapped as they are a fire risk? Could I get an answer?

Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Fire Marshal of Ontario that he has not advised employers not to employ the handicapped as they are a fire risk. He has further inquired from his staff as to whether or not they have provided such advice, and the answer is no.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

STELCO POLLUTION LEVELS

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development.

Is it a matter of government policy within his jurisdiction which permits the Steel Co. of Canada to emit sulphur dioxide at a rate five times greater than that emitted by Dofasco, and approximately four times greater than the regulations of the Province of Ontario; that permits them to emit particulate matter at a rate twice the level of Dofasco and approximately twice the level of the regulations of the Province of Ontario; and to emit fluorides at a rate something close to 15 times the level established by the Province of Ontario as being acceptable?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I can't conceive there being such a policy.

As to responding to the details of what we might describe as the allegations, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Auld) is away for some days, but I will get in touch with his ministry and see if I can have a response to the figures set out by the member.

Mr. Deans: Supplementary question: May I ask the minister whether he would be prepared to make available to the municipality of the city of Hamilton the figures related to the emission of those particular pollutants by the two companies involved, who are within the city?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: If they are available I would think the Minister of the Environment could release them. I will check with him and see what facts we have available. I'll also check and see whether, if we don't have them available, we can take steps to make them available.

Mr. Deans: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: May I ask the minister whether he would also check to find out why it is that at this point, some two years after the statement by the government, that Stelco and Dofasco were going to be pulled into line and that there was a programme in effect that would reduce pollution emission in the Hamilton area, that we still have these kinds of situations?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Again, Mr. Speaker, I will ask the department or the minister, if he is coming back in the next few days, to respond.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

CABINET MINISTERS' EXPENSE ALLOWANCE

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier. Could the Premier tell us the basis on which an expense allowance is being paid to each cabinet minister of the province at the rate of $300 per month, and why there is no accounting for this claim?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think this question should really be more properly directed to the Treasurer, under whose jurisdiction this falls.

Mr. Singer: Could the Premier, by way of supplementary, tell us the basis on which it was increased from $200 a month to $300 a month, when the Provincial Auditor has told us that he can locate no statutory authority, no order in council, nor any minute of the cabinet nor any resolution of this House? Could he tell us how this is done?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This is an administrative practice originated in 1945, at which time the amount was $100 per month, as I understand it. The intention, no doubt, was to provide certain moneys for extraordinary expenses incurred in this province by cabinet ministers as an alternative to the cabinet minister himself acquiring some number of vouchers, each of which would have to go through an elaborate vetting process. Some years afterwards—I am not sure precisely; 1959, I think I saw in the paper—the $100 was increased to $200, and more recently it has been increased to $300.

I think the administrative practice is well founded. It is revealed in the public accounts, sometimes explicitly as the sole item of expenditure for a minister and sometimes embraced with certain expenditures for travelling outside this province. I am sure I speak for my colleagues when I say if there is a better way of doing it we would be glad to do it that other way. I observe that the 10-cents-per-mile times 30 trips, or 30 round trips, whichever it is, to which these cabinet ministers are legislatively entitled, as a matter of fact, have just not been claimed.

Mr. Singer: Wouldn't the Treasurer agree that it would at least be good practice to have some kind of authority whether legislative or by order in council or by resolution of this House, before raids are made on the Treasury that are unaccounted for; and would the minister be able to tell us the basis on which the mysterious news got to whomever writes the cheques that it had been increased from $200 a month to $300 a month?

Hon. Mr. White: In fact, I can't tell the member that. But, as I say, if there is a suggestion as to a better way of handling it from any source, we would certainly like to consider it.

Mr. Singer: Would the minister not agree, Mr. Speaker, that this kind of practice where money is paid to cabinet ministers without any explanation and without any authority, approaches fraud on the taxpayers of the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. White: No, indeed I would not. This is the kind of cheap criticism which doesn't dignify the Liberal Party.

Mr. Singer: It is not cheap.

Hon. Mr. White: These amounts have been revealed in the public accounts. These amounts are embraced in the estimates for the ministry.

Mr. Singer: They are not.

Hon. Mr. White: This is a simple administrative procedure having no administrative expenses. If there is a better way of doing it, we will certainly do it that way.

Mr. Cassidy: Nonsense, it's a slush fund.

Hon. Mr. White: I can almost guarantee the amount of money thereby claimed will be substantially more than this maximum allowance. It is absolutely inevitable the administrative expenses will be 10 or 100 times as much.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, since $3,600 a year is the total income for a very considerable number of families in this province for all of their expenditures and requirements, doesn't the Treasurer think it, if not a fraud, at least in bad taste to take the money without accountability, and that accountability is a useful procedure in this area?

Mr. Singer: And without authority!

Hon. Mr. White: I think that kind of remark comes with very ill grace from a man who made hundreds of thousands of dollars utilizing legislation, under provisions in the legislation for which he himself was the critic.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, go on! Deal with the issues.

Mr. Lewis: I am sorry, I couldn't hear where I made the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, $3,600 is a great deal of money and $3,600 in my expectation is substantially less than is expended by these cabinet ministers for that purpose. I reaffirm, Mr. Speaker, if there is a better way of doing it, as suggested from any quarter, we will be glad to consider that.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The hon. member for York Centre.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the Treasurer not agree that the system of submitting vouchers as used by normal businessmen and others who have to pay taxes as normal taxpayers would be the proper way to deal with a situation like this?

Hon. Mr. White: No doubt this is an alternative that should be considered, yes. I point out to you that this has been the practice for 28 years and was never objected to—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. White: It was always known to, and never objected to by, the Provincial Auditor.

Mr. Cassidy: It was known by the cabinet and nobody else!

Hon. Mr. White: If I may indulge myself for a moment, may I say now how pleased we are here that the member for York Centre is the only candidate for the Liberal leadership.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the provincial Treasurer a question?

If there is no legislative authority for this and no accountability, on what authority did the Provincial Auditor okay this since 1945?

My second supplementary question: Since the minister is obviously on the defensive and willing to entertain some alternative procedure, if there isn't accountability and there isn't legislative authority why hasn't he come up with an obvious alternative at least to establish that?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I think the member will have to ask the Provincial Auditor why he hasn't objected. The administrative authority, no doubt, is comparable to the administrative authority for the lead pencils on our desks. They are in the estimates and they are in the public accounts, and that is the authority.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: No, the hon. member for York-Forest Hill is next with a supplementary.

Mr. Givens: It is not a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, I thought it was a supplementary. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, to the Treasurer: In view of the fact that in the investigation of the extra $11,000 expenses of the hon. Minister of Natural Resources we found this $300 a month that we would never have known about, how many other extras are there which are not authorized but which are being paid to cabinet ministers? Further, the Treasurer equates the $3,600 as being equal to the mileage which the members are given; why is there any mileage at all when they have chauffeured limousines to use?

An hon. member: And aircraft!

Mr. Sargent: And aircraft? Where is there any equality there?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the Legislature passed that statute; it wasn't passed by me. I am drawing the members' attention to the fact that cabinet ministers, as a matter of practice, have never claimed those amounts which in some instances would be very substantial.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur is next, if it is a supplementary.

Mr. Foulds: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister saying that the cabinet ministers are not claiming their mileage allowance of 30 trips per year back to their homes as members of the Legislature? If he is saying that, how is that possible when it comes to the members automatically, without claiming it upon certification from the Speaker's office of the distance from the constituency to Queen's Park? No member of this Legislature has to put in a formal request for that amount.

Mr. J. R. Rhodes (Sault Ste. Marie): Control yourself, son!

Hon. Mr. White: I come by this information secondhand, but it is my understanding that as a matter of practice, instructions were given, years ago presumably, that these allowances were not to be sent automatically to the cabinet ministers. Speaking for myself, I know that since being appointed in 1968 I have never claimed, and I have never received, mileage allowance.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of further supplementary: If this practice is so well known, particularly to the Provincial Auditor, doesn't the Treasurer find it more than strange that the Provincial Auditor, when he presented to the public accounts committee a summary of moneys of all kinds paid to cabinet ministers, didn't include this amount?

Hon. Mr. White: Sir, that is another question which should go to the Provincial Auditor.

Mr. Sargent: Who okayed the entries?

Mr. Speaker: There has been a quite sufficient number of supplementaries to this. The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: No, I was over a long time ago.

Mr. Speaker: All right. The hon. member for York-Forest Hill.

OWNERSHIP OF KRAUSS-MAFFEI

Mr. Givens: I would like to ask the Minister of Transportation and Communications a question arising out of a statement in his house organ, the MTC News. On page 2 there is a short paragraph or a statement about Krauss-Maffei that says: "The company is part of the Flick group, one of the largest privately owned industries in Europe." Is this the Flick group which was headed by one Friedrich Flick, who was one of these nice men who were sentenced to seven years' imprisonment at Nuremberg for war crimes, crimes against humanity and exploitation of slave labourers, the personally liable partner and general manager of the Friedrich Flick Kommanditgesellschaft of Dusseldorf? I think Kommanditgesellschaft means "group of companies." Does the minister happen to know about that?

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Givens: A supplementary: Would the minister please find out about it and report back to the House?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

NOTICE OF PRODUCTION MOVES

Mr. MacDonald: I have a question of the Minister of Labour.

The minister will recall that two or three years ago, when there was a strike situation at Johnson Matthey and Mallory on Industry Rd. in the borough of York, partly because the company moved part of its plant and some employees out to Woodstock, assurance was given then that there would be no further shifts.

In view of the recent action of JM and M in moving another part of its plant, this time to Stratford, may I ask the minister if he was informed in advance that this was going to happen? If not, in his view is there not some wisdom in the proposition of making it legislatively necessary on the part of a company to inform the Ministry of Labour, the work force and the community so they all can cope with this kind of disruption?

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I couldn't say for sure whether I was informed or not. I'll have to check on this. However, I'd be glad to go a step further and ask our employment adjustment services to find out whether we can do something along those lines.

Mr. MacDonald: What about the ongoing, long-term aspect of my question; namely, is it not now time to have in the law a legislative responsibility on the part of companies to inform all of the interested parties when they are planning such a basic move as this, which has disruptive consequences in the community?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: My experience so far, Mr. Speaker, is that we assuredly do get the co-operation of most industries in this province. I'm not familiar with this specific case, but by and large we do get co-operation from all the industries in Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: In advance?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, we do.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce is next.

REMOVAL OF CONDITIONS ON GRANTS TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer.

Since the proposed deconditionalization of grants applies to library grants, how does the Treasurer intend to apply these grants with respect to payment? Is the Treasurer going to make the payment directly to the local municipalities in the cases where county library systems apply?

Hon. Mr. White: The question is based on an incorrect assumption, Mr. Speaker. We haven't deconditionalized any grants. In one of the appendices to the budget statement we did announce that we would work with the municipal liaison committee in considering a range of conditional grants for deconditionalization; but that in fact will not be done until next year at the earliest. My impression is the library grants will be among the more difficult to deconditionalize.

RECEPTION

Hon. Mr. White: May I impose on the House again, sir, to give the answer to a previous question?

The "assistant meanderer" has brought a memo reading as follows: "Approximately 175 of urban and regional planning staff will be at reception, Kenora Room. Cash bar. Won't you all come?"

Mr. Deans: That's a pretty cheap government; that's all I can say.

Mr. Lewis: Why isn't the government holding a banquet for them?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

TRANSPORTATION COSTS IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Foulds: A question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications, Mr. Speaker: What steps is his ministry taking to extend the announced freight rate decrease on the Ontario Northland Railway to northwestern Ontario and the vast majority of communities in northern Ontario that are not served by the ONR, as was admitted by the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development on May 24?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, we are not taking any steps at present. As I stated when the statement was made, we were just utilizing the facilities at our disposal, namely the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission. We do not have the jurisdiction in northwestern Ontario the same as we have in northeastern Ontario because we have a railway there. But in the interim we are talking with the railroads on the northeastern freight rate situation, and obviously if there is anything we could do respecting northwestern Ontario we would.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Foulds: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Supplementary. What is happening to the much-vaunted statements by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman), who is chairman of the ONR, about extending ONR service into northwestern Ontario? Has the ministry actually given those suggestions flaunted in the local press any serious consideration? And is the minister willing to look into the question of package freight along the Great Lakes, as the Canada Steamship Lines has stopped using package freight into the port of Thunder Bay?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, we are looking into all aspects of freight rates relating to the whole of the north. As I say, the steps we took relating to northeastern Ontario are the first steps in that direction. As a matter of fact, there are many suggestions we are presently studying, one of them being the possibility of a piggyback situation in Sault Ste. Marie.

There are many things we are looking into. We will be announcing them as and when we are able to do so.

Mr. Foulds: When will that be?

Hon. Mr. Carton: In the future, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Foulds: Yes, a long time in the future.

An hon. member: The member won't be around to see what happens.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York Centre.

NEW TORONTO AIRPORT

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Premier: In view of the requests made to the federal government by the councils of the city of Toronto, the borough of Scarborough, the township of Pickering and the town of Markham for a full inquiry into the Pickering Airport before the federal government takes further action on expropriation of the properties, will the Premier assist them by getting together with the federal government on the terms of the inquiry before they finally complete it? I understand the federal government has been asking for the Premier's co-operation in this matter, but it has been unable to get together with him regarding this.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I don't really know that it is appropriate for us to determine for the federal government what the terms of reference should be for its particular inquiry. The minister responsible has had some discussion, or will have on Mr. Marchand's return.

Certainly Mr. Marchand has been co-operative and we would like to co-operate too, but, Mr. Speaker, I think the important aspect here is to remember that the determination as to the need for a second international airport to serve the general metropolitan area or southern Ontario—or whatever size geography you may wish to use—is that basically of the federal government. Surely the terms of reference, in the final analysis, must be the federal government's.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: But the location was this government's.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it is fair to state that we have not presumed, with the constitutional authority given to us, to seek from the federal government guidance or responsibility for terms of reference that fall within our jurisdiction.

Certainly on a matter as important as this we are quite prepared to be as helpful as we can; but I would remind the hon. member that it is the federal government in Ottawa—to which he is much closer than I am—which is making the determination as to what the terms of reference should be; and properly so.

Mr. Deacon: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. The question period is now expired. We have gone over the time by a minute and a half.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Why doesn't the member just call Barney and tell him?

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. Mr. Bennett presented the annual report of the Ontario Research Foundation for the fiscal year 1971; the annual report of the Ontario Development Corp., March 31; the annual report for the Northern Ontario Development Corp.; financial statements of Ontario Development Corp. for the fiscal year March 31, 1972; and the financial statements for the Northern Ontario Development Corp. for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1972.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

ONTARIO PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to provide for Planning and Development in Ontario.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I will provide an explanation of these bills when I finish introducing the three of them, if that is satisfactory.

PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT ACT NIAGARA ESCARPMENT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to provide for Planning and Development in the Niagara Escarpment and its vicinity.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order!

May I inquire of the minister, was there a press briefing on this bill this morning?

Hon. Mr. White: The press has been locked up for some time until the formal audio-visual presentation taking place across the street at 4 o'clock, at which all members of the Legislature and all heads of councils from the areas affected are to be given a much more detailed explanation of this far-reaching legislation.

PARKWAY BELT ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to provide for Planning and Development of the Parkway Belt.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the three Acts being introduced this afternoon represent a major advance in the planning programme of the government of Ontario.

The Ontario Planning and Development Act sets out a new process for the design, adoption and implementation of provincial plans in different areas of Ontario. The provincial government is empowered to prepare plans in close consultation with municipalities and others. These plans will then be put through a vigorous process of public examination and hearings. Following this the government may adopt the plan, with any appropriate modifications, and the plan then becomes a policy guide for all government agencies—provincial and municipal.

The Parkway Belt Planning and Development Act is a special companion piece of legislation enabling us to begin implementation of a system of parkway belts, or multiple-use corridors, around Toronto. A draft provincial development plan for the western segment of the parkway belt, from Dundas to Markham, has been completed and will be made public at a special presentation later this afternoon.

I repeat, sir, that all members of the Legislature are invited to attend that in the Ontario room of the Macdonald Block at 4 p.m.

This proposed parkway belt plan, along with a later proposal for the Markham to Oshawa segment, will go through the public examination and hearing process outlined in the Ontario Planning and Development Act and will then be adopted as official policy.

In order that no interim development takes place that is in conflict with the purposes of the parkway belt, the Act provides for temporary land use regulations. Effective today, these regulations apply in the western section of the parkway belt from Dundas to Markham. In general terms, these regulations will restrict any non-agricultural land uses in the parkway belt.

The Niagara Escarpment Planning and Development Act sets out a similar process for the Niagara Escarpment planning area. The Act establishes a Niagara Escarpment Commission of 17 members—eight representing municipalities, eight representing the province, plus a chairman. The Niagara Escarpment Commission is given the responsibility of preparing a draft plan for the escarpment area. The Act stipulates that the plan must have as its goal the preservation of the natural landscape of the escarpment, and that the plan must be prepared in close consultation with the municipalities affected.

Following preparation of the plan and a process of public examination and hearings, the plan is to be submitted to the government. After adoption, the Niagara Escarpment Plan will become official policy for all government planning at both the provincial and municipal levels.

In the regional municipality of Niagara where official plan preparation now is mature and where resources for planning are quite acceptable, the new Niagara Escarpment Commission will be directed to work closely with the region. The commission will be expected to use much of the existing draft regional plan for Niagara as part of the commission's guidelines. For such areas as Niagara with a proven planning capability the Treasurer will later delegate to the municipality many of the detailed planning responsibilities and authorities he now holds.

The Niagara Escarpment Planning and Development Act also provides for a system of development controls to ensure that all new development is compatible with our objective of escarpment preservation. It is our intention to designate key parts of the escarpment area as subject to development control as soon as this Act receives royal assent.

The three new pieces of provincial planning legislation are complex. It is not possible for me to do more than merely note the basic principles at this time. In order to provide members of the House and others with a fuller explanation of the Parkway Belt and Niagara Escarpment Acts, a special presentation has been arranged for 4 p.m. this afternoon in the Ontario Room, Macdonald Block. At that time the Premier, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development and I will expand upon the policies underlying the legislation introduced today.

This legislation again confirms Ontario as a pioneer in moving forward with a programme of provincial-regional planning and development.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF NIAGARA ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Regional Municipality of Niagara Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, this bill has a number of housekeeping sections. Secondly, it has authority to designate bus lanes on regional roads. Thirdly, it provides other sections dealing with civilian employees of police forces. I should like to inform the House that the bill will be handled by my parliamentary assistant, the member for York East (Mr. Meen).

Mr. Cassidy: You two had better get acquainted.

Hon. Mr. White: The member doesn't have to worry about that.

MUNICIPALITY OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the Metro bill has the same housekeeping sections as the previous bill. It also provides authority for Yonge St. to be closed for a mall again this summer. Finally, at Metro's request, it also provides authority to compensate the Ukrainian-Canadian Committee concerning its legal costs regarding the Ontario Science Centre inquiry. This also will be handled by the parliamentary assistant who sits for York East.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry, sir, but I have a question of clarification, if I may. A number of ministers, particularly the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development, have indicated in the last number of weeks, from time to time, when asked about purchases of escarpment land and plans for the escarpment, that this information would emerge at a given point. Do I take it that this is the definitive answer today, that this is what it encompasses?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I think the leader of the NDP will not be fully satisfied with the cost estimates we are providing. They are rather rough. As I mentioned earlier and as the Provincial Secretary, I think indicated earlier, there are funds provided in a number of ministries for a wide variety of activities including land acquisition for roadways, parks and so on and so forth.

My people have attempted to isolate these expenditure items so that a single concise figure could be given to the member for Scarborough West and others interested. This has proved to be impossible because the conservation authorities, for instance, who become an agency, under certain of the legislation, will themselves have to order their priorities and will themselves have to initiate applications. The presentation this afternoon will provide some rough estimates but the exact figures year by year will have to wait for a later occasion.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 13th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. R. D. Rowe in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Pursuant to the special order of Thursday last, I do now leave the chair and we will resume at 8 o'clock.

It being 3:05 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JUNE 4, 1973

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Chairman: When we rose last time I believe the minister had just completed his opening statement. We will now recognize the member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am very pleased to participate in these estimates once again this year. I couldn't help but think, when the minister opened the debate the other night, that things do change from year to year. The minister is certainly sailing through very calm waters at the present time. There is hardly a ripple. The tide comes in and the tide goes out and—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That is when he should be careful.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): The price of eggs is going up and up.

Mr. Gaunt: —the minister sits across the way smiling benignly and basking in the warm sunshine of relatively high farm prices.

I couldn't help but think the other night, and in a sense long for the good old days when the minister was at his fighting best. I can recall very well when his volatile self would explode into a strong defence of the indefensible, when the bean board could do no right and the minister could do no wrong and—

Mr. Renwick: He would even engage in partisan remarks.

Mr. Gaunt: Occasionally, yes; occasionally.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Oh he is getting pretty dull though.

Mr. Gaunt: Even the opposition parties would open up with two hour speeches. Those days—

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): You even asked for my resignation occasionally.

Mr. Gaunt: Those days are past, at least for the time being. Certainly—

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): They are past for the present.

Mr. Gaunt: Certainly on the latter point, because I don't intend to speak at any great length tonight, which I suppose is a reflection to a certain extent of the relative calm back on the farm.

That is not to say that there aren't any problems, because I think there are. I have made the statement in the past that increased farm income will not solve all of the problems, and I think that is true.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): It sure helps.

Mr. Gaunt: It certainly helped; there's no question.

Good prices certainly blunt the criticism. I would have to say that farmers today are relatively happy. Things are quiet on the farm front. Perhaps more noise has been heard from consumers in the past few months than from farmers. Because of that, I thought for a few moments I would talk about that particular aspect and, in essence, defend the farmers and the food system.

The federal minister has been doing this quite well, and I feel our minister here in Ontario should be doing more of this than has been the case.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Right!

Mr. Gaunt: I feel the minister here has been rather silent on these points. I refer also to the point raised this afternoon by my leader in respect to the increase of 43 per cent in net farm income. I think that figure is dreadfully misleading and the Minister of Agriculture and Food should issue forth with a statement giving his view, as the minister did this afternoon, of that particular figure. Because when one is at a very low level, an increase of 43 per cent really doesn't mean all that much in terms of the actual dollars. It's the same old case, if you start off with zero and you have a 43 per cent increase you still really haven't caught up.

First of all, I want to say I'm not particularly happy with the prices review board in Ottawa.

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Government Services): If you start off with zero, no matter how much it goes up, it is still zero.

Mr. Gaunt: Yes, it's still zero; that's right! The only thing is the farmers didn't start off with zero. There were some figures there all right.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Some are less than zero.

Mr. Gaunt: But the point is the increase at the farm level isn't as great as it should be, and it's got to rise even higher. I'll get to that anyway.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Right; I agree.

Mr. Gaunt: The prices review board in Ottawa, in my view, was a device which convicted the entire food system without, really, any evidence. I think the way the particular committee was set up it was bound to breed suspicion of food prices and distrust of the food system. A villain had to be found and so the whole system is seen to share the guilt.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That is a little phoney.

Mr. Gaunt: I think that the public didn't miss that point, though, because I notice the Toronto Star in an editorial dated Wednesday, March 28, said: "No Villain Behind Food Prices." I think that's a very good editorial, and it indicates that people generally are well aware there is really no villain behind the food price increases.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): With respect, that is nonsense!

Mr. Gaunt: Well, you can make your speech.

Mr. MacDonald: I shall.

Mr. Gaunt: I'm making mine.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A good one, too; a very good one!

Mr. MacDonald: They published an article of mine indicating where some of the villains were. At least that showed some second thoughts on their part.

Mr. Gaunt: I notice the farm critic of the NDP made a speech a while back. It was reported in Farm and Country that the processors and the packers and so on were the villains in the food system. I think to a certain extent, in the past, perhaps they have been. But to say as a blanket statement, that they're the cause of rising food prices is indeed, to put it kindly, inaccurate.

In any case, I want just to quote the last paragraph of this particular editorial. It says:

Present food prices bear hard on the poor. Welfare allowances should be improved to offset them and minimum wages raised to help the working poor meet their grocery bills. But if the majority of Canadians consider value as well as prices, they will stop being outraged by the cost of food.

Rather, I think the farmers have to get their story across to the public and to the consumers, and in so doing defend the food system.

Consumers must be told plainly and clearly that food prices must keep pace with production, processing and retailing costs. If we don't do this, it will be grossly unfair to consumers. It leads consumers to believe prices can be reduced significantly, that better food values are just ahead and that a little protest can roll back the clock.

It is the ever-decreasing food cost in terms of hours of work which has made it possible for the average wage-earner to save more and more of his income for luxuries. Canadian consumers are spending less of their income on food now than ever before. We compare well with any nation in the world. In Canada, people spend about 19 per cent of their income on food. In Sweden, they spend 25 per cent; in France, 27.5; in Britain 23.7. The cost of food, particularly meat, is rising faster in those countries than it is in Canada. Canadians are fed the cheapest of any people in the world, with the possible exception of the US.

It is true that the farmer is getting more for his product than was the case a few months ago, but farmers have a lot of catching up to do by way of increased income. The prices at the farm gate are not excessive. Farmers will have to make money; otherwise they will turn to something else, or get out of farming altogether.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: What paper is that editorial in?

Mr. Gaunt: I'm not reading the editorial. I stopped reading the editorial a long time ago.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: These are his own views.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Sorry. Thank you.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: However, you are at liberty to quote them.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: They are good views, let me say.

Mr. Gaunt: Basically the situation is this: People have more disposable income than ever before. In addition, food prices are moving up all over the world because of increased demand caused by the population explosion and rising standards of living. Most pronounced is the increased demand for meat throughout the world. Agriculture and the food system account for 42 per cent of the economic activity in Canada. Theoretically, if Canadian farmers are forced to close up shop due to poor incomes, about half of the Canadian work force would be unemployed.

A look at income tax returns in recent years shows that, except for pensioners, farmers have the lowest average income. This shows the inequity of farm income. I notice that the Federation of Agriculture brief pointed up an example which I'm going to quote right now in that respect.

Nineteen seventy-two was a good one for farmers; 1973 has been a better one so far. Nineteen seventy-two was a record year for net income. What does it look like now? Well, it means that the average Ontario farmer received approximately $4,861 for his interest on his investment, family labour and management. The average construction worker in Ontario in 1972 earned approximately $10,000. In 1971, the average farmer in Ontario had an investment of approximately $80,000.

If he sold his farm and invested his money at seven per cent, which is less than Canada Savings Bonds, he could have earned $5,600. In other words he lost over $700 on his investment last year and received nothing for his labour. Let no one say the farmer is taking a ripoff. He's just catching up; indeed he's still not caught up by any means.

Undoubtedly the increased prices have caused hardship on lower income groups but surely farmers should not be expected to shoulder the entire welfare system by providing cheap food? That's what's been happening to a great extent.

However, that should be the responsibility of society generally and should be dealt with by governments which can redistribute wealth to the extent that lower income groups have enough money to buy food at higher prices.

I repeat, food in Canada is a good buy. Let's compare prices. Rump steak was $2.39 a lb in London, England, and Paris, France, in January this year; $3.90 a lb in Brussels. This is a reflection of the world-wide shortage of meat due to rising standards of living, hence a greater demand for meat. When living standards rise people turn to meat as their source of protein.

Western Europe is likely to have a beef deficit of one million tons by 1980. Meat production in Africa and Latin America has declined since 1950, remained steady in the Middle East and increased in the Far East. Nonetheless, food prices in other advanced countries have risen much faster than here.

Since 1970, in Great Britain, food prices have gone up by 27 per cent; in Ireland by 24 per cent; in Denmark by 22 per cent; in Sweden by close to 40 per cent; in France by 18 per cent; and in Canada by 10 per cent, with 5.5 points occurring over the past 10 months.

Since 1961 food prices have increased 41 per cent, housing 46 per cent, health 50 per cent and pharmaceuticals 100 per cent.

Canada and the United States have a commanding lead in agriculture. The demand for animal protein is rising rapidly. We have the resources, climate and skills to capitalize on the opportunities. Even with this the experts tell us that North American meat production will not be able to meet the demand, triggering—as it will—even higher prices.

This last year or so another factor has been crop shortages in several countries which collectively account for close to half the world's population, resulting in stronger demand for North American supplies.

I suggest that farm prices will have to remain at their current levels or go higher if we hope to reverse the trend of declining farm population.

Between 1966 and 1971 Ontario lost an average of 3,000 farmers per year. Ontario now has approximately 90,000. Higher prices for food today will ensure that we have food at reasonable prices in the future because it will encourage farmers to stay farming and young people to go into farming. If we can't persuade people to farm we won't have Canadian-grown food; it will be imported at high prices. We can't depend on farmers in other countries to feed us cheaply; they'll look after their own citizens first. Let's not make any mistake about that.

Higher incomes for farmers will allow them to modernize their operations, will allow for higher wages to farm help—and I'm coming to that a little later—all of which means that farmers will continue to produce adequate supplies of high quality, nutritious food if they are paid adequately for it.

The percentage of income spent on food cannot be expected to drop for a number of reasons.

1. Cheap virgin land that was fertile and easy to bring into production no longer exists.

2. The demand for food in the world is increasing and our world population is growing.

3. Over the years, new farm management practices and new varieties of crops have been introduced that have greatly increased efficiency and have permitted farmers to accept lower prices. Dramatic improvements are no longer likely.

4. Up to now, farmers have been willing to accept a lower standard of living; not so any longer. The farmer is not prepared to live in poverty, to see his children miss out on a good education, to be denied the good life.

5. Farmers have had access to cheap labour. That's no longer the case.

6. Everything the farmer buys keeps going up in price. There is no way the farmer can keep paying out more for these things he buys and still be expected to accept unchanging prices for his products.

7. People's eating habits have changed greatly; the swing to convenient food packaging has been dramatic but costs money.

8. Consumers are demanding the highest quality food—and rightly so—but this requires inspectors, graders, what have you, and these jobs all cost more money every day.

Prosperous agriculture means a prosperous Canada. Farmers use enormous quantities of manufactured goods. This means jobs for urban people. Give the farmer the wherewithal and he'll produce the food, but he has to be paid as well as the next man.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald: There's self-interest there.

Mr. Gaunt: Consumers should look on higher prices to farmers as an investment in the future.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): I hope the hon. member is not lamenting the fact there is no cheap labour around.

Mr. Gaunt: Higher prices will keep the farmer in business so that we all can eat reasonably tomorrow. Don't forget if farmers had passed their increased cost of production onto the consumer in the last 20 years, eggs would be $1.37 a dozen and chickens $1.35 a pound. And that's—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Then the steelworkers would be bellyaching.

An hon. member: Yes!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Then the UAW would want some action.

Mr. MacDonald: That is an interesting revelation of your basic political motivations.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Well, I'll just point out to you that your support for the union people sometimes doesn't extend as rationally, as it should, to all workers.

Mr. Stokes: You pretend to be the champion of the working man, yet you are lamenting the fact there is no cheap labour for the farmers.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please! The member for Huron-Bruce has the floor.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I didn't say that. I don't accept it.

Mr. Stokes: That's what your colleague said.

Mr. Gaunt: Sirloin steak, Mr. Chairman, would have been $2.08 in 1972 if it had gone up at the same rate as disposable income per person. Bacon would have been $2 a pound. Our food is still the best buy in the world. However the relative decline of food prices to wages and income has stopped.

There is an impression that a country without a sound, efficient, prosperous agriculture is lacking something irreplaceable. Agriculture is the most important industry we have and the family farm is the cornerstone of that industry. If we are to survive, there has to be a good future for both.

That, Mr. Chairman, is my defence of the food system. I want to turn now, for a moment, to the matter of farm labour. I think it is a very important matter and it's one which is going to be receiving increasing attention in the weeks and months ahead. I noticed last year alone that there were 1,100 dairy farmers who quit dairying. I am sure that not all of those people—I am sorry to point any fingers like that—but I am sure that all of those—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That's into Hansard now; don't mess up your Hansard.

Mr. Gaunt: —didn't quit because they were having a difficult time with farm labour. There were other reasons, I am sure. But a good many of those people quit because they couldn't get adequate help and labour on the farm. I noticed that in the Federation brief—I am going to refer—

Mr. Stokes: I thought they used machines.

Mr. Gaunt: Well, they have to have someone to—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That's a typical statement, eh? You thought they used machines.

Mr. Gaunt: Well, they have to have someone to drive the machines.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: You thought they roll over in bed and push the button.

Mr. Gaunt: There is a shortage of skilled and unskilled farm labour. There has been for a number of years, and I suggest to the minister that it is getting more critical all the time.

I think there are several fundamental reasons for the labour shortage. For example, there are the long hours that one has to spend on the farm, particularly in the summertime. If it's good weather, any good farmer wants to keep working from sunrise until sunset. Also, there is the fact that farm labour is not paid very well. The average farm worker got $1.78 per hour, I think, last year; so it's no wonder farm labour has become a rather difficult problem.

I do want to refer to the agricultural manpower services within the ministry. I think that Mr. Krauter and Mr. Bennett and all of those people who are working under their authority and direction are doing a good job.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: They are great fellows.

Mr. Gaunt: They are doing the best they can, but there are some factors here which really do not lend themselves to easy solution.

I notice that a table produced by the Federation of Agriculture compares the hourly wage of hired farm labour to that paid in other industries. I just want to refer to it briefly for the year 1972. For instance, in mining, $4.26; manufacturing, $3.49; construction, $4.93; laundries, cleaners and pressers, $1.99; hotel, restaurants and taverns, $2.09; and hired farm labour, $1.78.

This indicates the pay level of farm labour throughout the province.

The Federation of Agriculture made the presentation that as far as they were concerned they couldn't wait for the marketplace to provide a remedy to this situation. In their view there remained only one option if we were to keep our farm labour and that was subsidization by governments. As far as I am concerned, I think at this particular point in time that is really the only way out that I see until farmers start getting the price levels for their products that will allow them to pay the kind of wages which are comparable to those I just read off a few moments ago.

I think there was a resolution passed at the November convention dealing with this very matter, in which there was a call for the Ontario government to share in a programme of farmer-employer on-the-farm training for farm workers.

It seems to me that the Ontario government, perhaps in conjunction with the federal government, is going to have to move into this area and give it immediate attention, because I know the agricultural manpower services have been recruiting from England. I think the biggest source of farm labour has been coming from there, at least in past years. But the problem is that they get over here and they work on the farm for a year until they see what wages they can earn in the city and then they are gone; they take off. So at the very best this particular programme, in terms of permanency or full-time farm labour, is not adequate and it is certainly not filling the bill.

I believe the agricultural manpower services are performing a very useful and vital function with respect to the seasonal farm labourers. I know they do recruit from the Caribbean and various other parts. They have a system whereby they co-ordinate this effort with the Canada Manpower offices throughout the provinces, and I suppose even beyond, and I think they do an excellent job in that area. But they can't do the job in the area of the full-time farm labour because of the facts I have outlined; the low wages, long hours and so on.

So I think the minister is certainly going to have to move in and set up a system which in my view could operate on a similar basis to the retraining programme which is operated by the federal government, where a trainee can come into an industry and can get set up on a training programme and the federal government pays 75 per cent of his wage for a certain period of time during that training period. I think if that type of programme was looked at by the minister and by his government and implemented immediately it would do a lot to encourage farm labour to stay on the farm; and encourage people who are working elsewhere but who would like to work on the farm to move in and become labourers in this very important area.

That is about all I have to say by way of leadoff, Mr. Chairman. I do have a number of comments, of course, on the various votes, but in conclusion I just want to say to the minister that as far as agriculture is concerned, it is more closely integrated in the fabric of human society than any other activity. For many centuries agriculture was the industry par excellence. Something still remains of that erstwhile universal feeling, and that is why I am proud to say I am a farmer.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): That was the next Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. D. R. Timbrell (Don Mills): Another farmer really outstanding in his field!

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): Well, he's a young man!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, it is some six years since I—

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): He is giving the same speech as last time.

Mr. MacDonald: Does the member want the floor?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ruston: If the member has anything to say go ahead and say it.

Mr. MacDonald: Very good. I would have less difficulty saying it if the atmosphere weren't filled with idle noise, and that is what I was trying to call a halt to.

Mr. Sargent: Get to the point quickly!

Mr. MacDonald: I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, that it is about six years since I have had the privilege of being leadoff spokesman on behalf of the New Democratic Party on food and agriculture, and since it is one of my long-term legislative loves, I return to it with a great deal of pleasure tonight.

I must say in returning to it I find that not much has changed. Six years ago the Minister of Agriculture and Food was still in that seat; the hon. member for Huron-Bruce was lobbing shots at his bastion over there. Without too much impact, unfortunately!

Mr. Sargent: Look where you are!

Mr. MacDonald: So I'm going to join forces with him, at least on this side of the House, and see if we can't get a little more reasonable and effective approach to the problems of Agriculture and Food.

The important aspect of this ministry, which brings everybody into it including the city slicker and the member for York South, is that we may not all be farmers but we all have a rather fond attachment to food at least three times a day. As I look at some of my colleagues around here, obviously it is more often than three times a day.

Mr. Sargent: I am on a diet.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: We are cutting right back.

Mr. MacDonald: What I want to do, Mr. Chairman, in my introductory remarks, is to give something of an overview because, along with the hon. member for Huron-Bruce, there are many aspects on individual estimates which we will get down to as part of the nitty-gritty in the next day or week, or however long it takes to complete these estimates.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Maybe tonight!

Mr. MacDonald: Agriculture is enjoying a period of buoyancy; nobody can deny that. The only thing that disturbs me when the minister led off on these estimates was that he indulged in what, may I kindly say, was a bit of political rhetoric.

I can understand how for years he has been trying to lead the farmers, or feel that the farmers were going to move into the promised land of fuller acknowledgement of their contribution to the overall economy; and now that they are getting something approaching that fuller contribution, he was in the mood of uncritical ecstasy. In fact his comment was: "I have always said that there would come a time when the farmer would really come into his own because of the need for food production; that time, in my humble opinion, has arrived."

Well Mr. Minister, at best that is a half-truth. And in fact the current situation at the moment proves how much it is a half-truth. It may be that society is getting some appreciation of the role of farmers in society and in the economy; but the problem is that an appreciation of the farmers' role is so bedeviled by basic misconceptions that I am not as optimistic that even the propaganda value of recognizing the farmers' role has been achieved—to say nothing of recognizing some of the grim, hard realities, which really haven't changed in spite of his better income position at the moment.

And the best proof of it, quite frankly, is in a point that was dealt with in an exchange of questions this afternoon. I happened to be driving in my car a few days ago and listened to radio broadcasts on the half-hour, if not on the hour, about the farmers getting a 40 per cent increase in their profits last year.

Well, I just don't understand how any group of statisticians in Ottawa, or anywhere, would come to such a gross misrepresentation of the picture as to put on the airwaves and in the media across this country that farmers are getting a 40 per cent increase in their profits.

I agree with the hon. member for Huron-Bruce; I don't know why the hon. minister—who has the capacity to get up on the political podium and scream from the rooftops—wasn't on his podium as quickly as those newscasts started coming across.

Anybody who knows anything about agriculture knows that the 40 per cent increase was net income. And for most farmers—other than the few who may have incorporated and deducted a wage for themselves before they came to a so-called net profit position—that cannot be described, even loosely as profit. Because what you have got to deduct from that 40 per cent increase is some sort of a wage for the farmer; and indeed in many instances for some members of his family. In addition, if you are going to be business-like in your approach, you have got to deduct a fair return for his capital investment. If we accept the figures of the OFA that the average farm income investment is $80,000 and that today the average legitimate income from that would be seven per cent, that's $5,600. What do they now say is the average net income of farmers—$4,800, $5,000, $5,500?

Mr. Gaunt: It is $4,800.

Mr. MacDonald: That was last year, $4,800. I don't think that includes the 40 per cent increase this year. If you were to deduct that, to say nothing about a fair living wage for the farmer—

Mr. Sargent: They spend more in gasoline allowance than that.

Mr. MacDonald: If you were to deduct a fair return on his capital, as is done for any other businessman, he would have earned nothing—in fact minus $800. For the media and the whole establishment, including this minister, to tolerate that kind of proposition for one moment without the minister raising his voice, I find a bit intolerable. Yet that's what happened only a week ago.

I am sorry I can't share the minister's optimism that the farmers have suddenly emerged in the promised land. The farmers have the same old difficulty. Indeed, the proof of it is in another little clipping, which didn't get the coverage on all of the airwaves, and perhaps we should take a look at it.

A Canadian Press despatch on May 29, about a week ago, said:

The cost of operating a farm jumped 6.1 per cent in the first three months of this year, Statistics Canada reports. By comparison, food prices rose 3.5 per cent in the same period.

In short, the cost of producing the food was up twice as much in the first three months of this year as the cost of the food to the consumer.

If you wanted further evidence of the old, traditional, grinding cost-price squeeze which has kept farmers down for years, it is still there; there's the evidence.

So why the Minister of Agriculture and Food for one fleeting moment would get up and kid himself or anybody else that the farmers have arrived at anything like a fleeting glimpse of the promised land, I don't know. Clearly, when this impact comes into play, the impact of these rising costs, the farmer's position isn't going to be any better; it may be infinitely worse. The sources of that 6.1 per cent increase in costs in the first three months of this year—6.1 per cent in three months—are an 18 per cent increase in livestock feed—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Soya bean feed!

Mr. MacDonald: —a 15 per cent increase in feeder cattle and a 31 per cent increase in seed.

The soya bean is part of the whole factor, I suppose, in livestock feed. But it is those kinds of increases that have produced an overall increase in farm production costs of 6.1 per cent. By the time we get to July 1, or the first of next year, and we take a look at the cost-price squeeze that farmers are in, we won't be able to conclude that their position is any better. Their costs are running ahead of their increases in income on the basis of that evidence.

I want to pause there and create a context in which my remarks, whatever I may say tonight or later during the estimates, should be put. This is the other point I want to put to the minister when he has a tendency, after all of these years of frustration in trying to lead the farmers into the promised land to think he has got them there; because in fact they are not! There are four basic facts of which I think every member of this House and every citizen who is buying food should be aware.

The first one is this: The food industry today is the biggest industry in Canada; but what certain people tend to get out of perspective is that agriculture today represents only 20 per cent of the food industry, and no more. The rest of it is made up of transportation costs, storage, retailers, processors and all of that infinitely growing group of middlemen who are cutting into the consumer's dollar while the farmer gets relatively little. Packaging is likely another item I could have included in that list.

That's point one. Agriculture today represents only 20 per cent of the food industry.

The second point: During the last 20 years, the farmer's share of the consumer's dollar has dropped from just under 60 cents to under 40 cents. One gets varying figures. I noticed some figures from Ottawa the other day; they were 37 cents. I noticed some figures from the United States where they said that the farmer's share was 32 cents and the rest of the food industry was getting 68 cents. So one can assume that what the farmer is getting is in the range of 35 to 40 cents of the consumer's dollar.

However, I come to point three, which is the important point. When you talk about the farmer's share of the consumer's dollar, that's his gross income—not his net income. You've got to deduct from that all of his rising costs of production—costs of production that are rising even faster now than during the last 10 or 15 years. And in Canada the farmer's share of the consumer's dollar in terms of net income is 11 cents. That's the national figure.

I come to point four. The Ontario farmer's share of the consumer's dollar is only 8½ cents, because much of the production of food in the Province of Ontario requires much more processing than, for example, is required for the production of cereals on the Prairies. So the Ontario farmer's share in terms of net income of the consumer's dollar is 8½ cents as compared with the 11 cents for the whole of the country.

When one takes a look at those four basic facts, one gets a perspective for assessing agriculture and a perspective for taking a look at the long-term, continuing problems of the farmer. They haven't altered. With these recent figures detailing the increasing cost of production, I would suggest that they may even be getting worse.

Mr. Chairman, there is really a simple solution to the problem of the farmers. When I get simplistic in my approach to a very complex problem I like to present this. In the last year food prices have gone up 13 per cent. That means almost three times during the year the food dollar has grown to $1.05. You have to pay an extra nickel to get the same amount of food.

If the next time the consumer's food dollar went from $1 to $1.05 that extra five cents could go to the farmer in the Province of Ontario, his returns would jump from 8½ cents to 13½ cents—about a 60 per cent increase. It would be absolutely unbelievable. A genuine 60 per cent increase in his net income.

And I come back to a point on which I have almost quit griping, because I can't get anywhere; either with the minister or with the former members of the farm income committee. They copped out on the proposition of incentive incomes. The whole concept of incentive incomes which provoked the establishment of the farm income committee back in 1966, at a time when you had some unity on the farm front between the federation and the farm union, was the proposition that if you had incentive incomes, assuring the farmers what they were entitled to because of their labour, because of their investment, because of everything that they contributed, then you would keep farmers in the game instead of having them move out of it in ever increasing numbers.

But the farm income committee came to the conclusion that you can't do it within one province if you are not doing it nationally, or that it was a very complex problem and you couldn't work it out; they copped out completely on the proposition of incentive incomes for farmers.

Some day I hope we can get back to that. Quite frankly, if you got back to that and faced up to the problem of creating the mechanism for establishing it, then you would say the next time the consumer's dollar goes from $1 to $1.05 that extra five cents is going to go right back to the farmer and not be strained through the infinite number of middle men so that the farmer gets little of it, if anything at all. That would really increase his income until, Mr. Minister, he would then be in the promised land; and I'd join him on the political podium and proclaim it. But he is certainly not there yet.

Just let me again, to complete the context in which I want to make my remarks tonight, pick on some of the comments of the hon. member for Huron-Bruce. I agree with the hon. member for Huron-Bruce, and Gene Whelan and anybody else making the comment today—and I also agree with the hon. member for Huron-Bruce that it's time the minister was making similar comments that farm productivity has increased more than any other industry in this country, and therefore the prattle one sometimes gets from the Globe and Mail editorial writers, or from so-called farm consultants of the Royal Bank, about the inefficiency of the farmers is irrelevant. There may be some farmers who are inefficient. There are some MPPs who are inefficient. Name a group which hasn't got some inefficient members in it. But overall, the agricultural industry has been phenomenally efficient. That's point one.

Secondly, I would agree that the Canadian consumer, relatively speaking, compared with the consumer in Britain or France or Europe or any place in the world, is getting a fair deal for his dollar. He's getting more food for the dollar earned. But where I part company with the hon. member for Huron-Bruce—and Gene Whelan, and all the rest of them—is that there's a tendency to lump the whole of the food industry and say they're all doing a magnificent job and there are no villains. Mr. Chairman, hogwash!—and that's an appropriate comment in the text of these estimates—there are villains.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Tell them what David Archer said.

Mr. MacDonald: I will before it's all over, I will; you wait.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Read David Archer's views into the record.

Mr. MacDonald: It's a cop-out to say there are no villains.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He is a well-known farmer.

Mr. MacDonald: And I suggest to the hon. member for Huron-Bruce and anybody else who peddles that line, that to try to defend the farmers getting a fair return now by ignoring the fact that there are some people in the food industry engaging in a ripoff, is no service to the farmers or the food industry or anybody else.

Before I'm finished with these estimates I want to say a little bit about the kind of attitude that you find, for example, in the Ontario Food Council; the idea that the food industry in this country is absolutely magnificent and beyond criticism. That is nonsense.

The food industry, as we see it in retail stores today, is a symbol of a kind of gimmickry, and deceit of the consumer, and wastage, that comes very close to being obscene. There's no need for defending all that as you seek to defend a fair return to the farmers, because when you come to the proposition of a fair return to the farmers I'll take a back seat to none of you in doing battle on that issue.

Let me digress from the Ontario scene for a moment, Mr. Chairman. I want your forbearance if you think I'm departing from the Ontario estimates, because I'm going to get back to the Ontario estimates with a pretty strong message as to what we should be doing here. But I think we've got to take a look at it in the context of what's happening elsewhere.

A very interesting thing happened last fall. When the federal election was over and we had a minority government in Ottawa, you had a situation in which it became necessary for the government, and everybody else—since nobody had an exclusive control of power—to come to grips with some of the urgent problems. Whatever your or my or anybody else's estimate may be as to the causes for the switch in votes in the last election, the post election as well as the pre-election assessment indicated that what worried people more than anything else was the problem of prices. And top on the list, within the totality of the problem of prices, was food prices. Just as back in the 1930s governments finally had no alternative but to face up to the fact that if you had massive unemployment you couldn't wash your hands of responsibility, that governments must accept some responsibility for it, it's interesting that 35 years later, in the 1970s, we have finally reached the stage where governments at least are now willing to pay lip service to accepting an obligation for coping with excessive prices.

I have my deep reservations as to how far the Trudeau government or a Stanfield government or the Davis government would go in coming to grips with this, but at least they now have to pay lip service to it, because it is a matter of widespread and growing concern among the public. The result was that a committee was set up to look into the whole question of the trend in food prices.

It was a pretty frustrating experience. I was interested in the comment from the hon. member for Huron-Bruce with regard to it—that the committee convicted the entire food industry, and therefore he concluded there were no villains.

I would agree it was a slapdash, hit and miss operation in which you got conflicting evidence. There was neither the basic information nor the willingness nor capacity on the part of the committee to adjudicate between this conflicting evidence.

That is something we have to get around to some time. If a court with one witness comes in with one bit of evidence and another witness comes in with contradictory evidence, the function and the role of the court is to adjudicate between the conflicting evidence and to find out where the truth lies. We haven't got around to that on the question of where the responsibility is for the increasing food prices. All we have is a growing mass of conflicting information, with everybody blaming the other guy.

What really exasperates me is that on occasion during the last three or four months I have seen CBC panels on which they would have a food processor, a farmer who is producing the beef and somebody else. They would all end up with the same sort of results; all blaming everybody else. Then they all copped out, like the hon. member for Huron-Bruce copped out tonight, by saying in fact there are no villains, we are all good fellows.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: You are finding the villains who don't have any votes.

Mr. MacDonald: What do you mean by that?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The middleman, the so-called middleman.

Mr. MacDonald: You are suggesting the only reason I am accusing them of being the villains is because they don't have any votes?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That is one of the reasons.

Mr. MacDonald: That is about the normal par for the perception of a Liberal interjection.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Do you believe that eggs ought to be 40 cents a dozen and milk 25 cents a quart?

Mr. MacDonald: Nonsense!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Then let's see you call for higher prices!

Mr. MacDonald: We will get around to dealing with that.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Oh yes, as soon as you read David Archer's views.

Mr. MacDonald: We have obviously got you exercised.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): In fact, you are increasingly exercised these days.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I am interested in what you have to say.

Mr. Ruston: Anxiously waiting!

Mr. MacDonald: As a matter of fact, since you joined the 1,100 farmers who have got out of dairying, you have nothing else to do but get exercised on issues like this.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The member for York South has the floor.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I do a lot of exercising on the farm. I don't spread it all here like you do.

Mr. Sargent: Old MacDonald had a farm!

Mr. Lewis: I don't think that has anything to do with the agricultural estimates. I think it has to do with the member for York Centre (Mr. Deacon).

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Tell us about the middleman and how all the money is sopped up by the middleman like David Archer said.

Mr. Sargent: Let farmer MacDonald talk.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Old MacDonald!

Mr. Lewis: You stop at slander.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the net results of this rather frustrating exercise in Ottawa is that the Liberals were persuaded, because they had no alternative under the existing political circumstances, to set up a prices review board. I don't want rather forcefully to remind you what party has been arguing that a prices review board has a legitimate role for quite some years, whether in the food field or preferably in the broader field, but you have to make a start somewhere and the food field is a good place to start. Of course, it has been the New Democratic Party.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Do you include wages?

Mr. MacDonald: Having said that, Mr. Chairman, just let me add one or two points. I have no illusions as to the limitations of a prices review board. I understand and I share the farmers' apprehensions about setting up a prices review board in the area of food alone. What you are going to do is to isolate food price increases and try to fix responsibility. There is danger of forgetting the rest of the picture, including the costs of production for the farmers, which range beyond the food price itself. I share that apprehension; but I think one can guard against it.

I would agree to a minor, fleeting degree with the contention of the Tory party in Ottawa that it would be better to have a prices review board that was taking a look at the broad spectrum rather than focussing on food. But that's just their excuse for copping out on anything, including food. Their alternative, which apparently nobody including this Tory government is in favour of, is a price and wages freeze across the board.

It's really a bit mind-boggling to have a party that wouldn't intervene at all in the economy—that believed it was the God-given right of everybody in economy to do as he pleased—suddenly do a backflip because they think it's politically the thing to do at this time and they want to have a wage and a price freeze across the board.

Mr. Sargent: It is the same speech you gave last year.

Mr. MacDonald: You weren't here for it last year.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I was here for it six years ago.

Mr. J. M. Turner (Peterborough): It will be the same next year, too.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): It always seems like last year's speech.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Very good, though, Donald.

Mr. Stokes: The truth hurts, Donald.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, it's obvious that when the capacity to absorb a few new ideas is so small that it begins running over; they can't grasp any more; they run out rather early.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: These are new ideas?

Mr. MacDonald: They run out rather early, whether it be with the rump here or over among the Liberals.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The new idea is that the Conservatives and the Liberals are bad and the NDP is good.

Mr. MacDonald: I think that there is a legitimate area for a government to move in, and I trust that the government in Ottawa is going to move in with some vigour in reviewing the prices; precisely because I think it is time we began to get some body of facts with regard to the infinite complexity of the food industry.

I repeat: This may be a long journey we are starting on; but it's better to take the first step in that long journey, because the people of the country are interested in what is happening in the whole pricing of food. The first step may legitimately be taken in this area. One can take it without getting caught in some sort of a squeeze that's going to penalize the farmers and try to fix the blame on them for rising food prices.

In fact my conviction is that if you really look into the picture and get the full range of the details, you will discover rather quickly that it isn't the farmer, it's some of the other middlemen.

For whatever reason, a variety of people—some of them within earshot of myself at the moment—don't really want to do that. They don't really want to get at these facts in case they come up with some measure of truth as to what the situation is.

Mr. Stokes: The Liberal philosophy is that the consumer isn't paying enough. That is what they are saying.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: And the NDP philosophy is that eggs are all right at 30 cents.

Mr. MacDonald: No, no!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Milk at 25 cents, and there is still money in it for farmers.

Mr. Stokes: No, you are being ridiculous.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: You can't have it both ways.

Mr. Stokes: You are being ridiculous.

Mr. Ruston: You want eggs at 30 cents a dozen.

Mr. Stokes: No, no. You are being ridiculous.

Mr. MacDonald: Have I got the floor still, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Give the Minister of Agriculture and Food the jabs for a while.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Bob, we want eggs at 30 cents, but the farmers to get 35 cents.

Mr. MacDonald: Just before I leave this, Mr. Chairman, I want to list five or six reasons why I think a prices review board to examine certain of the most flagrant aspects of the situation within the food industry is preferable to the straitjacket of a price freeze.

Again I remind you that I am raising this because I want to come back to a counterpart of it at which I think we've got to take a look at the provincial level. At the moment, with all of these interruptions you may have missed the theme that I was trying to establish. That is a broader picture within which we ultimately are going to fit.

I think there are five or six reasons why a prices review board, even if restricted to the food field, has validity. One is that it provides an opportunity for a selective approach that enables a swift and a searching examination of the specific areas of the food industry where corrective action might quickly and fairly be taken.

Secondly, it doesn't punish the fair dealer nor the ordinary wage earner as across the board controls would do.

Thirdly, it doesn't freeze and thereby legitimize existing inequities. That's the great folly of a price freeze such as the federal Tory party is seeking at the present time.

Fourthly, by forcing public disclosures of pricing policy and making an example where necessary of specific instances or elements in the food industry, the prices review board can break through the attitude of helplessness so many share in dealing with this difficult problem. It is a helplessness that many people use as an excuse for copping out and saying: "Let's accept it because there's nobody really to blame."

If any firm in the food industry knows that it will be exposed, and conceivably regulated if it tries to gouge the public, it's far less likely to try. That's why there is value in having this kind of a watchdog on the scene, so to speak. We in the New Democratic Party feel that strong action arising from the work of a review board can, in a relatively short time, stabilize some of the excessive increases that we have seen in recent months.

Fifthly, it avoids the buildup of the kind of choking bureaucracy which an across-the-board freeze and controls would require.

Sixthly, it constitutes action while a freeze constitutes only a postponement of action. The obvious question that many people ask themselves is, if you put a freeze on now and keep it for six months or a year or for two years, and then you take it off; what's going to happen then? You haven't really corrected the situation; you've just arrested it. When you take it off the prices, with the pressure that has built up in the interval, will likely take off for the heavens even more than before.

I think all of those reasons add up to a very valid conclusion—that a prices review board is a much more effective, sensible and reasonable approach than an attempt to freeze.

However, let's now come back to the Ontario scene and take a look at what we might and should do in the Province of Ontario.

A few months ago I was rather interested to discover—although a little shamefaced, to be frank with you—that along with the farm income report which was published in January, 1969 or 1970 if I recall correctly, there were a number of research reports. One of them in research report No. 14, entitled "Wholesaling and Retailing of Food in Ontario." It was written by three people, according to the listing here. One of them, J. H. Weijs, I understand at one point was on the staff of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food; he subsequently went to Hedlin Menzies and now, I understand, is with a private operation. Another was William Janssen who, the minister will be interested to know, if he doesn't know now, is the head of the policy secretariat of the Department of Agriculture in Manitoba. He's continued with some of the bright ideas he wrote of in this report. The third was Diane Kennedy, who I understand was a postgraduate student.

This is not only an interesting report, but in my view is one of the best things that exists in the Province of Ontario. To my knowledge, there has been no particular attention paid to it.

On page 23, it makes a point which I think is maybe an appropriate starting point. They draw a parallel between Canada and the United States and point out, if I may quote briefly: "In the United States the National Commission on Food Marketing published, in 1966, detailed estimates of the cost components which account for the spread between the farm and the retail prices.⁴

Just in case you didn't get that while you were rubbing your eyes, Mr. Chairman, I want to repeat it. "It detailed estimates of the cost components which accounted for the spread between the farm and the retail prices. In Canada no such detailed studies have ever been considered." And that, I want to submit to the minister, is the main burden of my remarks tonight. We're back at square one. We've got a job to do and we haven't even started to tackle it.

Since agriculture is only 20 per cent of the food industry, when you get into the food industry you have to contend with all these other components. We don't know what they contribute to the cost of food. We've no basic information.

I've talked with your economics branch. I'm always a little hard put to know what one should report of private talks with civil servants; I don't want to get them into a compromised position, but I think it's factual, I'm only stating a fact. There has been some study done of this kind of price spread between the farm and the consumer at varying times over the last few years, but it has been in relation to an ad hoc problem when it arose, and there has been no continuing study. We have no detailed information.

The committee in Ottawa made a start on the job. Now they are going to continue. The prices review board in food is going to make some sort of a start on the job.

It is fascinating to discover that when John Young was riding rough herd on the Canadian economy through the so-called Prices and Income Commission for a number of years, they never got around to taking a look at food. This whole area has been completely neglected, and neither this minister or this ministry or the federal government at Ottawa, or anybody in Canada, has any detailed information with regard to the infinite number of components that make up the cost between what the farmer gets at the gate and what ultimately the consumer has to pay.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Only David Archer!

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I'll get to David Archer. I'll put it on the record. The hon. member seems to have a one-track mind tonight. It is out of the gutter back in the dairy barn, but it is obsessed with one thing now.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Let's forget about David Archer for a moment. The Liberals live with obsessions. Their whole motivation in politics is a reaction to something.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I know what the hon. member's motivation is.

Mr. MacDonald: Sure! I can tell the hon. member what it is.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: With David Archer's help! Let's hear what he says about food costs.

Mr. MacDonald: We are going to get to that.

I made a reference to the National Commission on Food Marketing. Back in 1964 when President Johnson was in power in the United States they set up this commission. It is made up of five members from the Senate, five members from the House of Representatives and five members from the public. They spent two years doing a very detailed analysis of the whole food industry. And that detailed analysis, which is in the "Food from Farmer to Consumer Report," was backed up by 10 different technical studies, one of which I have here; and I invite hon. members who are interested in this to take a look at it.

This copy is from the Legislative Library. "The Cost Components of the Farm-Retail Price Spreads for Food." What they did was analyse the major components of the so-called statistical food basket. Quite frankly, I don't know whether the United States has kept this information up to date. It is fascinating, when you read the report of this National Commission on Food Marketing, that they went through all of the same kind of exercise we have experienced in Canada. The majority of them found villains, and they named the villains. And I will give you some quotes to suggest who they thought the villains were.

But there was a minority, a militant group of Republicans and Democrats, the real moss-backs, who spent their time being critical of the majority and saying that the food industry was magnificent—one of the most efficient industries in the country. They washed their hands of trying to find where the villain might be in the picture and where they might improve it.

So they went through the same sort of an exercise as we are going through in Canada. The only difference was that in the United States the majority of them recognized that perhaps there were some villains and they drew attention to them.

Mr. J. Riddell (Huron): They are digging the villains out now, but it is not in connection with food.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member is right!

However, let me come back to Ontario. I'd like to put it on the record, just so the hon. Leader of the Opposition and the minister might not come to the conclusion that I was talking wholly in terms of quotes from Dave Archer and the recent publications of the OFL.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I understand we are going to get to that.

Mr. MacDonald: I will just skip through a number of pages here on this research report, "Wholesaling and Retailing of Food in Ontario," which was prepared for the special committee on farm income by a former member of this ministry and a bright young man who has since gone on to greener fields.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: What about the research assistant?

Mr. MacDonald: To quote from the report on page 2:

The approach to the analyses used in this report rejects the view that the performance of the market system is somehow pre-ordained, that the outcome, as the natural results of the market forces of supply and demand, is within narrow limits the only possible outcome. The view taken here is that the marketing system is not an impersonal, passive, neutral intermediary between producers and ultimate consumers, but rather consists of firms with objectives that are not automatically and completely consistent with the interests of the producers and the consumers.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: There must be a profit motive. Good heavens!

Mr. MacDonald: In other words, that there may conceivably be some villains! And so they seek them!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: There might even be some profit.

Mr. MacDonald: They then pointed out, for example, that 60 per cent of the retail food market in Ontario—and I remind you this is for the year 1968-1969 when this document was prepared—60 per cent of the food market was in the three or four big chains; another 34 per cent of it was in the so-called chain bringing together the independent retailers, the whole ICA-M. Loeb setup. So you have in excess of 90 per cent of the retailing of food in the hands of a very few people. One of the conclusions that came out of the National Commission on Food Marketing in the United States was a tentative conclusion—namely, that the consequences of this very intensive concentration of power, particularly at the retail level, were almost inestimable at that stage, back in 1966, but they were clearly having a very, very great impact.

This report isn't quite so hesitant. They go on to point out some of the practices of these retailers. This quotation, for example: "Competition among supermarkets has taken on a form that is essentially different from price competition."

They refer to advertising, which is one of the major gimmicks on which they spend so much money. One of the major elements of supermarketing today is their lavish advertising programmes, and their comment, quoted from another source, was: "For larger scale advertising to work, the buyer must be only partially informed about the nature of what he is buying and the product must be complex enough so that the precise evaluation is not possible. These conditions are perfectly met by grocery retailers." In short, the function of advertising isn't to inform the consumer, it is deliberately to confuse the consumer so that he won't know what the overall picture is.

Then they go on, on pages 13 and 14, to point out that: "It is commonly accepted that the price of an item bears some definite relationship to its cost, as it would if any standard markup employed. This is no longer valid for items sold in the supermarkets." And they elaborate at some detail as to how in the supermarket you have your so-called loss leaders, where they will have a deliberately low price to bring the people in, with a calculated increase in the price of other products to be able to rip off there and compensate—indeed more than compensate—for the loss leader they happened to have for that day.

Says this research study, produced for the minister's own farm income committee: "If they"—the supermarkets—"were to operate with set price lists, consumers would have the opportunity of making comparisons over extended periods of time and of discovering the stores which for their particular needs were most economical." But of course the purpose of advertising is deliberately to confuse that, because they change their loss leaders so that you never know which is the store in which you might best do your shopping.

They comment on page 15: "The best price mix for a store would be a minimum of strategic items at lower prices to attract the customers and a maximum of higher priced items to increase the profits."

You know, it is a magnificent philosophy. It is deceiving the public and then skinning them after they have been deceived. That is the whole function of their advertising; documented by your own studies, not by others.

They go on to point out how you can distort the whole market. If a supermarket insists on using, for example beef as a loss leader for a time, you distort the whole relationship between that and other meat products. If this is continued for any great length of time, it is going to eventually have an impact upon the producer, who is forced to shift to producing something else; when really he is reacting to a market which is rigged. It is not a market operating in accordance with the mythical law of supply and demand, that is acting in a divinely ordained way; it is something that is manipulated by the people who are running the supermarkets.

Now my point, Mr. Chairman, is this—I think it is time that we came to some conclusion on this, which is only one of literally a thousand different aspects of the infinitely complex food industry on which we have got to gather the facts six or eight months from now, after we have got those facts I don't want to see a farmer on a panel with a food processor and a supermarket man, with the farmer making excuses for the supermarket. Quite frankly when he does this he is not doing any service to the farmers. When I talk to the farmers they have no doubts that the supermarket is one of the villains in the piece. And yet too often farm spokesmen don't emphasize that.

Since the Leader of the Opposition has gone out and he won't be exercised by it, I just want to draw attention to one or two points that have been set down in this "Food for Thought" produced by the research department of the Ontario Federation of Labour. I don't think the Ontario Federation of Labour lays any claim to this being a definitive document. The problem is that nobody has the basic facts at the moment to come up with a definitive document. But it is a useful accumulation of information that relates to the Canadian scene. Let me, Mr. Chairman, read you one paragraph:

On January 27, 1973, one housewife's bill at a Toronto chain store totalled $21.08. The primary producer's share of this amounted to a mere $7.72.

A Saskatchewan farmer received three cents for the wheat in a loaf of bread selling at 37 cents. A Bradford market—

Where is our friend from Bradford? He's out looking after the energy problem tonight?

A Bradford market gardener was paid three cents for carrots, requiring virtually no processing, that sold for 13 cents.

A St. Catharines fruit farmer picked up 7.7 cents for canned peaches stamped at 39 cents.

Now there are Canadian examples of price spreads. I'll be brutally frank with you: I don't know how the OFL got those figures, because I have been trying to get them, and I have been trying to find people in the agricultural field who could get them. But nobody has the information to document them.

I'll tell you where they got them. They got them from an article in the Toronto Star by Pat McNenly, an article that the minister was very proud of because it said the things he wanted to hear. Perhaps the minister will be willing to accept these figures.

But my point is that it is time we tried to document them. If you take a look at the American report of the National Commission on Food Marketing, points out that the farmers' share of the consumer dollar is roughly 37 to 38 cents across the board. It ranges, believe it or not, from butter for which farmers get 71 cents of the consumers' dollar, to canned beets for which farmers get seven cents of the consumers' dollar.

We've sometimes heard the comment that the label on the can costs more now, certainly the can itself costs more than the contents of the can; that kind of a problem. We have got to get some facts on this kind of a problem.

What the OFL was doing was reproducing something that had been researched by an enterprising journalist who came up with a story which on balance, was a good story. But I don't think we have any documentation as to whether that is really the case.

However, there are a few other important points here, Mr. Chairman. I quote from the OFL study:

Evidence was presented to an anti-trust committee in the United States in 1969, chaired by Senator Phillip Hart, and it showed that of $780 billion spent by US consumers in 1969, about $200 billion, more than 25 per cent, purchased, absolutely nothing of real value.

And their comment is that this astronomical sum was accredited to "monopoly price gouging." That will arouse the leader of the Liberal Party again.

Deceptive packaging—

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): He needs something to arouse him after listening to you.

Mr. MacDonald: He does, you are right!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Don't say that!

Mr. MacDonald: "Phoney advertising; promotional gimmicks; excessive markups between the producers and users; worthless beauty aids; useless drugs; short weighting—and all the other excesses of modern marketing."

Another study by the US Federal Trade Commission adduced that:

Consumers were fleeced of about $15 billion a year by management inefficiency and monopoly and oligopolistic pricing in 100 manufacturing industries.

Now for those of you who may dismiss that as nonsense, I ask you to go back and read the comments of Bob Macaulay when he was the man who was trying—well if I can quote Bob directly: "Get the businessmen of Ontario up off their butts to fight for world markets instead of making excuses about their inefficiency back home" and so on—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Wasn't that Stan Randall?

Mr. MacDonald: No; that was Bob Macaulay.

Mr. Shulman: They both went to the same rest.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Sounds like Stan—what is his name—Randall?

Mr. MacDonald: However, Mr. Chairman, let me get this translated into Ontario terms. Here is the usefulness of the OFL documents. Divided by the customary Canadian-USA population factor of 10 per cent, overcharging ferretted out by Senator Hart's committee averages $543 for every man, woman and child in Canada. For the average Canadian family, this is almost $2,000 a year of money spent that adds nothing to the value of the product.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Was that sufficient reason to support the beef boycott?

Mr. MacDonald: They didn't support the beef boycott.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: CUPE did. Isn't that part of the OFL?

Mr. MacDonald: Your simplistic approach to a complicated scene, whether it's on the—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Well, it's factual.

Mr. MacDonald: —labour front or the farm front, gets you into difficulties.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: You don't understand the labour movement.

An hon. member: You just don't understand it.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: You've just got to remember that the farmers get information other than just what you feed them. They realize it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: And the kind of support they got.

Mr. Stokes: They really supported you, didn't they?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Sure they did. In Huron county they didn't support the NDP; you didn't even come third.

Mr. MacDonald: However, let me come back home again, Mr. Chairman, because I know you are more interested in Ontario affairs.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Stokes: Pretty slim!

Mr. MacDonald: I thought the hon. member from Huron-Bruce led off in these estimates, but either the leader doesn't think it was a good enough lead-off or he's got to get into this; because he's trying to usurp the time here.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: No, no, I just can't let you get away with this; trying to make your argument on both sides of the fence.

Mr. MacDonald: The report of the royal commission on consumer problems and inflation on the prairies—another part of this country, but at least it is part of the country where they did some studying of the situation back in 1966 and 1967—exposed other hidden costs that pop out of hiding and onto the price tags. The report said, and I quote:

There are twice as many stores and twice as much floor space as can be justified on the grounds of efficiency. Advertising in the five surveyed cities is noticeably higher than elsewhere. From the point of view of society, advertising involves a clear and substantial cost to produce uncertain benefit. Chains have used advertising to act as a barrier to new competition, permitting them to charge prices which are high enough to earn them monopoly profit. Luxurious and expensive supermarkets, built to lure customers away from other stores, have raised the cost of food distribution.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Where do you buy your groceries?

Mr. MacDonald: That's a Canadian comment!

And then they do a breakdown, Mr. Chairman, of what this means to the consumer. The excess profit, in the instance of the supermarkets in the prairies, cost the consumer $9.40; the excess capacity cost them $51.88. The advertising costs were $14.80; and the luxurious stores beyond what was necessary from the little corner store where we could get our food just as well, is $38.72—for a total of $114.80 per family.

And they come to a conclusion, which I submit to you has some application in the Province of Ontario. The report of that prairie commission charged:

It is clear that the grocery trade on the prairies is making excess profits. The top four firms directly control over two-thirds of the market in all five prairie cities. This strongly indicates that excess profits earned in the prairies are due to monopoly control.

May I interject and remind you that in the Province of Ontario you have got close to 85 or 90 per cent of control in the hands of five different chains—so the monopoly control exists here, too. I pick up on the quotation.

The dominant position of the large firms permits them to set prices and profit margins above what would prevail in a more competitive market. Even a greater amount of excess profit and a greater degree of monopoly power appears to exist on the Prairies, if the operating margins for the United States were used as a competitive standard. Prairie grocers earn profits 200 to 300 per cent above the American level.

Now, what's the situation in Ontario? I don't know.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It is out west where they've got those NDP governments!

Mr. MacDonald: That's why they've got the NDP governments.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: And what are they doing about it?

Mr. MacDonald: I don't know what the situation is in the Province of Ontario. The burden of my comment to the minister tonight, Mr. Chairman, is that he doesn't know and his economics department doesn't know.

In Ottawa they've made a start on the prices investigation committee and now on the prices review board. Conceivably they will come up with some facts.

However, we've got a problem here. Anybody can investigate, but if you ever want to get around to doing something about it, there's a constitutional problem. The whole question of controls, or of checking excessive pricing, in the view of constitutional experts is a mix of federal-provincial responsibilities.

I might say within these four walls—I suppose it will leak out—we have gone to some constitutional experts, like Frank Scott and Andrew Brewin in our caucus in Ottawa, who is an acknowledged authority. These men have an acknowledged authority in this field. It's their considered view that there will have to be an exercise in co-operative federalism if you're ever going to come to grips with this field. This is necessary to check circumstances which you may come to the conclusion are indefensible and should be checked by some sort of legislative action.

How we will build the machinery to do that is one of our problems down the road. I suspect the simplest and most effective kind of machinery would be a federal body in which the provinces would be willing to delegate their power for exercise by that federal body. Thus you would have a joint exercise of federal-provincial authority. We may at some point have to come to grips with that problem of how we get effective machinery.

However, I'm not going to worry about that at the moment. I come back to our most immediate need, Mr. Chairman, which is that we simply don't have the basic information. I submit to this minister that the Province of Ontario has some part to play in getting the basic information. When the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon asked the minister a question with regard to those 40 per cent so-called increases, the minister's reply, when he was trying to comprehend what the question was for a time, was that he didn't have the facts.

I wanted to interject at that point: "You're right, you don't have the facts". And I think we've got to get those facts.

I want to raise with the minister in a very earnest fashion tonight, the question of where Ontario is going to play its role in this. For example, is it legitimately a role that should be accepted and pursued within the economics department of your ministry? If it is, quite frankly I think there should be a beefing up of the branch so that they can get at this seriously.

Is it a role that might be legitimately taken on by the food council? I want to say some other things about the food council later. Originally the food council, as I recall the debates in this House, was set up because of a feeling on the part of the minister and many other people that we had to come to grips with the problem of vertical integration. As I understand the role of the food council now, I have some doubts as to whether or not they could or would tackle the whole problem of this kind of serious examination of all of the components that make up the costs in the food industry between the producer and the consumer.

But somewhere, either within the department of economics of the ministry, or within the food council, or some other agency as an Ontario counterpart, we have a role to play in the Province of Ontario. And up until now we have not played it. I would be very interested to know what the minister's reaction is to that proposition.

Finally, by way of another overview, I want to pick up from a debate we had in this House a week or two ago when, interestingly enough, the Minister of Agriculture and Food wasn't here and the provincial Treasurer wasn't here, and the Treasurer's parliamentary assistant was piloting through a bill to repeal the Ontario Agricultural Development Act. As the Leader of the Opposition and I pointed out at that time, we had no particular objection to the tidying up which the repeal of that Act represented, because all it meant was that a redundant Act was going to be cleared off the statute books and the few loans of 20 or 30 years ago that had not yet been repaid by the farmers were going to be transferred for collection purposes over to the Treasury, but in repealing the Agricultural Development Act we were not dealing with the problem that originally provoked the enactment in 1921 of the Agricultural Development Act. There is a rather fascinating turn of the historical wheel, because what happened back in 1921 was that the Drury government, recognizing the chronic problem of the farmer to get necessary credit and capital needs from the normal financial institutions, introduced a package of bills. One of these bills was to establish the provincial savings offices in which we might accumulate money from the people of Ontario; the second was the Ontario Agricultural Development Act, the mechanism of the legislative authority for making loans to farmers.

I say the wheel of history has come full round, because I draw to the minister's attention that, faced with the same kind of a problem in Alberta at the present time, the Conservative government of the Province of Alberta is today accumulating funds through something roughly equivalent to our provincial savings offices, and these funds are now being made available as consumer credit—not just for the farmers but for broader consumer credit.

Coming back and dealing only with the agricultural aspect of this, the Province of Ontario has almost completely opted out of the field of credit for farmers. The one recommendation of the farm income committee that the minister seized upon with almost indecent haste and enacted, was the contention that it would be well to tidy up the sources of farm credit and put them all at the federal level. Therefore the junior farm loan programme came to an end, and I think I am correct in saying that in terms of credit the Province of Ontario is out of it altogether. It is argued that their substitute is the capital grants programme. It is not a substitute, but it partially fills the gap. The minister shakes his head, and I agree with him if anybody argues that—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I never even suggested it.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Well, just let me make this point. The capital grants programme has a ceiling of $3,000 in one category, a ceiling of $1,500 in the two other categories, and $500 in the fourth category; with a maximum of $6,500 for any farmer. And in any one of those categories the grant can't be more than 40 per cent of the project in which the farmer is about to engage.

In short, the capital grant programme in many instances is bait to lure the farmer into a programme for which he will have to seek credit elsewhere. He may get it at the bank, but we are just now learning that the banks once again are proving to be a rather weak reed for the farmer to lean on, because with the rising interest rates the farm improvement loans are drying up. While some of the head offices of the banks are contending they haven't given any orders not to make these loans, the more important point is they haven't given any reminder to the bank managers that they have an obligation to continue to make these loans. In the absence of that kind of order, of course what the local bank manager is doing is drying up the loans to farmers and putting the loans out elsewhere where he is going to get the most money. That is of course the way banks have traditionally operated.

A week or so ago—have I got to compete with you too, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Stokes: Will the Chairman come to order please?

Mr. Chairman: Yes sir!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, every other province in this country with agriculture of any consequences has a farm credit programme. I suggest to you that in the Province of Ontario, if we have the high interest rates that we have at the present time, combined with the high cost of production that I noted earlier in my comments, we are going to be back to the traditional position. With respect—and as unprovocatively as I can—the answer once again Mr. Minister, is not going to be to seek a floating rate so that farmers will be frozen out because there is a ceiling on the interest rate. If the rate floats, it will float up to a level which is beyond the capacity of many farmers to carry.

Some may still go and borrow, but then they are into the position where they are not getting a fair return on their overall investment and it makes a mockery of the so-called profits, or more accurately the net income levels the farmers are now being credited with at the present time.

In short, I think there is a place for the Province of Ontario to get back into this field. One could argue on a theoretical basis that it would be ideal for the federal government which has control of banking and monetary matters, to look after farm credit completely, but we have found from years of experience that the federal government doesn't do the job. Moreover, the financial institutions do not do the job. Therefore, if you are going to see that the farmers' needs are met, and met adequately, I think it is inevitable that the Province of Ontario has to get back into the picture.

I have talked longer than I wanted to.

Mr. Reid: Or we wanted you to.

Mr. MacDonald: With all of these pleasant interruptions I had from my friends, particularly here to the right, I went twice as long as I intended. Any further comments I may have I shall deal with in the course of the individual estimates.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I listened with a lot of interest to what has been said. Though I must confess with little persuasion in some cases.

I appreciate what my friend from Huron-Bruce has said concerning the present agricultural situation. There is no question that land resources are running out as far as increased productivity and the opportunity to produce more are concerned. I think one of the things we have not mentioned tonight but which has been mentioned on previous occasions, and which is something that is forgotten entirely I believe, is the amount of food that was produced in the transition from horse power to mechanical power. When one considers the enormous number of horses and mules that were used, and that all of them had to live off the land; when that horse power and mule power disappeared, over the whole North American continent, the amount of acres that were released for human food production was phenomenal! That happened, but it was a transition that took place many years ago.

As a matter of fact, I recall when I first came into this Legislature, sitting down and chatting to Dr. Haslett's predecessor, Dr. Howard Patterson, who was then the provincial director of the economics and statistics branch who drew to my attention the fact there was a very great amount of food production gained from that transition. He had it all calculated out, based on a per acre basis for the support of all those animals. That was quite a useful exercise. That is over with today.

I frankly believe that, other than the land resources that are held by the United States in reserve, there are few new frontiers for agricultural food production in this country of ours or on the North American continent.

I agree completely with my friend from Huron-Bruce when he suggests that the farm labour situation is critical. It perhaps has never been more so in the history of our province than it is today, although I recall very well, some years ago, in operating our own dairy farm, and I am sure I speak for a great many other farmers, there have been times when it was difficult to get satisfactory, reliable and knowledgeable farm help.

Through the farm manpower branch of our ministry we have been successful in bringing to Canada from overseas a substantial number of farm families and single men. We have been able to entice a great many people in Canada into the farm labour force within the Province of Ontario. Contrary to what my hon. friend may believe, 90 per cent of those people that we have placed on farms are still on the farm. It's an amazing development, which has happened now in this country.

Federal Manpower did not have that kind of success with the people they were bringing to this country, because they weren't doing as we are doing; and that is matching up the farmer with the labour source over there or vice versa—matching up the man who wants a job, in the UK, Holland, Belgium, wherever he may be coming from, with the farm operation here in this country. I think this is one of the success stories we have in this ministry; it has been extremely successful. There has been the odd family who has gone back to the old country, but they have been mighty scarce and few and far between.

It has been quite a success story. The only problem is we can't get enough of them, so this is why we embarked upon that junior agriculturalist programme as a pilot project this year to see whether or not that idea will bear some fruit.

I share the concern that has been expressed by my hon. friend, the member for York South, with regard to the statements that were attributed and appeared in today's issue of the Toronto Star. "Prosperity is Back on the Farm, But What Will Consumers Say?" is the headline of the article; and, of course, it fails to mention the fact that the 40 per cent increase referred to for the Province of Ontario in comparison with 43 per cent for all Canada, is simply an increase in income; it is not profit at all, just income.

It is a bit like one of my former NDP opposition people in the great riding of Middlesex North boasting of the great increase that the NDP enjoyed in one particular poll. They had a 100 per cent increase in the vote in that election in comparison with the last election. And by jove, I looked up the statistics to learn just what he really meant. They had two votes in the first election and they had four in the next one, so they had a 100 per cent increase in votes in that election.

Mr. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Is that true? It happens all over.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is just about as phoney as that 40 per cent figure that appeared here.

Mr. Turner: That is the trouble with percentages.

An hon. member: That will change one day.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, I venture to suggest that it never will.

Mr. MacDonald: You ask the hon. member for Middlesex South and he will tell you how it went from 1,400 to 4,600 to 8,100 to 9,200.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I heard those comments on the radio my hon. friend was talking about. I read the report that came out. The report reached our desks last week. It was published in Ottawa on May 25; it reached our office less than a week ago.

Mr. MacDonald: Who published it, incidentally?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It is Statistics Canada Daily. There it is right there—Statistics Canada Daily.

Mr. MacDonald: Did they call it a profit?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Did they call it a which?

Mr. MacDonald: Do they call it a profit?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, they don't. They say income of farm operators from farming operations by province—income, income of farm operators. I assume this is where the information is taken from. I don't think it is really that important to dwell on that source of information, but I assume that is what it must be.

In our statistics branch we have prepared some rather interesting figures, which I would like to read into the record, Mr. Chairman, because I think it points up the fact and the concern that has been expressed here today and this evening regarding what actually has happened. One can compare the prices of Ontario agricultural products in the years 1971 and 1972 and look at the increased prices.

Take the average price per hundredweight for 1971 of good feeder steers in Toronto. This is feeder steers: $34.15 in 1971; 1972, $39.75, for a 16.4 per cent increase. Now when you look at slaughter steers: $32.70 in 1971; an average of $37.20 in 1972, for a 13.8 per cent increase—and these of course, are 1972 figures. When you look at veal calves: $40.05 in 1971 in comparison with $45.35 in 1972, for a 13.2 per cent increase. And then you take a look at hogs: $25.80 in 1971; $35.10 in 1972, for a 13.6 per cent increase.

But when we come to eggs it is quite a different story. Eggs of all grades, at London grading stations on a per dozen basis: 21.6 cents in 1971; 28.5 cents in 1972, for a 31.9 per cent increase. Take a look at broiler chickens: 27.1 cents in 1971; 1972, 30.5 cents, for a 12.6 per cent increase.

And when you take a look at the index of farm prices, from 1971-1972 a 10.3 per cent increase; that is quite different from what we could be led to believe was a 40 per cent increase as had been indicated in that report. So the figures have to be looked at closely in some of these particular instances.

Total net income of farmers in relation to costs increased about $140 million, in round figures, between 1971 and 1972. But we looked at where the difference really came, and actually the big difference has come in the increased selling price of cattle, hogs and eggs. This was the real source of extra farm income in that year.

I think we've established pretty well beyond any doubt that the 40 per cent net increase in income is a figure that can be distorted out of all reason or credibility when one considers the figures that I have just enunciated to you this evening. I've never tried to depreciate those figures at all, but there is no point in standing up here talking off the top of your head unless you have the figures and I've just read them to you this very evening.

I listened to my friend from York South talking about various matters pertaining to the food industry and the incentives for farmers. These were recommendations of the farm income committee report that were never implemented for, a variety of reasons.

The incentives may have worked well in theory, they looked as though they could be put into practice. But when you get right down to implementation, even some of the people who were on the committee admitted they weren't as practical a solution as first appeared.

Now, my hon. friend from York South talked about the fact there are villains in the food industry, that there is food store deceit and there is waste. I suppose when you quote from the David Archer report of the OFL, relayed to the food inquiry committee of Ottawa, one could grasp that intent; or one could see that this is what he was talking about.

Mr. MacDonald: You will recognize him as quoting for the most part from your own research document.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I have to wonder why, if as the member suggested there is such deceit and there is such wastefulness in the food industry—and I'm not here defending the food industry, the processors or the distributors. They are an element of our society and we as agricultural producers need them as much as they need us, because we have to have them for our outlets.

Mr. MacDonald: Let's keep the record straight, though—just keep the record straight. The quotations that you are now setting up to knock down weren't from Dave Archer; they were from your own farm income committee report—research document No. 14.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Right!

Mr. MacDonald: Okay.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: And I'll come to that one in just a few minutes too.

But when one has to talk about the Ontario Food Council defending the food processors and distributors, I want to take some exception to that. I don't think they are defending them any more than I am. They recognize as do I the importance of having them in the total economy and the total food industry of this country. This whole food industry is all one package; it is one operation.

Now, if there are such profits in the food industry, then why don't the co-op stores in this province flourish more? Why doesn't the OFL with its huge sources of money collected from the labour people of this province, open some food stores if there is such profit in it?

Mr. MacDonald: That is a bit of mythology too.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: They haven't done it. We have at least 10 co-op food stores in Ontario. We've got about 800 or 1,000 across Canada. What about the profit picture in those stores? Are they wasting, are they gouging the consumers? Are they participating in the flagrant abuse of advertising that my hon. friend suggests is the case with other stores?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Cliff Pilkey's store almost went broke, didn't it?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Who is being set up here? This is what I want to know. Now if such wonderful things can be done by following that report, which is recommended by my hon. friend and promoted by our friend Janssen—who is now the special advisor to the Minister of Agriculture in the government of Manitoba — why hasn't he implemented it in Manitoba? They've had an NDP government for the last four years, which is now going to the people, and it hasn't done one thing about it, not a thing!

Mr. MacDonald: Oh yes they have.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Not a thing, not a thing!

Let me ask my hon. friend from York South and the people that he has—the few he has behind him there now in that party—

Mr. MacDonald: Look behind you. There is nobody in that bank of seats behind you. You are standing in splendid isolation.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: What is the price of food at the corner of Portage and Main in Winnipeg today? What are the chain stores doing in Manitoba? What action has been taken to control their advertising or to vet the advertising of the chain stores in Manitoba?

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): Takes 100 years to overcome the Tories.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: What about Saskatchewan? He refers to that report, you know. Due to monopoly control in prairie cities—

Mr. Germa: A hundred years of Toryism. We can't correct it in four years.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Not one NDP government — and we've got three of them now, perish the thought, in Canada—has done anything about this business of monopoly control in the food industry in those centres to which the NDP refers.

Yet my friend stands here tonight, Mr. Chairman, and says this Ontario government should do something about these kind of things, when we have those NDP governments which haven't done one single thing about it. This is because they know full well that it's a phoney issue from start to finish.

Mr. MacDonald: It is not a phoney issue. You see, here you are doing research on the same thing and coming up with no answer at all.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Of course it is. Dead and dried up, no question of it whatever. Now just let me look at this.

Mr. MacDonald: Your conclusion is to defend the status quo.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Obviously if there was anything more to change my friend in Manitoba would have done it long ago.

Mr. MacDonald: We are doing it out there. We will get there.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: He hasn't done a thing; not a thing as a matter of fact.

When he talks about the Manitoba government, I have to look at this OFL report, because I was interested as I read that report. I marked a few things in it. You know, David Archer talks about responsibility of government.

Mr. Stokes: We are not responsible for everything Archer says or writes, you know.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Isn't that a revelation? Isn't that a revelation, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Oh, oh! You will be struck down.

Mr. Stokes: He can defend himself.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The mouthpiece for the labour industry in this province—so-called; their self-assumed place. That is what they say they are—

Mr. MacDonald: You are the mouthpiece for Gerhard Moog, that is your problem.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: You can't talk yourself out of that one.

Mr. MacDonald: And Fidnam if you want to indulge on that level. Now lets get down to some—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: You can't talk yourself out of that one.

Just listen to this, Mr. Chairman. I was interested in the comments of the Leader of the Opposition when he was questioning the member for York South, talking about the—

Mr. MacDonald: Of course you are both in the same bed and always have been, you are out in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —talking about the concern he seemed to have for we farmers getting a half-decent price at last. He was really concerned that we were getting that price and we should be doing something about it to control those prices. But just listen to what the OFL says:

Eggs are at an all-time high for a season when traditionally cheap eggs are available. Why are egg prices up? One of the first government actions following passage of the Farm Products Marketing Act was a fowl slaughtering programme. A million of Canada's egg-laying flock were led to the chopping block in an eight-week period. The programme was allegedly to stabilize the price of eggs.

Mr. MacDonald: Sure, that was the mistaken and misconceived policies of the agricultural department.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: "Since this government's contribution to stability, eggs have gone up by 50 per cent."

Mr. Stokes: Are the eggs high or low?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: To continue:

And on the question of stability of egg prices it's widely believed that marketing board policy is to keep the Canadian egg price marginally below egg prices in the USA to stop competition.

Is the OFL in favour of higher egg prices? Would one deduce such from that Mr. Chairman? I don't think so.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: About 30 cents they think is good.

Mr. Ruston: Only 25 cents.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The OFL never made one mention of the real incentive for higher egg prices.

Mr. MacDonald: What is that?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: And that was the egg stabilization fund that was established by the egg producers in this province. That was what did it. They have had to increase that deduction on a per case of eggs basis three times since they implemented that programme in order to take those surplus eggs off the market.

Mr. Stokes: Are they or are they not at an all-time high?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I hope they are, but they are not at this particular time.

Mr. Stokes: That is all he said.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: They are not at an all-time high right today. Right today they are not. They were a while ago, they have dropped back a bit. I wish they were higher, quite frankly, because I'll tell you that when eggs were selling at 21 cents—

Mr. Stokes: I don't wish they were any higher, on behalf of the consumers of this province.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —I didn't hear the OFL screaming about the low price of eggs and that we should be doing something for the farmers. Not a word at that time. Now the time has come to let you fellows accept the responsibility for these kind of things. If you want to quote from that brief let's quote it all.

Now then let's take a look at this—and I quote:

Under direct government policy control—control, not supply and demand is the name of the game in the dairy industry. [It's about time it was]. At the control console is the Canadian Dairy Commission, a Crown corporation.

Imports are restricted. Exports are subsidized. The cost to the taxpayer of import restrictions on cheese, butter and skim milk hits $100 million annually.

Where do they get the figures? Nowhere do we know of such figures; any place.

"The yearly cost to subsidize exports runs to $47 million." The innuendo there is that it's at the taxpayer's expense. The total cost of exports is at the expense of the producers who have a deduction made on every 100 pounds of milk and cream produced in this province and across Canada. That's where the export fund comes from.

Mr. Stokes: Yes, but you can't champion the cause of the consumer and the farmer at the same time if there is no culprit in between.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think you can and I think it's nearly time we did. And I wish you people over there would come along and join us in that approach.

Mr. Germa: You are on both sides of the fence.

Mr. Stokes: My colleague from Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) would call that the shell game.

Mr. Chairman: Order please! Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Sure; he's called it the shell game because he's trying to talk out of both sides of his mouth at once.

Mr. Stokes: I think that is what you are trying to do.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It's about time we recognized the fact that food is cheaper in this country than anywhere else in the world, in comparison with the dollar earned by the labour man in this country. That's the situation today.

Mr. Stokes: It's going up higher than any consumer item in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: In my humble opinion the time has come when we have to recognize such reports for what they are. And in my humble opinion there are many inaccuracies in that report.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: It is interesting you take the OFL document and attempt to refute it because it happens to be presented by labour. Why not deal with your own document!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, I will take my own document; I will take that document. And I will say this, that the people who wrote that document today have an opportunity to do the things they have suggested because they are in government to do it. And they have not done one thing about it. Not one thing have they done about it.

Mr. MacDonald: One of them is and I will show you. I will get to that later.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We'd like to see an illustration. Because nowhere that I know of has Janssen had any affect in that particular regard in the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. MacDonald: In Saskatchewan they led the Province of Ontario in getting rid of such gimmickry as food stamps.

Mr. Chairman: Order please; order!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Sure, but that had happened long before the Socialist group came into Saskatchewan; that had happened long before.

Mr. MacDonald: They have a strong consumer co-op movement out there that can balance the supermarkets too.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: My hon. friend talked about the provincial savings offices, and frankly I think he made some valuable points there. It is perhaps a very useful suggestion that some of the funds accumulated in those provincial savings offices might very well be used for various types of programmes.

But I believe this; that it's hardly appropriate to say that all the funds collected in provincial savings offices, most of which are located in the urban areas, should be allocated for producer credit. I just have a feeling that everybody should have a right to those funds if they are going to be used for that purpose. But there has been a very good reason why they haven't been used for it.

Frankly, I don't think that the Province of Ontario, in our particular philosophy, has any business to be in competition with the chartered banks. That is their job, and I think they should be fulfilling that job. Now that may not suit my hon. friend across the way—

Mr. MacDonald: God bless them!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: If he doesn't agree with it, that's his privilege. But I believe that, by and large, the chartered banks have done a reasonably good job of supplying credit wherever it was required. There have been times, I'll admit, when the fixed interest rate has discouraged the chartered banks from making the number of loans and the amount of loans that we would have liked to have seen made. And perhaps the time has come when we should be looking at those kinds of things as well.

We will debate the various items as they come along, Mr. Chairman. I have some reservations about some of the things that have been said. Perhaps we will deal with them as the estimates proceed.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1701, then, I think we will take it as a unit.

On vote 1701:

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Chairman, may I make some statements in regards to the minister's remarks at the opening of his estimates in which he was pleased to comment on the buoyancy in the agriculture industry. He did mention grains, soya beans and corn; and he said they had reached the sum of $10 a bushel for soya beans and $2.10 or $2.15 a bushel for corn.

I might say we are very pleased to see beans and corn reach that amount. What I am concerned about is that people growing the soya beans and corn aren't getting those prices. Last fall when the soya beans were being harvested the farmer got $2.90 to $3 a bushel. When the corn was being harvested it was $1.20 or $1.10, and now it is $2.10 or $2.15.

Of course, the farmer is not getting this increased price on account of selling the soya beans and the corn. We find now in Canada that soya beans are in the hands of the three big elevators in the Province of Ontario. I understand from Ottawa that there are 1,390,000 bushels in storage, and of course they are the ones who are getting the $10 a bushel.

You did mention that the soya bean meal was over $300 a ton, and of course the farmers have to buy it back. I am very concerned that those in the agricultural industry aren't benefiting more from these high prices.

We see prosperity back on the farm today and this is why I am bringing it up to you, Mr. Minister, that something should be done to encourage the farmers to store their grain on their farms more, The Minister of Agriculture of Canada announced loans for stored grain. I would like to know what your policy is. Have you any idea of assisting the Minister of Agriculture in encouraging farmers to store more grain on the farm.

I would say that it would reduce the price of food to the consumers if it was more evenly marketed, because the grain in general is put into the elevators or sold at harvest time. If the farmers could get a loan on this stored grain I think it would be more evenly marketed, and I would think that those who did the work and took the risks would get more profit from their labour.

I would like to know if the minister has given any consideration to assisting the federal Minister of Agriculture to bring about loans on stored grain in the Province of Ontario? I think it would be of great benefit, because in this day and age those in the agriculture field in general can't afford to borrow from the bank for two crops. If loans were available on grain on the farm this would help hold back the grain at harvest time and it would benefit those in the agriculture field considerably, and I think we should do it if it is at all possible.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend, I am sure, is quite aware that the Co-op Marketing Loans Act administered by the federal government provides advances on farm-stored grain, and has for a number of years. The problem is that the commodity groups in Ontario have not been organized to accept that type of loan as the western people have been.

That is one of the reasons why the wheat board wants to get into the agency business. If they do then they will qualify for that kind of advance. The agency has been talked about for years, but they never would come to that position. The same thing might apply as far as corn is concerned, but I think my hon. friend would recognize that there hasn't been much enthusiasm for a co-ordinated corn marketing plan in Ontario, and so perhaps we had better start from the appropriate place.

As far as our capital grants programme is concerned, it is available for farm storage. We were instrumental in persuading the federal people to write off the farm storage on the basis of four years, an increase of 20 per cent from the original five per cent, so that there is a 25 per cent writeoff instead of a five per cent writeoff. It helps a lot in that particular way.

The farm improvement loans were vastly increased; and while, as the member for York South quite rightly said the other day, since the interest rate was fixed at 6.25—and the prime rate has advanced well beyond that now; I believe it is 7¼ per cent today—the banks have lost some interest in making those loans available to the degree they should. I think the federal government is looking at the interest rate. But there has been an enormous number of storages go up on farms.

I was interested to note the other day, when I drove down for the official graduation at Ridgetown, that there were all kinds of corn cribs still full of corn in that area; and I thought how fortunate it was that corn was still there. I do know there is a great deal of grain corn still in storage that has not been sold.

I know there are some farmers who have soya beans in some fairly substantial amounts; but, of course, they are in the minority—there's no question about that. I have people calling us and asking, "When do I sell the soya beans?" Well, if they've reached $8.50 a bushel, do we tell a man to sell them then? They now go up to more than $9, I believe, at country elevator points and to $10 or thereabouts on the Chicago future market for July.

I have taken the position that the farmer should know his own business best as to when he's going to sell anything. It's a gamble. There are a few that have taken advantage of the situation, and I couldn't agree more. I think it's imperative that there should be more farm storage built for various types of grain.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, are we dealing with the whole vote as one package?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, the whole vote, 1701.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, for the moment I would like to raise some points in reference to the information services. In the annual report, I was interested to learn there are 225 publications edited, processed and printed during the fiscal year; 145 were fact sheets.

Mr. Chairman, one of the problems we face this year in obtaining details with regard to the administration of this ministry is that there is a task force under Dean Richards examining the whole operation of the ministry and, after a five-year period, is conceivably giving some thought to some reorientation of the department.

In spite of the fact that this matter may be under consideration by the task force, I must say that I've always had some question in my mind as to whether or not the Ministry of Agriculture and Food wasn't drifting along in the old rut of publications and to what extent there is an assessment of the value of those 225 publications, 145 of which have been reduced to fact sheets.

That comment is in reference to the substance of them. Last year I drew to the minister's attention a question of the sheer mechanics of the ministry's mailing list when I was able to give him a reminder that the former member for Woodbine, Ken Bryden, two elections after his departure from this House, was still in receipt of one of the publications from the Ministry of Agriculture addressed as "Kenneth Bryden, MPP." It left one with the feeling that there wasn't a very vigilant review of the mailing list. Therefore, one wonders how many of the 2,132,780 copies of publications were really useful.

My first question of the minister is in reference to the number of publications and to the mailing lists for them. How often are they reviewed, or is this something the minister is leaving to the Richards task force to give him some advice?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, that's not the case. There's a publications committee that does review them. Forty per cent of the pamphlets have been replaced with fact sheets, which are current and up to date and, I would think, would be more useful than a bulletin that might not be as up to date as it should be, because information is becoming available so much more rapidly than it had been in the past. So there's an ongoing assessment being made.

I'm advised that there's no direct mailing list now except for libraries. There used to be a direct mailing list, but this has been changed. There is no direct mailing list now except for libraries I am told.

Mr. MacDonald: I have a little difficulty understanding exactly what you say. You mean the direct mailing list of these fact sheets and publications is only to the libraries or perhaps to the MPP and a few other select groups across the province?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am told it is through extension workers and on request that anyone can have that information mailed to them. I am told there is no other mailing list as such.

Mr. MacDonald: I don't want to pursue this unduly, but I have this persistent feeling that some of these publications were started in the year 1894 and are still going on in 1973. I think, without being unduly critical, that this is the kind of thing that sometimes can happen in an old, established ministry that at one time was servicing an industry that was much more dominant in the economy than now. It continues to be an important aspect but is drifting along in the well-known, furlined rut.

However, let me come to another point in connection with information services. I don't know whether the minister has had an opportunity to read the brief that was presented to the Richards task force by the Eastern Canada Farm Writers Association. They have some rather critical comments with regard to getting access to the ministry. In fact, they focus it in a proposal that there should be an associate director for internal matters and another associate director that would relate to external queries for information and contacts.

Sometimes I would concede, having been in the media game myself in the past, writers and journalists can get rather a precious view of sources from which they are getting information. I think the minister would agree that the farm writers can, and should be one of the main contacts with the general public. After all, they are writing regularly for farm papers and publications, and various other media outlets. Therefore, if there is considered feeling on their part, for whatever reason, that the information dissemination outside the ministry isn't as efficient as it might be, I think it's in the interests of the ministry that it should take a quick look at it. Has the minister given any thought to that?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, and I fail to understand that criticism. One of the briefs that I had sent to me, and I think I only had two or three, was from the farm writers. I don't know who it was sent to me even yet, but I read it with some interest. I fail to appreciate the concern expressed, because I have gone out of my way over the last number of years to try to provide information to the agricultural news media. I believe one of the best sources of providing information to the farm people who are served by the news media is the Agricultural Farm Writers Association.

On occasions we have had them together. I was not really thrilled with the number who turned up for such meetings to discuss with us the various things that might be of interest. I suppose, because they come from various parts of the province, they found that transportation may have been some difficulty to them. Perhaps time was another factor. I know how busy everyone is. But we have tried to provide the information on a regular and up-to-date basis to the news media by news releases that are of interest. I notice that because I receive the packet of news that goes out, I believe, on a weekly basis to the extension officers. I receive that as well and I read it, because I want to be kept up-to-date on what is really going out. I read every one of them. I am surprised to see on occasion that some of the agricultural writers use those reports; they base an article on it or a news item on it. There are others that don't reach my attention at least.

Judging from the number of people who write to me and the amount of press coverage that our ministry seems to get as a result of the activities at the information branch, it would seem to me that we have a very useful and effective information service being provided to the agricultural writers.

It may not meet all the requirements. Maybe our news isn't spicy, I don't know, maybe it isn't critical enough for somebody. I suppose if we were to lambaste somebody for something or other that would make the news, but it is constructive stuff and somebody has said to me that nobody wants to print constructive stuff, they just want to get something on somebody, that's what sells newspapers. I don't know if that is any different in the agricultural writing business or not, but certainly that would appear to be the chief motivation of some things that I see in the press these days.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, one of the other proposals of the farm writers is that the minister should institute the procedure of periodic press conferences. I am almost tempted to suggest to the minister that he should try one if for no other purpose than to come to grips with this. I don't know what the answer is to the problem you have just presented, because you in effect say you don't understand it. I don't know whether you have read this brief; if you have I am only reporting a point they made.

All I am saying is that if the executive of the farm writers reflect this view I have no reason to believe it isn't an accurate consensus within their ranks and therefore you have a problem, because you don't understand why they came to that conclusion and I think it is in your interest, it is in the ministry's interest, to find out.

I come back to my original point, maybe one press conference in which, if nothing else, you could explore this and find out what it is that they feel might be handled differently, because, if I may just add one further comment here, you are going to get an infinite variety; they concede that some members consider anything that comes out of any government ministry as a handout and won't use it, others under pressure of time or because of the nature of the writer may regurgitate it unashamedly without credit. So you will get those two different extremes. My main point is that there is a problem here because you think it is fine and they are being critical.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I wouldn't say, Mr. Chairman, with great respect to my hon. friend, that I think it is 100 per cent. I thought we were doing a good job. We have called an odd press conference, two or three that I can recall, for that specific purpose. There was nothing really important, it was just general purpose, but it didn't go over.

Some of my friends in the Farm Writers Association have already been in touch with my office and have disassociated themselves from the comments of the brief. It may well be that not all of them share the opinions that have been expressed. But I think my friend has made a suggestion, Mr. Chairman, that is worth a lot of merit and we will give it some thought.

Mr. Stokes: He is always very helpful.

Mr. MacDonald: Let me pursue this if I might into another area of some delicacy, but I want to raise it because I think quite frankly the gossip on this point should be laid to rest. The minister is aware of the fact that the farm writers, with particular emphasis by the CBC, have now brought out into the open the allegation that the Ministry of Agriculture is being rather selective in the provision of farm management material and the payment for the publication of that farm management material in Farm and Country. Their comment, if I may put it specifically on the record—

Mr. Gaunt: It is called a paid editorial.

Mr. MacDonald: They refer to it as a paid editorial, and in the context of this ministry not advertising, whereas many other agricultural ministries do advertise such as Quebec, the federal Department of Agriculture, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, they felt that this was somewhat discriminatory. May I ask the minister: How long has this been going on? Is it accurate that all of the material is written by people within your department? And what is the per-issue payment that is made by the ministry to Farm and Country?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, I can answer those. First of all, all the articles are written by people within the ministry. The first article appeared in the issue of May 26, 1970, of Farm and Country.

We have an arrangement with them for $2,000 per issue. We started off with, I believe, four issues. The reports that reached my desk were so favourable that I reported it on through to my deputy minister, and from there on to the information and extension branch, that it looked like a good way to reach an awful lot of people. I am sure my hon. friend, interested as he is in saving taxpayers' dollars, would recognize that we are getting into 97,000 homes in the Province of Ontario. When one compares that cost of $2,000 per issue with the cost if we were to mail out the information contained in those four double pages at six cents an item, my arithmetic comes to $5,820 a mailing and we are getting it for $2,000.

Mr. MacDonald: Do you do it with any other publication?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, we don't. We do it with that publication because it has by far the widest circulation of any farm paper in the Province of Ontario. There is no question of it at all. It is purely a business deal.

We thought we were getting a bargain in getting information out to farmers. With the kind of reports that I am getting back, unsolicited, from various people about the quality of the work that appears there, I believe it has done a very great deal to draw to the attention of the farm people of Ontario the service that is available through the extension branch in farm management assistance.

The articles have generated comments. They have produced results in the working relationship of farmers and the business community, in the establishment of accounting, in the attention that must be drawn to estate planning, to family partnerships, father-son business relationships. I think it has been a most successful venture and I support it wholeheartedly. We have suggested that the arrangement be continued for another year, and I hope that it will continue to bear the fruit that I am sure it has borne in the past.

Mr. MacDonald: Well you made a number of comments on this. I raised this, Mr. Minister, because I think it is time that it was raised and frankly discussed because there is a lot of rumouring and chit-chat about it that is creating unnecessarily bad feelings.

I suppose in one respect there are certain invidious characteristics that may be inescapable. I don't know if the minister is giving any thought as to how he could reduce, if not remove, the invidiousness. You have this kind of arrangement with only one farm outlet and the rest of them would be less than human if they didn't get a little jealous that one competitor has this sort of a deal with the government. Moreover, that invidiousness takes on a new dimension when, for reasons that rather intrigue me, I discover that the Province of Ontario doesn't do advertising in farm publications as many other provinces do.

Having said that, I must say I am really not inclined to rush in and urge you to advertise, because I have often had the feeling that advertising by governments in weekly newspapers and ethnic papers, and I suspect it might become the same in farm papers, is simply for good will. It is not for any real purpose; it is really a thinly disguised form of subsidy, and I don't know whether the public purse should be used for that purpose. However, because of the fact that you don't, like other provinces advertise generally in farm magazines, then this sort of a deal with Farm and Country takes on, in the view of other outlets, this invidious quality.

Having said all that I am inclined to agree with the minister. I have looked into this and I have talked with many people on it. There are few things in which farmers have been more resistant than educational matter on farm management. It is rather an interesting commentary, but I think that's accurate; maybe it is less so in recent years. But for years farmers tended to say, "How I run my farm is my business and you keep your nose out of it." There was that sort of reaction. Therefore, to have a regular flow of farm management material to the biggest possible circulation list in the Province of Ontario. I think has merit. The minister and all those who may read these comments in other farm publications may be interested to know that I have discovered that this is not unique to Ontario. There is a comparable kind of arrangement certainly in Quebec and, I believe, in Saskatchewan, where the extension departments or the ministry want to do the best possible job with the greatest number of farmers on farm management problems and have some comparable kind of deal with a major farm paper.

I don't oppose the proposition. This is my conclusion having looking into many angles of it but I leave with the minister the one problem that remains. How serious it is, I don't know but I think he has created in the minds of all of the other farm writers and all of the other farm publications, a feeling that one is being favoured or that they are being discriminated against. That might result in a kind of attitude toward the ministry by all of those other farm writers and publications which won't maximize their efforts on behalf of agriculture in the Province of Ontario. They will get a chip on their shoulder and so on.

I don't know what the answer to it is but you have got a problem. It's your problem. I draw it to your attention and I leave it with you.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Chairman, I want to deal with one other aspect in regard to the information branch that was mentioned in the farm writers' brief and that has to do with the manner in which releases are sent out.

The minister has read the brief so I am sure he's acquainted with the point which I make which is on page 6, the fact that the programme on capital grants, for instance, is written in the same general style and in the same manner as a release indicating how one can plant bulbs. Now the point is that in some cases the ministry is beaming, if you like, to an audience of general interests and of general knowledge, and in other cases the ministry is beaming to a specific section of the farm community. In that case, the release should be much more detailed and explicit and contain much more factual and, perhaps, technical information than would the general release.

I think that's a good point. I have seen many of the releases from the ministry and they are of a general nature. They are well written and all of that but they are general releases. I think that in the case of specific information about a specific problem, one should have the general release for broad circulation and the specific release for people who want more detail and who expect more detail.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate my hon. friend's comments. There is validity to them but I would point out to him that we have written 435 releases this year. We have writers whom we think are about as good journalists as one can find.

The detailed releases are being sent out as feature articles to certain farm magazines which would be particularly suitable for those kinds of detailed releases.

I must say, in defence of the programme and the policy which has been adopted by the director of the information branch, this is based, in my opinion, on criticisms we have heard from several who have said "Your releases are too long. We haven't got time to read those releases. Just give us the bare bones and we will put the meat on the story." I have heard that criticism registered against the federal Department of Agriculture about some of its releases which have come out.

As a matter of fact, I have heard agricultural and farm writers make a joke of the releases which come from the provincial ministry and from the Federal Department of Agriculture. I don't know whether or not they knew I was listening but I was listening because it is very important. It is the taxpayers' dollars which are involved in writing and sending that material out. If they don't want them, then they should say, "We don't want your information." Let them do their own digging. We think we are providing a service to them. But if we are not doing it in the right way, then I suppose it is time we got them all together and found out what they really do want.

But I have to say, in connection with this brief, that a great number of agricultural farm writers have already got in touch with us and dissociated themselves from the contents of that brief, which I am told was rewritten to suit the purpose of a few people in the agricultural farm writers executive. Perhaps this is adding to the comments or the gossip my friend from York South refers to. I don't know.

I never saw the brief until it landed on my desk. I don't know what may have motivated it at all. One can assume various things, but I will be interested in knowing the reference made by Prof. Richards to that brief when he submits his report, I hope, within the next few weeks.

Mr. Chairman: Will there be further discussion on vote 1701?

Mr. Gaunt: Yes, I want to discuss it further.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, just before you put the motion, I know you would be interested in the fact that this is a very special day for our agricultural critic, the member for Huron-Bruce; it is his 38th birthday, and I know you would want to join with me in my wish — as a matter of fact, my assurance to him—that by the time he is 40 he is going to be Minister of Agriculture.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am prepared to approve, with certain reservations.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves that the committee rise and report.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply reports progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, before I move the adjournment of the House I think I would ask the House to be prepared for the legislation that appears on the order paper tomorrow. We will begin with No. 4, Bill 94; No. 5, Bill 95; No. 9, Bill 126; No. 10, Bill 127; and No. 8, Bill 124. If we happen to conclude those matters of business, we will deal with the balance of the legislation.

Mr. MacDonald: Do I take it we won't go back to these estimates tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Not tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at 10:30 o'clock p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 5, 1973

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We have as visitors with us today in the east gallery students from Gogama Public School of Gogama; from Hilltop Public School of Atikokan; and from Bishop Ryan High School of Hamilton.

In the west gallery there are students from Holy Name Separate School of Hornepayne; Deer Park Public School of Toronto; and Westway High School of Etobicoke.

Statements by the ministry.

WAFERBOARD PLANT NEAR THUNDER BAY

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Natural Resources): Mr. Speaker, at noon today in a joint release with the MacMillan Bloedel Co. of British Columbia, I announced the construction of a $9.4 million waferboard plant to be built near the city of Thunder Bay this summer.

The plant will use birch and poplar to produce a panelboard sold under the registered name of Aspenite Panels. The board is produced by cutting logs into thin wafers, coating these with wax and resin and curing them under heat and pressure. The product is used as sheathing in the construction of houses and other buildings and as well as decorative material in mobile home manufacture and in other construction applications.

The Thunder Bay operation will be MacMillan Bloedel's second waferboard plant. It now produces Aspenite Panels at Hudson Bay in east-central Saskatchewan where it has more than doubled the production capacity since it acquired that operation in 1965. This is the second major industry, Mr. Speaker, to locate in the Thunder Bay area within the past year utilizing surplus wood species.

An agreement has been reached between the Ministry of Natural Resources and the company on the provision of logs to be supplied by independent logging contractors from provincial Crown management units. While the majority of the wood will come from hardwood stock in the Crown management units, some private land sources in the vicinity of Thunder Bay will also be utilized, providing these landowners with an additional source of income.

The new plant is expected to be in operation in the fall of 1974 and will employ an estimated 200 people. The annual payroll will exceed $1.5 million, not including some $600,000 or $700,000 in payroll for logging activities required to supply the plant.

The plant will use electricity and natural gas for power and heat and will meet high environmental standards which have been established for it.

The buildings will contain an estimated 140,000 sq ft which, together with wood storage areas, will occupy about one third of the proposed site.

Its annual capacity will be about 100 million sq ft of panels based on a 3/8-in. thickness. The primary market is eastern Canada with product shipment to be largely by truck and rail as well as by ship through the Great Lakes.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that this new plant will prove to be a real economic benefit to the head of the lakes. This company is Canada's largest forest products company and this is its second major investment in this province.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): The big get bigger, eh?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Its earlier acquisition of Multiply Plywoods Ltd. at Nipigon also utilizes birch and poplar species. The company anticipates an Ontario-based panelboard complex which would proceed as each unit becomes profitable, and will include manufacturing units for plywood and particleboard along with the proposed waferboard plant.

Mr. Stokes: Why didn't the minister put it out in a community that needs it?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's a great boon for the northwest.

Mr. Stokes: Why didn't he put it out in Beardmore where they need it? Or Geraldton?

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions. The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

CHARGES BY OECA PRODUCER

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the Minister of Colleges and Universities if he has brought the Price Waterhouse report on OECA with him today, so that he can table it; or failing that, give me a copy as he promised yesterday?

Hon. J. McNie (Minister of Colleges and Universities): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition knows I am always as good as my promises, and I will be tabling the Price—I've got to be careful now, it's the Waterhouse not the Watergate—

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Same thing for the minister.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He said it, I didn't!

Hon. Mr. McNie:—proposal this afternoon and it'll be given to the press at that same time.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): Force of habit.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: Has the minister given any further consideration to the possibility of a review of the activities of OECA on a more extensive basis than will be possible in the estimates committee, particularly to bring forward from the organization not only the administrative heads but those people who have left the organization in recent weeks, so that their views can be expressed publicly?

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, my last words to the House yesterday were that the matter would be thoroughly canvassed. The first approach, which I've found in the last six months to be most useful, is to work through their board. I chatted with the chairman this morning and he has already put this item at the top of the agenda for their mid-June meeting. They will be seeing what steps can be taken to determine what the justifications are of the charges that are alleged to have been made by Mr. Shields. To date, neither Mr. Ide nor this ministry has received a copy of the statement by Mr. Shields.

Mr. S. Lewis: (Scarborough West): Oh, that's not true. That is not true. Mr. Shields had a three-hour meeting with Mr. Ide.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! Order, order! The hon. member for Scarborough West has accused the minister of making a statement that is not true.

Mr. Lewis: I am sorry. All right. Well, it was a generic statement. The minister is misinformed. My apologies.

Mr. Speaker: Has the remark been withdrawn, then?

Mr. Lewis: It has been withdrawn.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, would the minister not agree that because of the gravity of the charges made not only by Mr. Shields but by the two other high executives, producers particularly, who have left the employ of OECA, it would be rather difficult for OECA to review the charges itself and that it is obviously necessary that there be a public review by some body other than OECA, which is subject to the direct criticism itself?

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, I obviously have a higher regard for the integrity of the board than the Leader of the Opposition has.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It is not a matter of impugning their integrity at all. How can they investigate themselves?

Hon. Mr. McNie: I'm quite satisfied that the board will do what is appropriate. It may be that they choose to have somebody from outside, an independent party, look into this, but I'm going to be—

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): Another incestuous investigation.

Mr. Lewis: That is a ludicrous investigation!

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, I found that this has worked to good advantage in the past and has helped a number of autonomous organizations to resolve problems not unlike these.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Does the minister not understand that we are not talking about the integrity of the board but of the impossibility of the minister's suggestion that OECA investigate charges made against its own corporate body and its own employees? Surely he would realize that it has to be an impartial, external investigation by a committee of the Legislature, or perhaps some other body.

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that the board will do what's appropriate, as I said yesterday, and I wouldn't be surprised that they will get some independent body, some impartial body, to take a look at the matters that are of some concern to the members opposite at this particular moment, and also to ourselves here.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Now that I know a little more of the ground on which we stand, why would the minister resist Mr. Shields appearing before the estimates committee since, in fact, for the entire month of June Mr. Shields is still an employee of the OECA? His resignation has a 30-day notice requirement, and surely it would be legitimate to call him before the House.

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the hon. leader of the NDP is splitting hairs. Mr. Shields, in fact, has left the building. The only alternative that is left to the OECA is to fire him so that he has, in fact, left the employ. He is not working there at this particular moment, and as far as I am concerned I wouldn't want—

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): What in the world has that got to do with it? Doesn't the minister want to hear him?

Mr. Lewis: Why is the minister afraid of Roy Shields?

A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Why would the minister use, if he will forgive me, an even more severe case of hair-splitting than mine, to preclude Mr. Shields from appearing before the estimates committee on some specious argument that he has resigned 48 hours ago? The information is still new and relevant. Why would that stop him?

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, obviously it is not practical to bring before the estimates committee every dissident employee of every organization or agency that has a—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): We are not asking every employee—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The minister has everything covered up. That is his task and—

Mr. Lewis: It's going to cause him a lot more trouble because of this—

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Mr. Speaker, may I ask, in view of the matters before the committee, will the minister give to the committee a complete breakdown of all of the costs of OECA, together with all of the travel done by members of that board and where the funding came from? Will that be available for us in committee?

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that when the matter of the OECA comes up before estimates we will be able to give the hon. member the answers to questions she has asked.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

HOSPITAL APPEAL BOARD MEETINGS

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I have a question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker.

Since it is just a year ago that the Legislature established the Ontario Hospital Appeal Board, how can the minister justify the fact that the board has dealt with only one case in this full year; that it sits only two to three days a month; and that, in fact, the whole board rarely, if ever, meets, even though it is constituted to represent various aspects of the community aside from the experts in medicine and in hospital care?

Can he tell the Legislature what plans he has to improve the functioning of that appeal board so that, in fact, it does give a rational and fair appeal to those medical practitioners who may feel that they have been unjustly dealt with by hospital boards in the province?

Hon. R. T. Potter (Minister of Health): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have already asked this appeal board to give us a report bringing us up to date on what they have accomplished in the past year and offering any suggestions they might have for improving the services. When I have this, then we will direct them as to what we feel should be done to speed up the process.

SCHOOL BUDGETS

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A question of the Minister of Education who is just taking his place:

Is it correctly reported that the minister has indicated that the overwhelming support for the position taken by the Scarborough teachers in relation, not to the ceilings on government expenditures, but in the reduction of education quality, may in fact change the decision of the ceilings imposed by the minister in the coming budget year? Is it possible that one of those changes would not necessarily change the amount voted by the Legislature in support of an individual board but, in fact, return the freedom to an individual board to establish its own level of education quality?

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is speculating on various things that could or could not happen. I think the realities of the situation at the minute are that a petition has been presented to me by a group of teachers, signed by a number of people who said they would rather have a $5 reduction than a $20 reduction in their taxes this year. This kind of input, this kind of opinion, will go into the decision-making process as it concerns the 1974 ceilings which are under consideration at the present time. What the policy will be in that regard I can't tell the hon. member now. It will be announced in due course.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Is it the minister's policy that it cannot even be considered that the right of a local school board to establish its own quality of education might be and, in fact, should be returned to it without the minister unilaterally deciding what that quality level should be for every board in the province?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, certainly anything, at any time, can be considered. If that is an opinion that is being put forward it would certainly be considered. I understand that position has been put to the committee on the costs of education.

As the hon. member knows, one of its terms of reference was to study the effects of the ceilings on local school boards and on their autonomy. I chatted with Mr. McEwan, the chairman of that committee, the other day to ask him if, in fact, they were doing this. He said that they were and that they would be reporting some time in the summer or, at the latest, early fall on what they found in regard to the ceilings on school boards, the effect of them on their local autonomy and what the committee, as a group, would recommend to us. That study will be a very interesting thing for us to have, as we formulate policy in this regard.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Did the minister meet last night at his office in Agincourt, I think, with the representatives of the teachers in Scarborough to receive the petition and arguments? Was it last evening?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Four of the teachers in Scarborough came in during my regular office hours and met with me and presented me with copies of the petition.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary: The minister will know that in the various ridings in Scarborough, ranging from about 73 per cent in Scarborough West to, I think, something like 85 per cent in Scarborough Centre, of the 30,000 people polled—if memory serves me; I'll get the petition upstairs—the response was overwhelming in that range to a wish to allow Scarborough some exercise of freedom in the quality of education in the system. Against that the minister's executive assistant mentioned hundreds of phone calls. Can the minister give us documentation of his statistical evidence as compared to that which has been submitted by the teachers, whose case seems to be overpowering?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, as to the statements concerning phone calls and letters that we get, I'll be glad to send the hon. member copies of a lot of the letters which I have received if he wishes, but I'm sure he probably doesn't want those.

Mr. Lewis: No, I would be pleased to see them. All of them.

Hon. Mr. Wells: We get many phone calls. What the petition illustrates is the fact that out of 22,000 people who signed, many people signed a petition that had as its basis the fact that they would take a $6 or $5 reduction in taxes rather than a $20 reduction.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Is that a snow job?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The petition didn't say that they would pay more taxes. The implication was that they were getting something back anyway but why not take less?

Mr. Lewis: Oh, yes, the petition was made clear. Amazingly straightforward.

Hon. Mr. Wells: In a lot of—

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): There were, in fact, two different petitions.

Mr. Lewis: I am going to table it under petitions as a matter of fact.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I have read the petition. A lot of people interpret it as they are not getting anything now anyway, and they'll get a $5 reduction from last year rather than a $20 reduction.

Mr. Foulds: That's exactly right. They didn't get anything.

Hon. Mr. Wells: That is what they have signed. But, as I am just saying, it is strange to me that since this happened four or five people a night would phone me and tell me that they signed it but that they didn't mean it; or that they signed it but they still agree with what we are doing.

Mr. Lewis: Four or five a night? That's very impressive.

Hon. Mr. Wells: In fact some people phoned me—

Mr. Foulds: That's 35 people.

Mr. Lewis: How many calls does the minister normally get of an evening?

Hon. Mr. Wells: In fact, some people phoned me and said they really didn't want to sign it but they were afraid that their kids would be discriminated against which I think is a very—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That is really unworthy of the minister.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is certainly adding to his credibility.

Mr. MacDonald: Is he suggesting Scarborough is a police state?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Whether or not my friend thinks that that is a worthy statement I am telling him that that is a statement that was made to me not by one but by many people.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the minister suggesting Scarborough is a police state?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Let me say that I don't necessarily agree with that statement.

Mr. Foulds: Out of 2,200!

Mr. Lewis: There won't be a Tory left in Scarborough, come 1975, not even the Minister without Portfolio (Mrs. Birch).

Hon. Mr. Wells: I don't necessarily agree with that statement, but it certainly is one that is made along with a lot of others. I want to point out also to this House that I did my own survey in my riding and 77 per cent of those who responded said they were in favour of the ceilings.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: What was the number responding?

Mr. Foulds: That was the minister's riding association.

Mr. Lewis: That was the Progressive Conservative Association in Scarborough North.

Hon. Mr. Wells: That was from the people of Scarborough North in my riding who get a regular newsletter from me four, five or six times a year.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Who pays for that?

Mr. Foulds: At whose expense?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I pay for that except, as my hon. friend knows, every member of this House is entitled to send out one mailing to his constituents also.

Mr. Lewis: Does the minister use the frank on the other four or five?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I want to say to the hon. member that the teachers who were in and presented the petition to me last night made it very clear that they were not opposed to the policy of ceilings on educational spending. I think that that point must be made. They say they are not opposed to the ceilings. It is the question of the degree or the amount or the effect of those ceilings.

Mr. Foulds: And this ministry!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It is a question of the minister dictating to them.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'd like to read for the hon. Leader of the Opposition, the letter that I have from his board of education which accepts our ceiling policies and has set its budget.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wells: As a matter of fact, if he would like to hear it, I will read it. As he knows the Brant County Board of Education—

An hon. member: Read it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must point out the answer is approaching the length of a ministerial statement.

An hon. member: There is no answer.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The members seem to wish it. All I'm pointing out is, as my friend knows, the situation in Scarborough is further complicated by the Metro arrangement. The commission that we have now appointed is going to get to the root of that particular problem.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is discriminating against Scarborough, which he represents.

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT DEVELOPMENT

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development.

Is it specific government policy that the farmer-owners of land that are affected by legislation brought down yesterday will receive no compensation for the fact that they are giving up in perpetuity their development rights? If that is the case, how can the government justify this relatively small group of landowners paying the cost for the preservation of an undoubted important natural resource, rather than all the people of the province contributing to the cost, which would obviously be the fairer method?

An hon. member: A good question.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): Mr. Speaker, the legislation introduced yesterday in no way takes away from anyone any rights they have.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: Then how can the minister specifically say—if by regulation of the provincial government or the Niagara Escarpment Commission or eventually a municipality the zoning regulations are such that the development rights are lost in perpetuity—the landowners, particularly the farmers involved, will be compensated for the loss of those rights?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I will repeat that the legislation in no way adds to or detracts from the legal rights of the farmers or anybody else affected by the legislation. Those rights have not changed.

Mr. Singer: Why doesn't the minister answer the question?

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Supplementary: The minister said that nothing had changed. The government has frozen the whole Bruce Peninsula, and it's totally unacceptable to any of the councils up there. They haven't been consulted at all.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Sargent: It is very important, Mr. Speaker, that I get the answer to this question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may ask a question.

Mr. Sargent: The question is this: In view of the fact that it is totally unacceptable to any of the five townships there and they will not go along with the plan, will the minister consider putting a freeze on half a mile from the escarpment and not the whole peninsula? They cannot move; they are totally frozen for three years more. They have been frozen for three years now, sir, and the government gives them another three-year freeze, and we will not take it.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, there is no freeze of any such length involved. It will take approximately three years to have the total plan developed. In the meantime, starting from the moment that the legislation presumably is passed in this House, the minister will have the capacity to issue development permits so the word "freeze" will not be appropriate.

Insofar as picking particular boundaries, I, for one, and I am sure the Treasurer (Mr. White), at this moment simply cannot say. I thought that the explanation made to the members yesterday was clear that the commission itself will prepare the plan, that this will involve total participation and, as I said, whether it be amended by half a mile, a mile, or a foot is something we simply can't assess today.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The minister says no freeze is placed on the land, which is correct, but if your development control policy renders a farmer's land unacceptable for change of use, is there then any contemplation of public recompense for that particular piece of land; for that farmer?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Not generally, particularly if he is at the moment zoned for agricultural purposes. I can't at the moment picture where a perpetuation of that zoning would involve compensation.

Mr. Good: I am talking about land which is presently zoned for a higher and better use, or surrounding land which is presently being used for a higher and better use, and your developmental control policies render adjacent land not acceptable for further development. Is there any reimbursement for the person whose developmental rights are being denied under this?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: This is really a question of law, Mr. Speaker. It would be a question for the courts themselves, to assess whether or not the application of the control had taken away the rights that were subject to compensation under the law. The person wouldn't, as I would judge it under the legislation, get the same compensation that he would, for example, if his property were expropriated or taken by way of easement or any other public act of authority.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, the minister assured me and the House that we would have representation on this commission, but 40 per cent of the whole package is the Bruce Peninsula and we have only one vote in 17. That is not fair representation. Grey and Bruce is 50 per cent of the deal, but Bruce is 40 per cent of the deal, and we have only one member on that 17-member board and the minister assured me we would have fair representation. Furthermore, while I'm on my feet, sir, they have taken both shorelines, they have made a complete freeze of the land north of Owen Sound. We want that changed—

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, on the last question I am quite sure that the commission at its hearings will hear not only from the hon. member but from others who have strong feelings as to where the delineation of the boundaries of that plan should be. Insofar as representation on the commission is concerned, Grey and Bruce will each have a nominee. No, the four counties get four and the four regions get four more. Beyond that, there are another eight which will be appointed—

Mr. Sargent: Government appointments.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Government appointments but the members can be assured that these particular—

Mr. Reid: That they will all be Tory.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: —appointments will be representative of the whole spectrum of those affected by the plan itself.

Mr. Foulds: Who is going to be chairman—Barry Lowes?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition. The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: I have a number of questions of the policy minister on natural resources. Question No. 1: Where is the statistical documentation, where are the tables, where are the facts on which the task force based its estimate in excess of $3 billion, to acquire the land immediately adjacent to the face of the escarpment?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I don't know, Mr. Speaker, because they are not, as I recall it, in the report itself; but I can speak to Mr. Clasky and find out what he and the task force view as the basis for that and report to the hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, what does the minister mean by "he doesn't know"? As the minister in charge of this whole process after the last while—of a process that has taken five years, of a figure in excess of $3 billion in that report, on which the major policy assumption of that report was based—how is it the minister can't tell us in this House how they arrived at the estimate of $3 billion now? Where is the material and why wasn't it attached to the report? Really, it is absolutely unbelievable.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member is so cross but I will find—

Mr. Lewis: I am very cross.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: —for him where those figures were developed.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary: It is interesting that after the whole study is over he will find how they arrived at the figure on which the assumption was based. Is it not true, I ask the minister, that in Gertler's estimate the acquisition of 90,000 acres would involve an average of $300 an acre? And is it not true, I ask the minister, that on the basis of the minister's own report the government's acquisitions over the last five years have amounted to an average of $300 an acre? And is it not true that the estimate of over $3 billion would mean an average of over $3,000 an acre? And is it not finally true that that figure is deliberately inflated and distorted in order to allow the government to say, "Public ownership second, developmental controls first," so that the private developers can continue to influence the government? That's the basis of the argument.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I will find out where Mr. Clasky and the task force obtained their figures.

Mr. MacDonald: He has to find out.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary: does the minister not realize that the $250 to $500 million which he posits in his report could in fact purchase for the public sector almost all the escarpment allowing him to place development controls purely on the urban fringe? And why would the minister allow the Niagara Escarpment Commission to be subject to individual developer pressure for private use when he knows that over the last five years, public use of the escarpment has always been sacrificed to private use? Why has the minister done this again to the escarpment?

Interjections by hon. members.

AREAS AFFECTED BY PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Lewis: All right, I have another question relating to the Planning and Development Act. Which areas of southern Ontario are designated to fall under the Planning and Development Act as tabled in the House yesterday?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Well, the Niagara Escarpment Planning area—

Mr. Lewis: Is specifically excluded, by the way.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: —is one which is under a similar form of control. At the moment the parkway belt is the only one.

Mr. Lewis: All right. The parkway belt is the only one.

Can the minister possibly explain to the House why, for example, the entire Cedarwood planning area and all of Haldimand-Norfolk planning area are not under the planning and development principles which he gave us as his great revelation about land use control for southern Ontario? Why are they excluded?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: One of the reasons is, Mr. Speaker, that the legislation required for the implementation of Cedarwood is, I guess, over a year old. It was developed within a different policy framework, namely, ultimately, that of purchase or the application of the Expropriation Act. The Planning and Development Act is not an Expropriation Act, it's a control Act. So, although you could end up at any period of time with any piece of land with the same result, the two approaches are very different. I would think that the Planning and Development Act would be the one to use where the public are actually taking total possession and ownership of an area.

Mr. Sargent: A supplementary.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): By way of a supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary, isn't it now the case, as I understand it, that you are buying lands on the basis of people's willingness to sell?

I want to understand this; is the minister saying that until today the most dramatic venture in acquisition of land for development in the area slightly east of Metro, the whole Cedarwood airport area, is not to be governed by the Planning and Development Act which the minister has brought in as his showcase for land use in southern Ontario? Does it make any sense to him that that would be so?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I don't think there's any conflict, Mr. Speaker. I think that the development there can be governed, but it starts from a different base and that base is total public ownership of a specified area.

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Now, for example, I can picture the two legislative arms, either through the purchase and expropriation line or through the Planning and Development Act, being mixed in other parts of Ontario. I can't speculate but one could picture such a mixture in Haldimand-Norfolk, for instance, and perhaps in other parts.

Mr. Sargent: A supplementary.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York Centre was up with a supplementary.

Mr. Deacon: A further supplementary: Would the minister not agree that the new plan of providing for control of development would be preferable to the method of expropriating and seizing from people properties that they've held in their families for years and therefore uprooting them? Would he not feel that this other way is much preferable—the way he announced yesterday?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Obviously that is the basis of yesterday's policy announcement, in that the government felt that public ownership of such vast areas was simply not what we would want or the public would want, either from the administrative or cost point of view.

Mr. Deacon: Why not change North Pickering over to this new plan? It would save grief and concern on the part of many hundreds of people.

Mr. Lewis: They at least would have public access to public appeal.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, the conception of that particular new town, and it's the first new town in the history of the province, was that we should have total public ownership of the land. Whether or not further new towns can be developed under the aegis of the new legislation, I can't debate; but I can see how, in its more sophisticated stages, the kind of planning that is made appropriate by the Planning and Development Act could come very close to doing the kind of thing that purchase and expropriation has been used for in that particular case.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Since the new airport site and the new town of Cedarwood surrounding it has been deliberately excluded from the Planning and Development Act, does that mean the government is also excluding all public consultations—since that was a key factor in the Planning Act?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: In relation to Cedarwood?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce, a supplementary.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, with regard to this department, does the minister really know what is going on? Does he know that they ordered St. Edmunds to build a sewage lagoon last year, that they bought the land, sir, and now the department has stopped them from building it? We have this whole new development up there and everything is tied up.

Will the minister check into it and find out what the hell is going on?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: I have two or three further questions.

Mr. Sargent: Will he check into it and see what's going on?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sargent: All right.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: A question of the same minister: Can the minister tell me why Gertler's plan for a series of parks throughout the escarpment, which was one of the underlying justifications originally, has been totally abandoned by the task force on government policy?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Well, I'm forced to speculate here to a degree, but I would say this: The background against which Prof. Gertler worked related to the law as it existed at that time—a very limited system of zoning and land controls with expropriation or purchase being the only available tools to get that kind of tight control that was needed.

Now I think that the reasons why—

Mr. Cassidy: That isn't true. That is not true.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence:—we find this change is that the philosophy of development control, which is a new philosophy insofar as this province is concerned—

Mr. Lewis: It is new here.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: It's new in North America.

Mr. Lewis: It is subject to the same abuse as anything else. It is not the appropriate route.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, that is a question which I presume will be debated; but in North America, so far as I know, development control is a new technique and it has certain virtues. Those virtues allow us to approach the Niagara Escarpment in a modified way as compared with the philosophy and weapons that were available to Mr. Gertler when he was writing his report.

Mr. Lewis: What role will the Ontario Municipal Board have, if any, in relation to the Niagara Escarpment or the Parkway Belt; or has the minister excluded it entirely from all policy-making—from all routes of appeal?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I think that, if not the only, the basic exclusion will relate to any right to overrule the commission's plan when developed.

Mr. Lewis: So, in fact, the minister has excluded it—

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: No.

Mr. Lewis: —at the key level.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: No. There will be many, many variations of land use, zoning, planning, within that vast area that it will in no way impinge upon or relate to the philosophies involved in the legislation and planning programme that was developed yesterday. Those changes in use and activities, other than those which would inhibit the policies developed in the plan, will follow the normal procedures.

Mr. MacDonald: A supplementary—

Mr. Singer: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Surely the minister can't mean, in view of what he said a few moments ago, that where development control is being exercised the OMB is going to be allowed to substitute its opinion for a particular development control decision? Is that what he means?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I will give an example, Mr. Speaker. If, under development control, a particular piece of land, from the point of view of the commission in its ultimate planning or the minister during the period in which he is issuing permits, is satisfactory, shall we say, for industrial use, whether it be a small factory or a cement plant or something like that, I can picture that uses within that general category will follow the ordinary pattern of changes as by-laws, zoning bylaws in particular, are changed from day to day.

The only impingement comes when either the minister, under a development permit, or the plan, when it is ultimately on, clearly and obviously conflicts with the proposed change in use. There, of course, the OMB will not be entitled to countervail the plan or the minister's development permit.

Mr. Singer: By way of another supplementary: If the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are very few moments remaining and actually private members have not had an opportunity. There have been a great number of supplementaries on this topic. I think we should let the next member speak. The hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: A supplementary: As I read the Act, it envisages extensive consultations with the local municipalities following which the information gleaned by those consultations will be dealt with by the cabinet and the decision made. Am I correct in interpreting that as meaning the OMB is completely out of that process? Or is the minister saying that the OMB plays its normal role within that process?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: The OMB plays its normal role except that where a change in use—

Mr. Singer: Has been authorized, sure.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: —or permission comes forward and triggers the application of the policy in relation to the Niagara Escarpment then, of course, it follows the policy line of the commission.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Singer: And if the minister lets his good friend build a glue factory there is no appeal. That is what it means.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Scarborough West have further questions?

Mr. Lewis: Well, yes, but not today.

Mr. Speaker: We have had quite sufficient supplementaries. The hon. Minister of Natural Resources has the answer to a question previously asked.

PIT AND QUARRY REHABILITATION PAYMENTS

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, the member for Scarborough West asked a question several days ago with respect to payments for rehabilitation under the Pits and Quarries Control Act. I am sending over to him a summary of claims and allowances which lists 34 operators who have applied to date and the amount of payments which total $147,586.70.

A note of explanation, Mr. Speaker: While the amount of claims totals over $780,000, the applicant is required to maintain on deposit an amount equal to $100 per acre still requiring rehabilitation. He can claim only the amount of money in his account which exceeds this minimum.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker, to this minister: When is the minister going to move in on the 13 pits and quarries noted by the Clasky task force as inappropriately mining the escarpment for aggregates? When is he going to close them down, move them and provide whatever compensation is needed, notwithstanding the clear conflict of interest within his ministry which emerged in the preparation of the report when the only dissenting vote to closing down the pits and quarries came from the representative of the Ministry of Natural Resources? When is he going to move on these 13 pits and quarries?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, we'll take these into consideration when the Act is passed and approved by this House.

Mr. Lewis: Sure, we have a lot of faith in what will be done.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. David.

AREAS AFFECTED BY PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT ACT

Mrs. M. Scrivener (St. David): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Provincial Treasurer.

Mr. Cassidy: He came in just for the member.

Mrs. Scrivener: Mr. Speaker, in a report in one of this morning's newspapers about the unveiling yesterday of the ministerial bills and their impact on the province, an article was published, entitled, "Government Wants the Power to Push Municipal Planning," which is contrary to my understanding of what was contained in the Act for planning and development. It says, "The Ontario government is determined—"

Mr. Speaker: Is there a question coming?

Mrs. Scrivener: Yes, there is, Mr. Speaker. The wording in this is very strongly misleading to me. It uses words like the government "is determined" there will be planning in the province and that it will "use its power"—

Mr. Foulds: The question is, does the minister agree?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may not make a speech; she may direct her question to the minister.

Mrs. Scrivener: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not making a speech; I am reading—

Mr. Cassidy: A good imitation, then.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a speech.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: She may direct a question only.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mrs. Scrivener: Mr. Speaker, my question is a request for interpretation from the Treasurer.

Mr. Singer: Great interpreter!

Mrs. Scrivener: It is my impression that this bill will—

Mr. Foulds: There are a few interrogation words like why, how and when.

Mrs. Scrivener: My impression is that this bill will provide the authority for the Treasurer to—

Mr. Singer: Yes, here comes the speech, and the question is—

Mrs. Scrivener: —designate areas for planning and study. Is this true, or is it—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: What kind of a question is that?

Mr. Foulds: Very good. "Is" is an interrogative word.

Mrs. Scrivener: —possible that the minister will wait for municipalities themselves to initiate the requests for designation as study areas?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a breach of the use of the question period. The minister may respond if he wishes.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): That's the best question I've heard from the Tory benches for a long time. That's a good question.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Foulds: That shows how bad they normally are.

Hon. Mr. White: And now I'm able to inform the House—

Mr. Deans: That just proves what we have always said.

Hon. Mr. White: And now I am able to inform the House that the hon. member's impression—

Mr. Lewis: And you are here to fill the breach.

Hon. Mr. White: —is quite correct and the news article is misleading.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa East.

DISMISSAL OF TEACHERS IN CORNWALL

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education. He is no doubt familiar with the Cornwall problem, the firing of the two teachers. What—

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Speech!

Mr. Roy: —is the minister doing about it? Is he looking into the Cornwall situation?

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): They shouldn't only be fired; they should be jailed.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): The answer!

Mr. Singer: Did we get that in Hansard?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I received telegrams from the people in Cornwall. I dropped them all a note yesterday and explained to them that it was within the prerogatives of the board to take whatever action that board wished, under legislation that applies. There are certain redresses open to the people who had suffered because of the actions of that board. One of those people is entitled to a board of reference if he wishes to ask the minister to appoint such a board. The other person is not so entitled because he is on a probationary contract. If he consults his lawyer, there are perhaps some legal procedures that he could take if he wishes.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, if I might just ask one supplementary. In view of the explosive nature of that situation, and the discriminatory aspect of the firing, does the minister not feel that he should intervene and not leave it up to the law or the lawyers of the school board?

An hon. member: Who's playing politics now?

Mr. Roy: Doesn't the minister feel he should intervene?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I feel that in view of the kind of settlement that was reached there the responsibility rests on the shoulders of the Stormont-Glengarry and Dundas Board of Education and the law that now pertain to those people must apply.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the fact that there has never been any rebuke against teachers who advocated not providing a French-speaking school in that school board, does the minister not feel that reprisals are being taken against francophone teachers in that case?

Mr. Lewis: Not to mention the member for Renfrew South's reprisals.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to answer that question because I have no way of knowing whether this is by way of reprisal or what—

Mr. Roy: Well, why doesn't he look into it?

Hon. Mr. Wells: —the particular situation is. All I'd like my friends opposite to answer, for once, for me in this House is whether—

Mr. Singer: The minister has not answered yet.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —they really believe in the autonomy of local school boards in this province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North, a supplementary?

Mr. Good: No, not a supplementary, a new question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur, a supplementary.

Mr. Foulds: Does the minister have the power to refuse the board of reference if it is requested of him?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: Well, then, don't talk to us about autonomy self-pretentiously.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, the minister can refuse a board of reference. But I have already indicated in the letters that I wrote in this regard that I'd look very favourably on any requests for a board of reference in this particular case. I am sure that such a board can provide a good impartial hearing if anybody has been unjustly treated in this particular situation.

Mr. Cassidy: What a magnanimous concession! The minister saves only one teacher as well.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, what does the minister, mean by autonomy of local boards? There are no local school boards any more.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wells: That's the member's opinion.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

GREAT LAKES FLOOD DAMAGE

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development, regarding the citizens' loans for lakeshore protective devices: Will the government be involved in giving any technical advice or approval before the loans are granted?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: We are not necessarily involved under the legislation; but even before the Act came into force our policy has been to provide whatever technical advice and assistance we can. If the member has people who are concerned, I'll see what we can make available either within government or without.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: The time for questions has expired.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, as a matter of courtesy to you, Mr. Speaker, and the minister, I might advise that I am not satisfied with the response of the minister and I intend to raise it at the adjournment of the House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will, of course, give me a proper notice to this effect prior to 4 o'clock.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

TRILEVEL CONFERENCE

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I have several statements here which were given by ministers to the trilevel conference in Peterborough. Is this the appropriate time to table them? If so, I would like to do so and make some very brief remarks.

Mr. Speaker, members of the Legislature will recall that I announced on May 10 that the first Ontario trilevel conference was to be held in Peterborough on May 28 and 29. I should like to report briefly to the Legislature on the outcome of this meeting.

The conference was co-chaired by the hon. Ron Basford, Minister of State for Urban Affairs; Mayor D. G. Newman of the town of Whitby, who was chairman of the municipal liaison committee, and myself. Ontario acted as host for the conference and provided a conference staff in co-operation with the other two levels of government.

This was the first provincial trilevel conference to be held in Canada. Its purpose was to consider matters of housing, transportation and environmental management in relation to Ontario's development strategy and the financial implications of these matters for each level of government. My opening remarks to the conference and the background paper on Ontario's urban development strategy were tabled on May 28. I should now like to table the remaining Ontario documents. These are the remarks by the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Grossman) on housing, the remarks by the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development on environmental management and my own concluding remarks.

In my opinion, and according to the views expressed by the conference participants, the conference was a major success. Each level of government now enjoys a heightened awareness of the need for co-ordination and co-operation in the implementation of Ontario's Design for Development programme, and enjoys a better appreciation of each government's role. We are encouraged by the federal minister's stated support for our urban strategy, but the extent and manner of federal financial and jurisdictional participation in our development strategy is yet to be well defined.

Several suggestions for continuing liaison and co-ordination were tentatively agreed to during the conference. It is our intention to assess and probably confirm these suggestions in conjunction with our municipal partners at the next meeting of the provincial-municipal liaison committee.

Mr. Speaker, we realize that the people of Ontario will benefit from the efforts of these three levels of government to co-ordinate the implementation of our development strategy. In our view, the Ontario trilevel conference is a noteworthy step in this direction. Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Clement presented the annual report of the Ontario Racing Commission for the period ending Dec. 31, 1972.

Hon. Mr. McNie tabled the report on organization of the Ontario Educational Communications Authority, prepared by Price Waterhouse Associates at the request of the board of directors, and also the audited financial reports of the Colleges of Applied Arts and Technology for the year 1971-1972.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Orders of the day.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Roy: Let's get some decent answers to our questions.

CORPORATIONS TAX ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves second reading of Bill 94, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, has the Treasurer any comments to make on the bill before we go forward with the debate?

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I think perhaps I should take a minute and recall to the members' minds the several principles of this bill, one being that we are doubling the capital tax from one-tenth of one per cent to one-fifth of one per cent. I remind the hon. members that this puts us at the same level as the capital tax in Quebec. It also permits us to realize another $33 million in revenue without adding that entire net cost to our industrial sector, the reason being that this capital tax is deductible from profits before corporation income tax is reckoned, and so a fraction of 40 per cent, I think it is, is offset by savings in federal corporate income tax.

I think it is entirely reasonable to increase this particular tax, having in mind, for instance, that the proceeds from these additional revenues are being expended on additional municipal grants which in turn will be used to decrease local property taxes. The estimation is that 43 per cent of total property taxes are paid by the business sector, so if one takes that proportion of the additional $440 million in grants—or I think perhaps more accurately the $182 million in new grants—one will see a very substantial saving to the private sector which is offset by certain of the changes that we are making here, the most significant of which in terms of tax revenue is probably the doubling of the capital tax.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Those words should be etched in marble.

Hon. Mr. White: The additional retail sales tax paid by the private sector is in similar proportions and will no doubt amount to very substantial amounts of money also.

At any rate, the endeavour is made in this and other bills to maintain more or less the same tax load on the corporations of Ontario. I myself have been determined not to add unduly to their costs of production at the very time when we are sailing into troubled waters. With the United Kingdom going into the Common Market; with Washington showing renewed signs of protectionism; with certain of our foreign markets in doubt, I was absolutely determined not to jeopardize Canadian industry. Between 80 and 90 per cent of which is located here in Ontario insofar as exports are concerned, by adding to their costs and therefore lessening our competitive position in world markets.

So I think this is an eminently fair and sensible move and I invite the members of the Legislature to support it.

Secondly, there has in the past been an avenue for tax avoidance with respect to royalty payments or managerial management fees paid to parent companies in the United States and this bill seems to come to grips with that. The federal government indeed has such a tax, which is applied to the foreign owners as profits are withdrawn from the country, as payments are made to the parent company elsewhere. Because of our constitutional constraint we are not able to levy tax on the foreign company itself and so we are, in order to parallel the federal principle, required to apply the tax to the corporation operating here in Ontario.

There have been certain complaints, I am frank to say, from those businesses affected, but I have satisfied myself in conversations with my own officials and other experts in the field that this tax, which will generate $5 million, and perhaps something more than that, will not be unfair to the business sector as a whole, or the affected companies in particular.

At the same time as making this change in rate respecting capital tax, we are altering the application of capital tax so that all industries will be on the same basis. We have inherited a large number of special tax features. The place of business tax on banks, for instance, was retained even though we dropped the place of business tax on the recommendation of select committee several years ago. That seemed to me to be inequitable, if not iniquitous.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister had better save those strong words for—

Hon. Mr. White: Well, it was leaving a tax on the big fat bankers and perhaps it was politically popular, but really there was no decent rationale for it. Likewise, we've inherited from previous generations special taxes on homes and cars, and such like. All of these special taxes are being withdrawn and the flat rate of capital tax is being applied across the board.

Now, sir, these are the principal changes involved. There are a dozen or more alterations of a housekeeping nature, which I will be dealing with, together with the hon. member for London North (Mr. Walker), in his capacity as parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Grossman), when this bill comes into committee of the whole House.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Treasurer's comments have been useful, since the examination of the bill beyond the small increase of the capital tax that he's referred to reveals a collection of small and relatively insignificant changes.

The capital tax that is now being applied across the board in place of a number of smaller impositions and is being increased from one-tenth to one-fifth of one per cent, which the minister refers to as doubling, is still nothing more than a flea bite as far as increase in revenue from the business source is concerned.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, $30 million is a lot of leeway.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: All right. But it's interesting that when we talked about the increase in the retail sales tax as being a 40 per cent increase, the minister would come back and say, "No, it's just from five to seven per cent." So when he increased the capital tax on business from one-tenth of one per cent to one-fifth of one per cent, he refers to it as a doubling. I would agree with the minister that it is a significant amount of money.

To tell the truth, when we look at what is happening in the Parliament of Canada, where once again there is a deep and substantial division as to how corporations are to be taxed, it is obvious that the government of Ontario agrees with the government of Canada that this is the time when we should be fostering industrial and economic expansion based on industry, and not a time when there should be an increase in taxation; even though it would be nice to resort to that revenue to improve the situation of tax increases that have been imposed on the individuals through income tax, sales tax, gas tax, liquor revenues, and so on down the list.

I was also interested in the Treasurer's comments about certain royalty payments and management fees. It is becoming apparent that rather than a slowdown in the transference of authority on the business basis away from Canada and to the United States, or in more general terms, toward foreign owners, just the opposite is in fact taking place.

I'm not sure whether the minister saw the recent report prepared by the Professional Engineers Society of Canada, but they bring to public attention the fact that more and more of management decisions are being made on behalf of Canadian subsidiaries by the American parent; and that this is also true of the professional involvement of engineers and others in Canadian subsidiaries.

So the continuation of the loophole made available through certain royalty payments and management fees is an iniquitous situation and I am glad that the minister is moving toward at least a partial removal of that alternative by foreign owners of Canadian enterprises and subsidiaries. The capital tax itself is something that we can perhaps get more specific information on when the bill goes to committee. I know that the minister has some more specific information available which we can find out about at that time.

There is another provision in Bill 94 having to do with a repeal of an exemption that has been available to certain organizations generally known as fraternal societies which, from the beginning of Canada, have been groups of citizens with common interests banding together with programmes for their own mutual benefit. Usually these came forward as different types of insurance—life insurance and other benefits which, since the very foundation of these societies, have been exempted from the normal taxation procedures.

The bill makes clear, however, that as long as they are non-profit and none of the accrued advantages are returned in the form of dividends to the members, that the exemption still exists, but in fact it means that the exemption will be removed from most of the fraternal societies which have these processes.

I should say to the minister that my colleagues and I have examined those provisions pretty carefully and we have had certain recommendations from the people who are directly affected. I can't help but say, as a matter of fairness, particularly in the cases of some of these fraternal societies, that their executives and administrative officers are very well paid indeed, that they run their businesses out of imposing buildings in certain instances, and that when it becomes apparent that in fact there is a special benefit to a smaller group in the community that this exemption perhaps can no longer be substantiated in all fairness to all the citizens who want to have the benefits of insurance made available to them.

We regret, of course, that this net is going to catch some fraternal organizations and societies which perhaps are not in the same instance and situation as some of the very successful ones that have allowed themselves to grow enormously large indeed and form a very substantial competition to those in the insurance business who do pay the regular taxes and are not subjected to the exemptions that have been available to these societies.

Bill 94 we are prepared to support in principle. We do not feel that the additional capital tax levy is as significant perhaps as the Treasurer thinks it is. However, on balance, we would agree with the contention that under the present economic situation we feel that the expansion of the Canadian economy is essential and that it should not be interfered with through undue and unnecessary taxation changes.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The bill will not provoke, or invoke, or evoke, or any kind of voke, to the same degree of spleen, both sides of the fence as a certain other piece of legislation which you placed through a number of weeks ago. The minister, Mr. Speaker, is a stormy person and reacted rather badly under the continued and prolonged and deserved tirades of that particular debate.

But this matter, the Corporation Tax Act this year, is really so innocuous as to be deserving of slight reproof or not even a great deal of time. It has several headings that I would think are important, the first one being the prohibition of taking moneys out of this country under certain heads—for instance, by way of management fees or rentals, or by way of royalties to non-residents in certain delimited categories. Withholding tax has to be present and the arm's length concept must be operative there, too.

We, of course, can take no exception to that—the five-twelfths that you have designated. I would like to hear from you as to why five-twelfths, not to get into any numbers game—

Hon. Mr. White: That's parallel with the federal—

Mr. Lawlor: In line with the federal?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes.

Mr. Lawlor: The next area that should be commented upon is the capital gains features touching mutual funds. The whole problem there of double taxation, and in the case of mutual funds, where the dividend is paid directly or the money is distributed directly through to the shareholders, then the position is that there ought not to be in those contexts a double tax feature, and that as far as the capital gains is concerned it should accrue on the head of the final recipient of the money. Again we can't take exception to that.

The capital tax requires more, as your friend Buckley would say, of a jeweller's eye. It has all kinds of nice features, strange prerequisites. May I read to the House the recommendations made by, if I may say, our committee back in the old days before we mounted stallions that were too rambunctious to carry us, and when we hadn't the horsemanship necessary to stay in equilibrium. I am speaking, of course, of the equine characteristics of the minister, Mr. Speaker. The recommendation in question was:

The present capital and place of business taxes under the Corporations Tax Act be replaced by an annual corporate business tax of fixed amount, payable without any reduction for corporate income taxes by every corporation now liable for the present taxes, and that the amount of the tax be fixed at the rate or rates needed initially to yield approximately the same revenue as derived from the present taxes. And we further recommend that an entry into the—

Hon. Mr. White: May I respond to that for a moment?

The interpretation I place on the words that have just been read by the member for Lakeshore is that the capital tax had an offset with corporation income tax previously, and following the issuance of our report this offset was eliminated and does not now exist. The fact is that the federal government does permit capital tax to be deducted from profit before corporate income tax is reckoned. However, that is not the recommendation in the select committee report, I am perfectly sure.

You see, if a corporation was paying corporate income tax prior to 1969 the capital tax was completely offset.

Mr. Lawlor: I want to be clear. This is a very important point the minister has raised, Mr. Speaker. As I understand the law, up until today for that matter, the tax on paid-up capital of a corporation is deductible from the corporation income tax. Am I correct?

Hon. Mr. White: Let me use a little illustration. When our report was written, if a corporation had a capital tax of $1,000 and the corporate income tax was zero, they paid $1,000 capital tax. If the corporation had—

Mr. Lawlor: Corporation tax of $2,000.

Hon. Mr. White: No, if the capital tax was $1,000 and the corporation income tax was zero, the corporation was liable for $1,000 capital tax. If on the other hand the capital tax was $1,000 and the corporate income tax was $2,000, a total of $2,000 was paid. There was a 100 per cent offset. I feel quite sure, although I haven't studied that section of our select committee report in recent years, that the recommendation was aimed at eliminating that 100 per cent offset, which in fact was done.

Mr. Lawlor: So I take it as things presently stand that in effect this tax is over and above the corporate income tax and in no way deductible from the corporate income tax as far as the province is concerned?

Hon. Mr. White: At the present time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is really second reading, and we don't want to get into debate.

Mr. Lawlor: I am going to proceed on the assumption that it is deductible, has been deductible, and continues to be deductible.

Hon. Mr. White: Let us not go down that alley. Please bear with me for 30 seconds only.

Mr. Speaker: I think it would be in order to correct a wrong impression.

Hon. Mr. White: I have explained the situation that prevailed in 1968, and I have mentioned that the offset which was described was eliminated following the issuance of our report.

At the present time, however, the federal government over which we have little control, as you know, does permit the capital tax to be deducted from profit before the corporate income tax is reckoned. In that our corporation income tax legislation parallels, and is very similar to the federal legislation, we permit the same deduction.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, but it's the fault of the big bad wolf that it comes down to, as usual.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): That is true. That is shocking.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, you know, there are some features. It always gives me a bit of a tickle to speak on the side of the great corporations of this country. I don't think they're adequately defended in most instances. This government is a weak-kneed, vacillating, wishy-washy entity that won't even stand up for its friends under the proper circumstances.

How far can you go as a government in power knowing where your best interests come from and knowing what support you can get and not stand with them? There is no sense of loyalty, no sense of deep appreciation from the corporate interests, the banking, the finance houses, everything. It betrays them. It betrays them time out of mind.

A capital tax, increasing on a flat rate basis, is usually a very questionable and even backward type of taxation—and this government has reverted to it time after time. In its sales tax the tendency of the government is increasingly to impose flat rate taxes instead of a graduated feature.

For these reasons the capital tax is really a very unfair tax, if you regard it from many points of view. It's a tax that is applicable to all corporations, as the minister has just indicated—

Hon. Mr. White: I don't think I can stand this!

Mr. Lawlor:—regardless of whether there is any profit in the corporation at all. It's even payable by corporations in a year of loss. Can you imagine afflicting the business community in that particular way?

Secondly, it is based on capital investment and borrowed funds and hits the capital-intensive industries the hardest. This is highly discriminatory. It should be in the Bill of Rights as to giving proper recognition to human decency. Imagine a government of this kind, totally allied to capital-intensive industries, always at its behest and the best friend it ever had, and here it is imposing a tax of this particular kind, promulgating it and perpetuating it. Actually, the Treasurer is sitting over there smiling like a cat sipping milk.

Hon. Mr. White: Just so Hansard will not misinterpret my smiles.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, I'm on my feet. I've heard enough from this minister today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The member for Lakeshore has the floor.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, I always found that irony kind of goes over, or underneath or around this House somehow. If you can't lambaste the government from one point of view, I would think that there's some merit in doing it from another. And where you fall from grace—oh, well—figure it out.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): The member has got to get a speech out of this somehow.

Mr. Lawlor: Then, capital-intensive industries are, of course, not necessarily the most profitable; nevertheless they are the ones who bear the brunt of this kind of tax and the less capital-intensive do not.

Finally, since the tax is deductible from income tax those corporations which pay the highest corporation income tax would pay the least capital tax. A small business paying corporation tax at the minimum rate of 25 per cent would be able to save only 25 per cent of its capital tax by this rule, but a big corporation at the full 51 per cent rate will save 51 per cent of the tax.

Why should a struggling business with no profits pay any corporation tax? Why not beef up the corporations' profits tax instead? But then we really find out which way the worm turns and in the full recognition of where our friends are.

In a tax, which I said was as innocuous as this is, which raises so little revenue—so little revenue as to be a flea bite; so little revenue as to have, as the minister himself admits, no impact whatsoever upon the business community with regard to paying taxes—then we can hardly take issue with the way he's handling it. I'm not quite sure why the minister taxes banks at two-fifths of one per cent and other corporations at one-fifth. The rationale of that, I suppose, must be at least in part to supply the revenue that was otherwise forthcoming from the special taxes imposed on banks together with, I suppose, the place of business tax.

Regarding the delimitation of the taxes and the knocking out—this is the fourth area of some importance—of the special taxes that have previously been applied or that continued to be, for instance, in 1966, when the Smith report was issued, the total amount of money forthcoming from all banking institutions in this province with the special tax was $49,000. They wouldn't have to do very much in terms of beefing up to derive a little revenue from that particular source.

On the situation with respect to railways and telegraph companies, out of the telegraph companies, the grand total received in 1966 was $15,000; express companies, I think, the total sum there was $22,000. There is good reason, to which no one could take exception, for eliminating and getting rid of those archaic and really very anachronistic taxes that have been imposed. The problem is, why have they kicked around this long? It's like a parade of latter day saints; we come in here at this time of the day, the report has been down for many years but I suppose better late than never. Again, the Smith report recommended that it be placed on an annual corporate business tax setup, so that no revenue would be lost from that particular source.

The only other tax of significance which is mentioned in the course of this bill is the premium tax on insurance companies.

I would like to learn from the minister's reply to second reading what the revenue potentials are from that particular source.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the bill ought to go to committee. There are, as usual, in these intricate, tricky tax bills—particularly in the corporate tax field—areas which at least I would like to explore for my own delectation at a little greater depth.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I would like to agree to that.

Mr. Lawlor: That is agreeable? Fine.

Hon. Mr. White: I think it is fairer to members of the House to let these details be explored in committee. I agree with the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will direct that later.

Mr. Lawlor: I would ask that on some occasion in your leisure time you read the book by Kierkegaard on "The Nature of Irony." I know it is a tricky business; it's a subtle thing, but if I'm not going to attack legislation frontally, then I just slip around behind.

In this particular case a slight kick in the rear with respect to legislation of this kind probably does as much good as a lone voice like mine can do in a place like this; as much good as moving in from the front, you know, as though you were Jackie Robinson. If such is the case, there is a kicked rear because it's insufficient. One could blot them out and go on to the business of where you can really find your tax revenue vis-à-vis corporations.

I trust my friend from Ottawa Centre may launch into that arena. The weariness that assails me at the present time with the overwhelming weight of this government; the fact that I feel that my speech is as innocuous as the legislation itself, all impel me to sit down forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Waterloo North.

Hon. Mr. White: May I beg the forbearance of the House to say that I will indeed try to read that book. Had the hon. member accompanied his irony with a small sneer or something I might have caught on to the joke.

Mr. Lawlor: Then it would have lacked one of the real elements of irony.

Hon. Mr. White: Now let me say—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. White: —retrospectively that I recognize the irony in the member's debates on the retail sales tax legislation.

Mr. Lawlor: Come off it. The minister is being ironical now.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon member for Waterloo North.

Mr. Good: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to direct a few remarks to section 18 of the Act, which deals with the amendments which will affect fraternal societies.

At the outset let me say that I am not a member of a fraternal society and can therefore talk without any conflict of interest. I have had a case presented to me, Mr. Speaker, from one of the 50 or so fraternal societies in the province, which I believe deal in some form or other of insurance programmes. They have been exempt under existing legislation from the two per cent tax on premiums. According to the amendments in this Act, as I read the principles here, a contract written after Jan. 1, 1974, will no longer enjoy that exemption.

First of all I would like to ask the minister to explain how much money is involved here and why he has had to pick on fraternal societies to increase revenue of the province?

I understand, upon reading the amendments, that mutual benefit societies will continue to enjoy the exemption, whereas fraternal societies will not. Maybe he could explain the difference between a fraternal society and a mutual benefit society, the latter of which will continue to enjoy the exemptions.

Mr. Speaker, when we look at the work of fraternal societies we find that the sole purpose for them engaging in insurance programmes is so that benefits derived from their programmes may accrue to various charities.

We will deal first basically with the Lutheran Life Insurance Society, which is a fraternal society carried on within all branches of the Lutheran Church in North America. I understand that the US programmes enjoy a similar tax advantage as have those in Ontario, up to the present time.

The bill suggests that after Jan. 1, 1974, this two per cent tax will apply on premiums paid through a fraternal society. The philosophy is a little difficult to understand when we realize that many of the monetary payments made to other programmes within, say the Lutheran Church—I am thinking of things such as Lutherwood, which is a home for boys in the Waterloo county area—have government support. This home has had government support from the province in its building programme. It gets a per diem allowance from the government for the residents of the home, and also receives benefits from the Lutheran Life fraternal programme.

If the fraternal benefits must cease because of this additional burden of tax, then of course payments to homes such as Lutherwood will also cease and will put an increased burden on the government.

I am a firm believer that many programmes can be carried on in the private sector with the co-operation of government at much less cost than if they are placed completely within government jurisdiction. I would ask the minister to reconsider his plan, perhaps give us some reason why he has used this method.

Hon. Mr. White: Well the hon. member's leader just started it. His leader said it was all right 10 minutes ago.

Mr. Good: All right, I am asking the Treasurer to justify his position. Perhaps there is a good reason for it. As yet we haven't heard—

Hon. Mr. White: I am quoting the hon. member's leader.

Mr. Good: I don't think that he was all supportive of it.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: No.

Mr. Good: He said perhaps there is a reason.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I credited the government for having taken this initiative.

Mr. Good: Perhaps there is a good reason why the Treasurer has chosen to add an additional tax burden on fraternal societies. Surely there must be other agencies and corporations within the province who could better afford to replenish the barren provincial tax bucket at the present time than fraternal societies. They are carrying on what I think is a good work in deriving certain sources of funds from their insurance programmes.

I have mentioned some examples and I think there are about 50 agencies within the province who make up the Canadian Fraternal Society Association and who are affected.

If there is an adequate explanation, I would like to hear it. But personally I think the minister is grasping at straws, and this is my personal opinion, when he has to increase taxes on agencies who are working within such a framework.

I know the Treasurer has received representation, as did the Chairman of Management Board of Cabinet (Mr. Winkler) from Mr. Rudland, the President of the Insurance Society of Canada. I won't take the time to read the letter, but it does point out the purposes and aims of the society. In my view, their work has been excellent; it has supplemented government action in various fields of community and social effort, and I would ask the minister to reconsider it or give some good explanation of the position.

Mr. Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak to this bill?

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): There is one further comment that I would make in the same line of my colleague from Waterloo North. In looking at the budget statement at page 23, the comments which the minister made are these:

A number of minor improvements will also be introduced in our Corporations Tax Act and Income Tax Act covering mutual fund corporations, mutual fund trust and fraternal societies. These changes will generally parallel federal legislation and will have minimum revenue significance.

The sole point I would wish to make, Mr. Speaker, in dealing with this area that my colleague from Waterloo North has raised, is that I wonder if the benefits which some of the fraternal organizations are giving are simply not going to be wiped out by these tax changes. If the tax changes are truly minimal and there is no particular value in taxing the smaller fraternal organizations, then it would seem to me that there is merit in leaving the situation alone.

I can understand from the comments of my leader the view that some of the larger fraternal benefit organizations might well be in a position somewhat more comparable to the other insurance companies, and therefore would be able to accept this tax without generally or particularly harming their present programme, but I think that a distinction can and should be considered.

The distinction, as I see it, is the particular social service work which may be done by the smaller societies. If the smaller societies do not have this small benefit to work with, and if it is taken away by tax, then I think my colleague from Waterloo North is quite correct in that the funds are going to have to come from some other source. If the benefits cannot be paid into a home like Lutherwood, then chances are the fund will have to come from some other government pocket.

I am wondering, therefore, if the minister will be good enough to advise us as to how this was reached and whether there is any possibility or practicality of distinguishing between the much larger and better known fraternal societies who are perhaps more akin to the present insurance companies, and those smaller groups. I am wondering if the minister is not just putting a blanket decision here when it may be well worth while to have some distinction made based upon the size of the organization.

If, as I have said in quoting the minister's comments, these effects have a minimal revenue value, then surely it would be in the interest of all of us to encourage more fraternal kinds of organizations that strengthen people rather than having them always look to "the government," however it is writ, to toss in the moneys that are needed. Surely we should be encouraging this kind of an approach by our citizens if we can do so and still not have a great source of revenue loss.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much.

The only good thing about the main purpose of this bill, I think, is that the Treasurer has brought himself reluctantly to do anything at all about the burden of taxes on corporations—that is that he has raised it, albeit infinitesimally. It is that reluctance of the Treasurer to touch corporation profits in any way, either through the capital tax or through corporation profits, that I want to speak about this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I find it very hard to understand how, when the Treasurer was preparing this budget, he could have been so soft on the corporate sector of our society at the same time that he was imposing an increase of 40 to 50 per cent in personal sales tax revenues, which would fall mainly on the people of the Province of Ontario. I find myself even more perplexed when I heard the explanation which the Treasurer gave in the House just now as he was introducing the bill for second reading.

He said then that he did not want to add to the cost of production of corporations, that Ontario industry was sailing into troubled waters, that he did not want to jeopardize our industry by adding to their costs in the export market, and that he felt it was a fair and sensible move.

I really wonder how the people who live in my riding or in the riding of the member for Lakeshore would feel about the fairness and sensibility that the Treasurer displayed to them when he imposed the two per cent increase in the sales tax. That was neither fair nor sensible as far as we are concerned. When you look at the other side of the coin and look at the sensitivity which the Treasurer has shown to the corporate sector, most people in the province would say that is neither fair nor sensible.

In his introductory statement the minister tried to say that he was simply ensuring that the benefits that corporations and industries drew from municipal tax cuts in other parts of the budget would be offset by their increase in taxes. That is yet another example of the minister's efforts to mislead the House about all the statistical and financial consequences that flow from the budget.

The minister did finally admit something we have been telling him during an earlier debate, the fact that corporations and businesses pay 43 per cent of municipal tax revenues. Therefore, what benefits will be received from the new grants to municipalities will go in the order of 43 per cent to industry and to business. That sum, Mr. Speaker, is approximately $75 million. It is $75 million of the benefit of the money which is being transferred in unconditional grants under the budget to municipalities and which will accrue to municipalities.

What are they being asked to pay? There are two main elements in this bill. One element, which I shall not deal with, is the slight increase in taxes on management fees and other payments made to a corporation in the United States or some other foreign country. I am not going to concern myself with that part because it was justified and it could probably have been greater. We certainly have no problems coming to an agreement on that one, except in saying it might be greater.

The other part, though, is the increase in the capital tax, the tiny emerald that the Treasurer has put into this budget insofar as it relates to corporations. Mr. Speaker, he says that that tax will raise $33 million in a full year, but he also admits that one-half of that tax is compensated by the reduction in corporation income taxes which will be paid by the business sector. When their capital tax increases, then both their federal and provincial corporation tax goes down. The consequence is that this is not a $33 million tax increase on Ontario corporations and banks and other institutions; it is a $16 million or a $17 million tax increase. It is no more than that.

The $16 million has got to be weighed against the $75 million credit, in effect, which business will be receiving or benefitting from the transfer of unconditional grants to municipalities.

If one wanted to play with figures the way the Treasurer has been prone to, one could say that since the government calculates it will be giving $400 million more to municipalities this year then good business will receive the benefit of about 43 per cent of that total of $175 million while it is only paying $17 million net in this additional capital tax. That is grossly imbalanced, Mr. Speaker, and I find it unacceptable and very difficult to comprehend.

The minister today took very much the same line as he had taken in the budget itself, where he showed tremendous concern about the fragile state of our industry, a concern, I might say, which was not matched by his concern about the people of Ontario who have been out of jobs these many months, or in some cases these many years. The Treasurer said:

I am convinced that we must avoid placing greatly increased tax burdens on our businesses at a time when a high level of investment is needed to improve our international competitiveness and to create new jobs.

He also stated that he would not like to see an increase in the corporate tax rate which would make Ontario uncompetitive with other jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, other Treasurers in other provinces across the country have not been held back by the same kinds of constraints as the present Treasurer. It may be because their political sympathies are different. It may be because they simply understand better than this Treasurer that the capacity of corporations to pay increased taxes is there; it is something which ought to be used and it should not simply be left. But this Treasurer doesn't understand that.

The tax rate in Quebec, in Manitoba, in British Columbia, and even for that matter in Newfoundland, is significantly higher on corporations than it is in this province.

The two or three extra tax points which could have been levied in this province without any concern about competitiveness with other provinces at all, would have yielded to the government of Ontario and the people of Ontario between $90 million and $150 million. Each tax point is currently worth $40 million to $50 million, Mr. Speaker, and that is tax room which the Treasurer could and should have taken up instead of fiddling around with the capital tax as he has done here and doing it in such a picayune manner.

The $17 million which the Treasurer is taking amounts to about three per cent of what he collected from corporations last year in income tax and in the premium and capital taxes. Three per cent. That compares to a 45 per cent increase in the retail sales tax. As I suggested, Mr. Speaker, the corporations are getting paid off out the back window because of the heavy contribution they make at the municipal level and now come the heavy benefits that they will get at the municipal level.

That's not to count the fact that corporations in the real estate business, in the development business and in the landlord business will receive further benefits because they will receive tax cuts or remissions from municipalities and will not pass them on to their tenants.

What I find especially peculiar about this bill, Mr. Speaker, is the contradictions it reveals with the Conservative Party itself. We've been watching with some great interest what's been happening up in Ottawa over the last few months, where another Treasurer in another Parliament has been proposing corporation tax cuts for reasons that are very similar to those that have been raised by this Treasurer here: in order to improve the international competitiveness and to ensure that Canadian industry can sail on and survive in troubled waters.

Well, the lyricism of these pay-ins to the corporate welfare of the country are legion, and the Treasurer has certainly joined in them. But what's happened with the leader of the Conservative Party and of the official opposition up in Ottawa? Initially he was completely opposed. He finally brought himself, and only under extreme pressure from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, to agree to those tax cuts for a period of a year or so, but no more.

The leader of the Treasurer's party in Ottawa does not see a necessity for this kind of stimulus to business on a long-term basis. He does not see the need for tax cuts on the corporate sector up in Ottawa. Yet this Treasurer effectively gives a tax cut at the local level, through the combination of a very small increase in the capital tax and a much larger decrease in municipal tax responsibilities through what he has given them at that point.

This Treasurer, looking at the need to raise taxes and bearing in mind the tax squeeze of which he's talked, does not see the possibilities of using tax room which is there in the corporate tax field, because he is too concerned with the corporate welfare.

Mr. Speaker, today's Globe and Mail pointed out that for the last two quarters Canada's gross national product has been increasing at a real rate of just under 12 per cent, quite apart from any price changes. It doesn't give the latest figures, but it speaks of the continuing acceleration of corporate profits. It talks of demand that is particularly strong in durable consumer goods, business investment and in fixed capital formation.

These are hardly the signs of business sailing in troubled waters and having difficulties, either with its domestic markets or, for that matter, with its foreign markets. As the minister probably knows, or as his experts should have told him, Canadian exports from this province and from the rest of the country have been increasing very strongly over the past few months and there is every sign that they will continue to grow strongly.

Given those facts, Mr. Speaker, given the fact that the business sector is, if anything, healthier than it has been for years, we do not see why the minister had to come in with such an unbalanced kind of proposal, where corporations were let off with a flick of the wrist while individuals and personal taxpayers were forced to pay very heavy tax increases.

I found the philosophy of the minister particularly objectionable regarding the corporations tax, when he spoke of the resources tax.

Mr. Speaker, you may be aware, from speeches from this side of the House, that we consider the tax on resource sectors in this province is absolutely unjustifiably small. It is far too small, and the corporations who operate in that field have been allowed to get away with every conceivable kind of gift and concession from this government. It is clear that they have had an enormous influence on the Treasurer and on the government, over successive governments, in keeping their tax burden low.

We don't accept in this corporations tax bill that the minister would refuse to take any action in order to increase the tax burden on the resources sector. We don't accept the minister's statement in the budget speech, which is certainly relevant to this particular Act, that he only wishes to maintain the total burden on the mining industry at its present level and that there is no other intention.

How long can the people go on with a government that insists on protecting corporations from any kind of necessity to pay their fair share of the cost of running this province? How long can we go on with a government that simply sanctifies the resources industry and allows them to make profits with either no taxation at all or with virtually no taxation?

How long can we stomach a minister who continuously goes up to Ottawa to bleat and plead and prate about tax room from the federal government when he refuses to take up the tax room which is available here in this province and which other provinces have taken up?

There is tax room in the corporate tax field to raise corporation tax. There is tax room in the resources sector. There is tax room in the succession duty which the minister has reduced rather than moving into. There is tax room, if one will, even in the securities tax which revenues he could have preserved rather than abandoned. That was another example of the sellouts of which this government is so constantly guilty in its efforts to keep the support of the business sector.

I see in the papers that the government is now beginning to have its difficulties with the corporate sector. Even they are no longer content with the Premier (Mr. Davis) and with the Treasurer and with the rest of the gang over there. They are finding them hard to stomach. They are finding them hard to stomach because they are not running things very well right now. The government is getting prone to error. The minister has certainly been prone to error in this particular budget.

It would seem to me that it would be kinder to the people of Ontario if the government were to pull up its socks and learn to run things effectively and efficiently, and at the same time turn around to its corporate friends and tell them, "We will tax you fairly and run the government effectively," rather than keeping these taxes which are inequitable to the people of the province and which are no longer capable of their intended purpose to buy corporate support.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to participate in this debate? If not, the hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. White: There is nothing for me to say at the moment, Mr. Speaker. I think the several points I made at the beginning of this debate really sum up the principles involved, and while the hon. member for Ottawa Centre believes very passionately that we should soak the corporations, he was good enough to concede—

Mr. Lawlor: No, just the fair share, you don't have to soak anybody.

Hon. Mr. White:—in previous debates that most of these costs are rolled out of the consumer and I suppose, if his interest is consistency, he would have to agree, following that line of thought, that any increased impost on corporations would end up in higher prices. So I think his most recent objections are not very well-founded, and insofar as the details of the bill are concerned, the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Revenue and myself will take those clause-by-clause.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall this bill be ordered for third reading?

Mr. Cassidy: No.

Mr. Speaker: Committee of the whole?
Agreed.

Mr. Cassidy: You see how kind and generous we are to you; not even a division.

Clerk of the House: The fifth order; resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 95, An Act to Repeal the Security Transfer Tax Act.

SECURITY TRANSFER TAX ACT (concluded)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, this started some weeks ago when I was downstairs straightening out the justice of this province. The minister is thoroughly aware of the recommendations of the Smith committee that the security transfer tax be abolished and commissions charged by security dealers and brokers for their services be taxable under the Retail Sales Tax Act; and for this purpose where there is no commission charged by a security dealer or broker, a reasonable commission be deemed to have been charged.

There was a wide range of service industries, service functions—the real estate industry was one of them and another one was the security brokers of Ontario—where we felt that there was a perfectly legitimate role and function for a tax and that it ought to be continued; though not in the particular form, which was unduly complex and retrograde. They used different types of bonds, different types of shares, and it caused a certain amount of trouble inside the industry, unnecessary troubles; and what we are basically concerned about is revenue.

But it didn't afflict or affect to any great extent the operation of that industry. Sometimes I think that governments should be analysed on the basis of their neurasthenia. Governments, just like individuals, have various forms of neuroses. The neurosis from which this minister suffers, as does the government he represents as Treasurer, Mr. Speaker, is a form of phobia. He lives in a universe of ghosts and hobgoblins.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): They are after him right now.

Mr. Lawlor: Any concentrated segment of the community in the financial area, such as the securities dealers, because they are a concentrated, nice little cabal, tightly wrapped around themselves, can say to the minister: "Listen, if you don't come to heel and do precisely what we want we will move out. We will close up our tents like the Arabs and silently steal away." But not so silently, because the noise, the hullabaloo in the night as they leave would be something that would shock you.

As a matter of fact, if you returned next morning you would find the encampment intact, not a soul having pulled out. During the hearings of the Smith committee we were told of a similar situation which we face today in this legislation. The situation had to do with the New York Stock Exchange, that munificent mausoleum, with all its entrenched interests, with its financial concentrations of power down through the corridors of New York City, where there are vast accumulations of capital, bullion—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Canyons.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Canyons of Wall St!

Mr. Lawlor:—where the floors are littered with gold. How would they remove those floors?

The threat in New York five or six years ago was that unless Governor Rockefeller took a certain similar tax off they would all go across the river to New Jersey; "New Joisey" they said. Of course Rockefeller said

"no," and they didn't go; they are still there. Nobody has had any sense of the dire winds that blow from the people running the stock exchange.

The parallel case here of course is Montreal; the Canadian Stock Exchange—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Not entirely parallel.

Mr. Lawlor: —that there be a retreat and an anabasis of the—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Would the member sooner go to Montreal than "Joisey"?

Mr. Lawlor: Down to Montreal? Well it is the same. They have both got baseball teams or something haven't they?

But if you look at the statistics, and I did before I lost them, because these debates take so long to come about and all my best speeches always go awry by being left in some toilet facility somewhere; or an old cupboard here and there.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Somebody's waste basket.

Mr. Lawlor: It has been six or seven weeks since we started this particular one, so that in the good speech I might have made if the thing had come on at the time I was prepared to speak on it, I forget what I was going to say.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Stokes: The member has even forgotten what he has forgotten.

Mr. Lawlor: It will come back in a week, thank you.

Anyhow, New Jersey sticks in my mind under this particular heading; the threat is completely vacuous. If you follow the newspapers, laterally the Toronto Stock Exchange hit the largest volume of trading it has had in its history. Where is the decline? Where is the impact that we are supposed to be suffering from over Quebec's removal of the tax some months ago? Just how—show us the incident, show us the percentage loss in trading on this exchange against that of Montreal as a result of the continuance of this insignificant tax. There isn't any.

It's just a lot of nonsense. It's caving in to the industry. We could use the moneys, which are many millions of dollars, associated with this tax. And the minister, as I say, neurasthenic child of the times that he is, full of phobias, full of fears—

Mr. Breithaupt: Full of wind!

Mr. Lawlor: Full of wind, too.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Don't carry that list any further.

Mr. Lawlor: All right, one more, frozen with hysteria, unable to act in this context, throws up his hands, walks away from the situation and despoils the tax.

Please reconsider the situation, I ask him, as he comes into his next budget. This is a valid and valuable source of money. It should be placed within the services function of the sales tax, and not abnegated in assured real estate commissions. The minister can also put a special clause in saying the tax is not to be passed on.

Mr. Good: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say just a word on this Act, which is an Act to repeal the Security Transfer Tax Act.

When our position was made known on second reading of this bill some weeks ago, it was explained at that time, and I think it needs to be emphasized here, that the reason we are supporting the abolition of this tax is basically and primarily to put the major stock exchanges in Canada on an equal basis. At present the Montreal Stock Exchange, the Toronto Stock Exchange and the Vancouver Stock Exchange are the three major stock exchanges in the country. Winnipeg and Calgary are very minor.

The abolition of this tax in Ontario will then bring the three major stock exchanges into line with the Security Transfer Tax Act. Then, I think, it is apparent to us that it is incumbent upon the financial ministers, or the Treasurers of the provinces, who are in charge of the taxing operation, that they get together and discuss the matter on a mutual basis so that we can have some uniformity in the marketplace.

It has been mentioned that in the Province of Ontario, Ontario Hydro has diverted stock transactions from the Toronto Stock Exchange to the Montreal Stock Exchange purely to avoid the tax which is at present applicable, or was when these purchases were made. I don't think that we in Canada can afford to have interprovincial financial barriers to disturb our financial institutions any more than we can afford to have interprovincial trade barriers.

We were through this whole matter on interprovincial trade barriers with the Minister of Agriculture and Food last year. I am not here pleading the case for the abolition of the tax, but mainly to bring some uniformity, a uniform base from which the Treasurers of the various provinces can then build and decide how much tax should be imposed at a later date. But uniformity of purpose is the reason why we are supporting this bill. I know the NDP got very emotional about this issue the last time we discussed it. It has been said by the member for York-Forest Hill (Mr. Givens) that the NDP can get emotional about a laundry if they so choose, and I have to agree with that; but basically we have got to get some uniformity in the marketplace.

Mr. Lawlor: I hear the Liberals are so frozen they can't get emotional about their grandmothers.

Mr. Good: The Vancouver Stock Exchange in the Province of British Columbia presently has no security transfer tax.

Mr. Lawlor: That's except for Bob Nixon.

Mr. Ferrier: We should try to get rid of your Cara shares, Bob.

Mr. Good: Do members accept that we now have, by the abolition of this, a uniform base from which a popular tax base can be done? I am vehemently opposed, as an individual, to anything which is going to create interprovincial barriers or a situation where there are tax havens. I think it is not right that we have certain provinces eliminating their succession duties and other provinces increasing their hold in the area.

I think there should be a uniformity all across Canada. If we are going to keep Canada as a nation from one coast to the other, we have to get together on some of these things which divert capital. A diversion of capital from one province to another because of tax advantage can do nothing but hurt Canada.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other hon member wish to participate in this debate? If not, the hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I have sent you a note apologizing for having my shirt open for the first time in 14 years, and now I apologize to the members of the House. I've got a very big toothache today and I've taken some 222s. Now I seem to be bathed in perspiration. Only in these extreme circumstances would I be dressed so informally.

Mr. Stokes: We accept that explanation.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Permission granted.

Hon. Mr. White: I've taken my sweater off too!

At the beginning of the debate on the second reading on this bill I had an opportunity to express the reasons for our introducing this bill, which will repeal this tax, and I would like to recapitulate them.

First of all, as the hon. member for Waterloo North has pointed out, this will now make the tax rate uniform across Canada at zero.

There was an important shift of transactions taking place out of Toronto. That in itself is troublesome enough. My concern, however, was that those commercial and industrial activities which are attracted to a large exchange, such as Toronto, and which make Toronto part of the vibrant business community it is, would also in some degree be lost to us.

It was not only the employment and the taxes which flow from that employment on the first round that concerned me, but the multiplier effect that that would have. I have had an opportunity to present certain statistics by way proof in this matter and I have sent for an update of those statistics, because the trend which I found and which I described to the House several weeks ago was continued until the time of this budget.

My hon. friend from Lakeshore will recall our being told by the legal counsel to the select committee that large transactions at that time were being carried out by Toronto lawyers, two of whom would fly in the same aircraft to Winnipeg for purposes of transferring large blocks of stock. Then they would immediately fly back from Winnipeg, having gone there solely for the purpose of making the transfer. Of course, that kind of thing is now eliminated, if the cancellation of the tax in Quebec a year ago did not accomplish the purpose.

Those who are interested in such matters will recall that Smith said the tax was unfair and uncertain, the reason being it applied to certain classes of security while not to others; and was perverse to this extent, that it applied to equity securities and private corporations and public corporations, thereby adding to the impost, and no doubt to some small extent shifting the supply and demand equilibrium point, in contrast to the exemption provided for various government bonds.

We have here a yearning, and quite rightly so, to have greater participation in our own Canadian industries, to encourage equity ownership by large numbers of Canadians; and it is no doubt true that the impost applied to equity securities, but not to government debt securities, would have an adverse effect.

This cannot be measurable and I can see that it may be marginal, but I hope one of the consequences of withdrawing the tax is to encourage somewhat greater participation in equity stocks by our people.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Next, it was costly to administer, not so much in the public sector as in the private sector, with millions and millions of items being entered by thousands of clerks all across the province. Our internal costs were not particularly high, in part because we didn't have a large unit to police the tax, but at any rate it was relatively costly I thought, for the reasons that I now advance, that we should eliminate it. Indeed, this was recommended by the select committee including, if I am not mistaken, my hon. friend the member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Except for putting on the sales tax.

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, if the other provinces do the same was the condition on that.

Mr. Lawlor: But the Treasurer never goes out to negotiate on that.

Hon. Mr. White: Now I draw your attention to the Hansard of a year ago, June 22, 1972, at which time the Leader of the Opposition said:

The next thing I want to refer to has to do with a matter which I am sure we will be discussing in the early part of the estimates in more detail. It has been mentioned in the press and the hon. member for High Park raised it in the question period yesterday. It has to do with the problems of this minister—

—as he pointed out the Treasurer—

—is going to be facing if we continue with the security transfer tax as it presently is.

He pointed out that:

In recent months the tax has been dropped by every province but Ontario and there is good reason why Ontario should have dropped it at the same time. Evidently the costs of collection are very high, and this is recounted in the report of the Minister of Revenue and the fact that Ontario has maintained this tax is now causing a problem which according to the member for High Park and others who reported on it, could lead to a situation of some emergency, that those people dealing with securities on a regular base are going to consider—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Did the Treasurer actually take this action in response to my speech?

Hon. Mr. White: "Consider carrying on the transactions outside Toronto", and so on.

The member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) on June 27, 1972—I am sorry he is not here today.

Mr. Ferrier: He was here earlier.

Hon. Mr. White: He says:

But, Mr. Chairman, I don't think the government may have realized yet just how serious this matter is. Last Thursday I was down at the Toronto Stock Exchange as a guest and it was impressed upon me at that time just how serious this can be, because the important stocks that trade in Toronto are also listed in Montreal.

Mr. Cassidy: The evidence just isn't there, though.

Hon. Mr. White: He says: "I am not too worried about business going to New York", and so on; and then he said—What does the member for Ottawa Centre mean? It is Canadian business that is flowing out of Toronto and into Montreal—

Mr. Cassidy: It is not, we showed the Treasurer evidence that it is not going out of Toronto.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Don't argue with the member for High Park.

Mr. Lawlor: I think that is dirty pool.

Hon. Mr. White: "Now," said the member for High Park "we are going to adjourn here Friday and"—

Mr. Lawlor: It is the first time the Treasurer has ever quoted the member for High Park in his life, except scornfully. He has a kind of special interest here like the Treasurer who grinds his axe. I have no liaison with the member for High Park.

Hon. Mr. White: To continue:

And I would like very strongly, very strongly to recommend to the minister that he not let this drag over the summer, because if he does what is a very minor problem now may be a very major problem by the end of the summer. It isn't just a few trades or a number of trades that switch. Patterns are set up and if you have a trust company that suddenly becomes used to dealing with a Montreal broker, if they switch to Kippen from Nesbitt, or from Chisholm, they may very well not come back; and this is permanent business that is going to go outside of Ontario, and it may be very harmful to our business community.

And these, I reiterate Mr. Speaker, are the reasons why we are recommending to the Legislature that we repeal this tax.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, will the minister accept a question? It is simply this, in the move to have a now common standard of zero tax applied across the country, is it the minister's intention to work with the other provincial authorities in order that possibly this source of revenue may be reconsidered so long as there is equitable treatment across the country?

Hon. Mr. White: Well I am attracted certainly, to the recommendation of the select committee. If the member will recall. I guess we three and others were in agreement that this would be a suitable application for retail sales tax on the commission, and I certainly will be discussing that possibility—

Mr. Lawlor: Is work on it with three or four provinces necessary?

Hon. Mr. White: —at some future date with BC and Montreal. But as the select committee pointed out, it would be perilous for us to introduce that tax if nobody else did.

Mr. Cassidy: Would the minister permit one more question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. minister wishes to permit one more question, I am not going to refuse it.

Mr. Cassidy: Given the tendencies of the BC government and the likelihood that it would probably agree with the minister if he sought to impose a sales tax which would apply at least to security transactions in this province and in BC, does he not feel that it would be of sufficient weight that the possible alternative of a security transfer tax free market in Montreal would not be overweighing and therefore the tax could have been maintained here in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, BC is a very small market compared to Montreal or Toronto, and I myself, for reasons I can't quite explain, am not filled with confidence about that socialist government. Therefore, I think I will pin my hopes on Mr. Carneau of Quebec.

Mr. Lawlor: Well at least they probably could get the Treasurer a little decent revenue where it belongs. We are told that one of the reasons for taking the tax off is because they are migrating to BC.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is for second reading of Bill 95.

The House divided on the motion for second reading of Bill 95, which was approved on the following vote:

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the bill be ordered for third reading?

Agreed.

Perhaps at this time, before we proceed with the next order of business, I should inform the House that I have received two notices under the provisions of standing orders 27 and 28. Those are the notices from the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) to the effect that he was dissatisfied with the answer given to the question pertaining to representation on the Niagara Escarpment Commission; and that of the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy), who has notified me that he is dissatisfied with the answer given to the question asked by him pertaining to the matter of the Cornwall teachers' situation. Therefore there will be two debates permitted under the provision of these orders at the adjournment hour, which I presume to be 10:30 this evening.

The first notice and matter to be discussed will be that submitted by the hon. member for Ottawa East, who will be permitted five minutes and the hon. minister will be permitted five minutes to respond. The notice given to me by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce will also be provided five minutes for the hon. member to speak; and the hon. minister may also reply for five minutes.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading upon motion:

Bill 95, An Act to repeal the Security Transfer Tax Act.

Clerk of the House: The second order, House in committee of the whole; Mr. R. D. Rowe in the chair.

CORPORATIONS TAX ACT

House in committee on Bill 94, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any comments, questions or amendments on any of the first five sections? If so, which section? The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Section 2.

Mr. Chairman: Anything before section 2?

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): A number of these changes flow from the budget and I will be dealing with those. Those who are debating might like to know that this includes clauses 4, 8, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17 and 19. The others are of a housekeeping nature and will be responded to by the parliamentary assistant (Mr. Walker) to the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Grossman).

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore on section 2.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, the alteration or amendment made in that section has to do with non-resident corporations performing entertainments. Why did this arise? What's behind it? As the lawyers say, what's the ratio decidendi?

Mr. G. W. Walker (London North): Mr. Chairman, if I may, I call this amendment the Cash amendment. Previously these non-resident corporations similar to the Johnny Cash operation when he was appearing at the Canadian National Exhibition, and the Sunday Promotions Ltd. appearing at Maple Leaf Gardens, such as the Rolling Stones and rock concerts, Duke Ellington appearing at the O'Keefe Centre, International Artists at the O'Keefe, Liberace and so on.

These types of operations were taxed under the definition of permanent establishment, which appears in section 7 of the present Act. We use section 7 subsection 9 in order to attract the necessary taxation here, and it involved what is paraphrased as the use of substantial machinery or equipment. Whenever that was used there was invariably difficulty and arguments arose. However, we ultimately got the tax.

This amendment will very clearly state that the definition of a permanent establishment will be expanded to include a reference to public entertainment presented in Canada by a non-resident corporation.

The revenue effect is absolutely nil. In 1971 there were 45 shows for which there was a revenue of $64,257, and that had risen to 46 shows and $71,033 by 1972. There will be no change. It merely clarifies the situation and makes it administratively much easier to attract the necessary taxation. The previous section was just an impossibility.

Mr. Lawlor: I can well appreciate it, because of the use of substantial machinery or equipment in a particular place. I have two questions. Does the tax apply no matter how long the non-resident corporation is in the country, even if it's only in for an hour or a couple of hours? Secondly, is perhaps the reason, partially, that your revenue wasn't very great from this source, because of lack of policing? I would take it that an awful lot of entertainers these days are incorporated. If they were appearing anywhere in Toronto at the many numerous outlets, nightclubs and whatnot for entertainment, how would you necessarily know they were in town?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, to answer the last question first, I would say there are a number of very interesting individuals within the Revenue Ministry whose job it is to keep an eye on things just like this. This falls within the purview of the corporations tax branch and there are there a number of inspectors whose job it is to make sure they attend on these individuals when they see the advertisement appearing in the Globe and Mail, or wherever it may be. They make the arrangements. They go and visit the individual entrepreneurs, and lo and behold we get the taxation.

They are taxed for the period during which there is a revenue accruing to them in the Province of Ontario. Generally speaking, this means for the two or three-hour shows they may be putting on. We have no particular interest in where they stay or how long they stay, but merely in the income they attract as a result of their performance while here.

Mr. Lawlor: Are there reciprocal arrangements with most jurisdictions with respect to offsetting of this revenue?

Mr. Walker: I don't know the answer to that.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 2 stand as part of the bill?

Section 2 agreed to.

Any other comments, questions or amendments on sections 3, 4 or 5?

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Section 5, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Anything before 5?

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Section 4.

Mr. Chairman: Section 4? On section 4, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: I'd just like to know how the minister has come to the conclusion that $5 million will be raised from this. What is the rationale for disallowing as a deduction only five twelfths of the amounts rather than a larger amount? Thirdly, what is the relation between the new provincial tax treatment of these payments, that are not at arm's length, to the federal treatment of similar payments?

Hon. Mr. White: The federal government is able constitutionally to levy indirect taxes and does, in circumstances such as these, levy a 15 per cent tax on the foreign company—a withholding tax—as royalty payments and such like flow to the parent company from a Canadian subsidiary. We have no such constitutional right; so we have to levy the tax on the Canadian subsidiary. We have decided that this tax should be in the same ratio as the provincial corporation tax and the federal corporation tax, which is to say 12 per cent to 40 per cent.

Five twelfths times our rate of 12 per cent works out to five per cent, which is a third of 15 per cent, which is more or less twelve fortieths.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 4 stand as part as the bill then?

Mr. Cassidy: If the revenue anticipated is only $5 million, that presumes then that the amounts that are paid are approximately $100 million. Without having figures in front of me that surprises me, because it strikes me that such payments to foreign parent companies would amount to a lot more than $100 million for Canada nationally, and Ontario's share would be in the order of 60 or 70 per cent of those payments.

Hon. Mr. White: We had to come up with the best estimate available using federal data from 1970 extrapolated to 1973-1974. It possibly amounts to somewhat more than $15 million because of some acceleration. The $5 million is the best estimate we can come up with using the federal data, as I say, from 1970 and extrapolating it—increasing it in proportion to business activity.

Mr. Cassidy: Could the minister explain why it is that in certain cases, as just a few minutes ago in the case of the Security Transfer Tax Act, he is terribly worried about interprovincial competition and about the attraction of a certain kind of business to another province which has a more favourable tax treatment, but in this particular case he is imposing what amounts to a new form of withholding tax on these management fees, rents, royalties and so on, a tax which is presumably not paralleled by Quebec, BC or other jurisdictions which have a substantial amount of foreign-controlled industry.

Do you not fear, given your arguments in other cases, that this will lead to a loss of foreign-controlled industry in the province?

Mr. Lawlor: A lot will leave as soon as they find out about this.

Hon. Mr. White: We followed Quebec's lead with respect to the security transfer tax. I rather expect that other provinces will follow our lead with respect to the change we are presenting to the House right now. I think it is quite in keeping with the urge we all have to nurture our Canadian industry, which in itself I think involves not giving undue advantage to foreign corporations which are active here in Canada.

Mr. Lawlor: We love our home-grown capitalists more than the foreign fellows.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, this is a pinprick, I would have thought compared to the stake of $40 or $50 billion that foreign industries have in the Canadian economy. Why, if the argument applies in this case, doesn't it apply in the case of hanging onto a tax with a similar kind of revenue and persuading other provinces to re-adopt it after they have abandoned it?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: Is there an answer? Shall section 4 stand as part of the bill?

Mr. Cassidy: I'd like a reply; he seems awfully silent on this, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. White: I have answered it once. How many times do I have to answer a question?

We followed Quebec's leadership on the security transfer tax knowing that that province was adamant in not applying that tax, notwithstanding conversations which took place between Quebec's Minister of Finance and the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough).

In this matter I fully expect the other provinces to fall in behind us—not that there is collusion because there isn't—because it's unfair to our own Canadian taxpayers, our own Canadian corporate citizens, to allow this loophole to continue. When they follow our leadership the tax will be uniform across Canada, as indeed it is uniform across Canada now with respect to the security transfer tax.

Mr. Cassidy: If Ontario had been as adamant as Quebec perhaps we could have kept that $7 million revenue, which amounted, incidentally, to about two per cent of the province's full revenues from taxpayers.

Could I ask the minister, will this tax also have the effect of encouraging foreign-controlled firms to import or to bring into Canada some of the management activities which they now carry on outside the province, that is in other countries?

If so, has the government considered going beyond the ratio of the provincial to federal corporation tax which it has adopted in this particular measure?

In other words, you have a five per cent tax here which is loaded on top of the 15 per cent federal withholding tax effectively, although you have done it by other means. Why not go to 10 or 15 per cent and thereby increase the incentive to foreign-controlled corporations to bring at least more of their activities into Canada, rather than continuing to perform them in Brussels or Pittsburgh or Manchester or wherever they happen to be?

Hon. Mr. White: It may encourage certain subsidiaries to move certain of their management services into Ontario. This is unforeseeable. Our hope is that it will shift some of the business now going to the subsidiaries' head offices in other countries to management consultant firms here in Ontario. The reason we don't increase this from five per cent to 20 per cent is the same reason we don't increase our total corporations tax from about 52 per cent to 100 per cent as you would have us do. Too much is too much.

Mr. Cassidy: With great respect Mr. Chairman, we did suggest that the level prevailing in Newfoundland, Quebec or Manitoba might be a model for the minister to follow in corporation tax. For a province as rich and prosperous as this one—

Hon. Mr. White: You'd put them all out of business.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister is really timorous in the way he acts in the corporation tax.

Mr. Lawlor: No one is talking about 100 per cent.

Hon. Mr. White: You'd put them all out of business.

Mr. Lawlor: Just two or three more tax points.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 4 remain as part of the bill then?

Section 4 agreed to.

The member for Waterloo North on section 5.

Mr. Good: Under section 5, Mr. Chairman—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Mr. Good: Would the minister explain the deductions available presently in computing income from a corporation where the corporations sell a security which has been taken as part payment of an asset or property which has been sold. Does this mean that the security taken as part of the sale price when sold then becomes taxable in its entirety the year in which the security is sold? What are the implications of this?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, section 24(1)(t) of the present Act allows setting up a reserve that is to be received in future years, such that a reasonable profit on the transaction can at that time be taxed.

We are thinking of a development company. This is basically a deferred tax. The purpose of the amendment is to provide that where a corporation which is being permitted the establishment of this reserve under (24(1)(t) sells or signs or pledges any security that it receives on the sale of the property and thus realizes the profit on the sale in cash, the reserve will be disallowed. The tax deferred then will become due and payable within the year in question.

Mr. Good: All the deferred tax is payable in that one year—is that the burden of the amendment then?

Mr. Walker: Oh yes. The reason is obvious: they are receiving all their money at that time by the selling or signing of the mortgage.

Mr. Chairman: Section 5.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, further on that—I don't think it affects the large developer; not much does. But it may have an impact upon the smaller developer up to a point.

Is it not possible for you to consider setting that up on a per diem basis? In other words, if a man develops 50 properties and has sales going through and takes back mortgages or holds the mortgages, he can set up the reserve on a reasonable amount in terms of those mortgages under that other section of the Act. Then in the subsequent year he sells the mortgage and receives the cash, then brings it back into his income base.

Isn't the problem then at what time he sells it? If he sells it on January 2 of the following year then he's suffered very little. But if he sells it December 31 of the following year, he's held that security without any benefit to him throughout the whole of that fiscal year, or calendar year—which probably is the same year as far as his corporation time limits are concerned. Nevertheless, he gets hit with the full impact of the tax right on the spot.

I was hoping you could be a little more delicate about the legislation, and without going to too much trouble consider writing into it a clause based on the pro rata portion of the year up to the date in which the security, or whatever it may be, was sold.

Mr. Walker: Unfortunately Mr. Chairman, we are talking here about the profit made on the sale. That is only a portion of the overall sale price. It's on that particular portion of the overall sale price that the tax will be paid.

If there is a mortgage back, then in fact there will be a deferral of the taxes until a certain time. Should that mortgage be sold at a certain point in time, December 31 or what have you, then all the profit is reaped at one particular point in time. It seems justifiable, in my opinion, that the taxation would be then due.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 5 stand as part of the bill?

Section 5 agreed to.

Any other comments, questions or amendments on any section up to section 10, up to and including section 10?

Mr. Cassidy: Section 9.

Mr. Chairman: Section 9? Anything before section 9? All right, the member for Ottawa Centre on section 9.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary how this new section 122, or the new portion of 122, affects co-operative societies? It seems to me from a cursory reading of this—I have just sent for a copy of the original bill because

I didn't have it in front of me—that this really is discriminatory, because it does not allow the pure co-operative principle to apply. The wording of the explanatory note stating that the continued exemption from tax for a non-profit organization is continued is then nullified by stating that the corporation must not distribute its income.

Now by definition a non-profit corporation, which is a co-operative, simply turns back any surplus to its members, or to their credit at the end of each year. Could you explain in more detail how this works and whether a major change in treatment is entailed in section 9?

Mr. Walker: I am not sure I can answer that part of the question, Mr. Chairman. I would indicate that the amendment is, of course, strictly of a housekeeping nature in the sense that technically a club or society in its charter could not write into its charter the fact that it could not distribute its capital at the end. Since charters issued to corporations cannot prohibit the distribution of income to common shareholders, it has been difficult, if not impossible, to accept this type of corporation as one—"no part of the income of which was payable to or was otherwise available for the personal benefit of any proprietor, member, shareholder thereof"—and thereby exempt from the tax.

So technically we are in a position where we could not allow the exemption. This now eliminates that technicality and ensures that there is an exemption for non-profit making clubs which have not distributed their income to their members.

Now the second part of the amendment to section 9, the second part of that labelled as 1(a), sets out a formula by which the non-profit corporation can be taxed should it distribute its income to its members. I am not in a position to draw the distinction between a co-op and a club of this nature, a non-profit organization.

Mr. Cassidy: I can see that this would apply, for example, to a private golf club. Perhaps you can say what the tax treatment is there and how it changes? Is it correct that every dollar paid in by proprietors, members, or shareholders, on behalf of their own operating fees would be counted—I don't think it is—when the golf club winds up, often with a very large speculative gain because of its location in or close to a growing urban area. Will it now, and has it been, taxed on the full amount or not; and how does that differ from, say a co-operative housing society?

Mr. Walker: If the golf club can be defined, as it is here in sub-paragraph (1), as a club, society or association organized and operated exclusively for social welfare, civic improvement, pleasure, recreation, as I assume it can, then it will fall within the terms of this particular exemption.

Now should it come to the stage where it distributes its income in any particular form to its members, then it would be caught within the second aspect of this particular amendment, and that is a rather lengthy formula.

Mr. Cassidy: I am beginning to understand it. I don't particularly disagree with it. What is to stop a group of Tory backbenchers, for example, all of whom are known to be rather wealthy because of the extra jobs they have outside of the House—

Mr. Walker: Or someone like Morty Shulman?

Mr. Cassidy:—given by government patronage, I would add. What is to stop a handful of them, let's say half a dozen, deciding that they are earning far too much and that they need a tax haven for some of their investments, and then putting it into a recreational society, a skeet-shooting club or a hunting lodge or something like that, which just happens to invest rather shrewdly in land which appreciates very substantially in value? They may stand to make some pretty substantial capital gains from that at the end of the period, and in the meantime they may enjoy a tremendous amount of tax deferral. Is there any policing as far as this section is concerned to ensure that clubs organized for recreational purposes are not used as a tax dodge?

Mr. Walker: If the number of New Democratic backbenchers who are wealthy in their own right are able to acquire a skeet club, it seems to me that the profit they may make in that situation would fall within the terms of the formula described in paragraph sub 1(a).

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 9 stand as part of the bill?

Section 9 agreed to.

Section 10.

Any other comments, questions or amendments on any later section of the bill?

Mr. Good: On section 11, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: On section 11.

Mr. Good: I was just going to look up the reference and couldn't. The provisions here that borrowed money will form part of paid-up capital and thus be subject to capital tax, it seems to me, could be quite disastrous and create quite a hardship in certain types of industry that rely on heavy seasonal borrowing from the bank, say the farm machinery industry where they get their supplies in and borrow heavily from the bank through a good line of credit to take advantage of discounts.

This now, as I understand, will be considered as paid-up capital of the capitalization of the company and subject to the capital tax which would apply to that. Is this a change? I presume the credit given by the shareholders will continue to be exempt, is that correct?

Hon. Mr. White: I think I am correct in saying that on occasion toward the end of the corporation's fiscal year bank indebtedness will be repaid by the corporation. The shareholders who are the principals in the firm will assume the debt and will lend the money into the corporation to avoid the capital tax. To plug that loophole, which is not discouraged by the banks as I understand it, we are making this change in the wording.

Mr. Good: So then all types of borrowing will now be part of the paid-up capital, or included as paid-up capital. Is that from the shareholders and from the bank? To me that creates even a worse hardship than before.

Hon. Mr. White: Did the hon. member not comprehend what I said? In the past there were definitions of capital provided, including loans into the corporation by a bank. Of course that is why the rate is so low, because it embraces all of this capital. But some people, to avoid the tax, with the connivance, one would have to say, of the banking system, were repaying those loans a day before the fiscal year end. The shareholders were assuming bank indebtedness which they loaned into the corporation to take the place of those moneys. This is not any change in substance. This is simply a change in the policing of the intent of this section of the Corporations Tax Act.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): This is because the shareholders are not attracted to the tax.

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, that's right.

Mr. Good: We are prepared to debate the philosophy of including debt as paid-up capital.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, the more restricted the definition I suppose the higher the rate; if one assumes that the amounts of money, I guess $66 million, this year are appropriate.

There are a number of guides for measuring the tax capability of a corporation or a shareholder. It is for that reason that single tax proposals break down. To rely entirely on income tax, for instance, would make the income tax so high that earned income would be discouraged to some extent perhaps, and that form of income would be avoided and efforts put into speculative income and such like. By the same token, if one relies too much on retail sales tax on a certain range of goods, the tax would become unendurable and there would be enormous distortions introduced into the market.

The Smith commission observed, and the select committee concurred, that we had to depend upon a number of factors to determine the tax-paying capability of the corporation or individual. They were the power to consume, the income capability and the wealth holdings.

There are a number of taxes on wealth holdings. The succession duties fall in that category and this capital tax falls in that category. I think there is a strong correlation between assets held, including borrowed funds, and taxing capability, and that is the reasoning behind the capital tax.

Mr. Breithaupt: Then in this matter this was particularly to resolve a certain problem in closely held private companies?

Mr. Chairman: Section 11? The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: The subterfuge by which the minister speaks, Mr. Chairman, is very interesting in view of the way in which the clause itself reads. By the way, the way in which the section is set out is, in my opinion, very diverse from, but not in contradiction to, the explanatory note. The explanatory note is more along the line of what the minister is saying. The subterfuge was—

Hon. Mr. White: I see that now for the first time. That is a typographical error in the explanation.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, it certainly is. It is not just money borrowed from a bank. It is "all sums or credits advanced or loaned to the corporation by its shareholders, directly or indirectly, or by any other corporation," including a bank.

Much money may be lent to a corporation by its shareholders directly out of their own pocket, out of their own reserve and savings and what not. I am wholly in favour of the tax and basing it in this particular way. That is fine. It is just that I thought there was a subterfuge. Has the minister been able to refine his figures down closely enough to be able to indicate how much money is likely to derive from this very section?

Hon. Mr. White: I stated in the budget statement the amount is not expected to be large. In fact, it is incalculable, I should think, because it is virtually impossible to quantify tax avoided. We are doing it not so much to gain revenue, although we will take all the revenue that comes our way, but rather to eliminate what we think has been an abuse of the section.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 11 stand as part of the bill?

Mr. Cassidy: I have a few questions, Mr. Chairman. As I understand it now, corporations will have to pay the capital tax on money loaned to them by banks as well as by money coming from other shareholders. I'd like to know why in subsection (2) the banks are being limited just to capital stock, reserve fund and undivided profits. Why is the money that they borrow not treated as also a measure of tax-paying capacity? What is the relationship of these three items which are specified in sub-paragraphs (a), (b) and (c)? How much does that amount to and what relation does that have to the total assets of banks, including whether you measure by deposits or by their lending?

Hon. Mr. White: The significant change, it seems to me with respect to capital tax on banks, is that we had previously applied a very small rate—one-tenth of one per cent—on the world-wide assets.

I'll have to get the rate for you later.

The important thing is we were applying a low rate of tax to the world-wide assets of banks and businesses in Ontario. The banks objected to this philosophically, and, I think, quite rightly so. I agreed with that proposition.

I made it very clear that we proposed to gain the same amount of revenue from the banks operating in Ontario by increasing the rate and by narrowing the base to confine the taxable capital to their assets in Ontario. So that is the important aspect here. The paid-up capital includes, as the hon. member has mentioned, its paid-up capital stock, reserve fund, and its undivided profits.

The question now asked is why aren't the deposits taxed as part of the capital? I'll get that information for you.

Mr. Cassidy: Okay. Could the minister state what was the former treatment of banks with only an incidental involvement in Ontario; and what is the present treatment of them.

Presumably with a Canadian bank—one of the big eight or nine or whatever it is—you could apply that tax on the formula that you mentioned reasonably easily. In the case of a foreign bank which does business in Ontario how would that have applied formerly and how will it apply now? And how will you apply tax to a bank whose head office is outside of the province?

Secondly, could the minister tell us approximately what revenues he was receiving from banks on the old formula, including the tax on bank branches which I believe is being repealed? Also what expected revenues will he get from the new tax under the new formula on banks?

Hon. Mr. White: I hearken back to the previous question. I am informed that we couldn't tax banks on the same basis as other corporations because this would mean taxing the chartered banks on their loans from the Bank of Canada.

The rate for banks was one-fifth of one per cent on their reserve funds. The new single rate is two-fifths of one per cent, on both capital stock and reserve funds. So we have gone from one-fifth to two-fifths on the capital stock and from one-tenth to two-fifths on reserve funds.

As I mentioned earlier, these changes and the elimination of the place-of-business tax, which was the remnants of a universal place-of-business tax eliminated some years ago, will yield to the province the same amount of money as was the case under the old lower rates with broader base. I will try to get an estimation of that amount in a moment.

Mr. Cassidy: Could the minister explain, even within his rather limited philosophy, why he did decide to take a certain amount of extra revenue from the corporate sector through the capital tax? That extra amount was $33 million, or after you account for the loss to the federal and provincial government of corporation tax revenues, about $16 million or $17 million—perhaps a bit more.

Why would it be that the banks have got a special status? Unlike other corporations which are having a slight increase to the capital tax, there will be no increase on the banks. Why are they not subject to the same treatment? In other words, why did you not peg the new rate of capital tax on banks in such a way that they too would contribute, even if only marginally, to the increase in revenue which the Treasurer is collecting from taxpayers in the province during the course of the fiscal year?

Hon. Mr. White: I think it is a very fair question. The change in the system is going to shift the burden of taxation from certain banks and on to certain other banks in a way that will be dislocating to some extent. I was not willing to change the system and the rate at the same time, although the rate itself can be contemplated in subsequent budgets.

Mr. Cassidy: Could I return to the question of why the minister didn't take the best measure of tax paying capacity, which would be total assets, including either deposits or loans, depending on which way you want to count. It seems to me that the ratio of capital stock reserves and undivided profits to total assets will vary for each individual bank. One which is more aggressive will have a lower ratio of these three items to their total assets than another which is more conservative in its operations.

The only reason the minister would give was that some of their loans came from the Bank of Canada. When they get it though, they are dollars like any other dollars, except that they happen to be owed to the federal government. As federal dollars originally they are not tax exempt once they come into the hands of a particular bank. The bank is free to use those loans in the same way as it uses loans from business corporations or a deposit which the Treasurer or myself might happen to make.

Hon. Mr. White: The question was asked earlier about the revenue from tax on banks. Under the old system it was $2.5 million, and under the new system it is $2.5 million.

I am content to look at the suggestion of the hon. member. All these definitions are arbitrary. If the definition were changed to include deposits I have no doubt we would have to lower the rate in order not to be grossly non-competitive with other jurisdictions. So the question is to some extent hypothetical, I suppose.

Mr. Cassidy: As a final point, the rate right now on banks, two-fifths of one per cent—if you consider these capital taxes as a tax on wealth, they are puny in their effect. The visible rate on banks is double the rate on other corporations. However, when you look at it more closely, the banks are being taxed on a much narrower base than other corporations. They are taxed on all of their assets, or virtually all of their assets—unless they are the mining industry, incidentally, which has very generous exemptions in section 127 of last year's Act.

In other words, it would be possible to tax the banks at the same rate as any other corporation and to get a very substantial increase in revenues from them without being discriminatory as between banks and other institutions. I would simply represent to the minister that he'd have to look at that seriously rather than giving them this privileged status.

Hon. Mr. White: We will see what Premier Barrett does.

Mr. Chairman: Does section 11 now stand as part of the bill.

Section 11 agreed to.

Are there any other comments, questions or amendments on a later section, and if so, which section?

Mr. Lawlor: Section 15.

Mr. Chairman: Anything before 15? All right. The hon. member for Lakeshore on 15.

Mr. Lawlor: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that not very many years ago when you were a boy you read in Charles Dickens about a man by the name of Mantalini—I think it is in Martin Chuzzlewit. Mantalini's famous word was "dimmed." He was afraid, being an English gentleman, to say damned, so he always said everything was "dimmed."

In section 15 you have got the "dimmed" word deemed. What does "deemed" mean in this particular context? In other words you are going to have to apportion items among various jurisdictions. I would just like a clear, concise, conclusive statement of just how you do this marvelous operation with respect to paid-up capital.

Hon. Mr. White: A number of formulas are created by the minister on the advice of learned men and passed by way of regulations. The phrase I have just said is embraced in the one word "deemed."

Mr. Lawlor: That is exactly the "dimmed" word that I'm—I know it is machinery, I know it is probably tough. I just said that to see how deeply you'd gotten into this portfolio or whether you are just sitting on ice, that is all. You know how it is done or not, John, to get it over with!

Hon. Mr. White: I am surely not expected to answer every question three times.

Mr. Chairman: Did the hon. member for Kitchener have a question on section 15? Shall section 15 then stand as part of the bill?

Section 15 agreed to.

Anything before 18? The hon. member for Kitchener on section 18.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, we had commented earlier in second reading on the matters with respect to the fraternal situation that this section comments upon.

I understand that the parliamentary assistant who is taking care of this section has information for the House with respect to the amounts of money involved and the numbers of fraternal societies. I look forward to getting that information.

I'm wondering if he can advise us as well on the maximum amounts that the larger benefit companies have been paying. I understand it would be several thousands of dollars.

And on the contracts brought into being after Jan. 1, 1974, am I correct in assuming that this tax would be paid annually on a cumulative basis as the premiums increase so that each year's premium will have a tax paid on it, and this would be a consistent development over the life of the policy? In other words, the tax is simply not paid once on the first premium, it's paid every year on the premiums as they come in, and therefore will build up moneys being taxed away on all the contracts after Jan. 1 of next year, is that so?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, I will direct my comments to the questions raised, first by the hon. member for Kitchener, and the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. R. F. Nixon) and the hon. member for Waterloo North.

The revenue effect of the second portion of this particular amendment, that is the one relating to the fraternal societies, will be in the range of $50,000 per annum, expected to increase something like 20 per cent each year.

Section 143, of course, requires a two per cent premium tax, and that premium tax will apply only to those contracts entered into after Jan. 1, 1974, and it is true to say that it is cumulative.

If there are 100 premiums which come in during the year 1974 they will be taxed at the going rate under 143(1), which is two per cent. In the following year, if they've sold an additional 20 premiums or contracts then there will be 120 premiums on which there will be the two per cent rate. So in effect it is cumulative at the rate of 20 per cent per year.

This differs in no way, really, from the increases anticipated in retail sales tax, and in fact increased sales in gasoline—if sales in gasoline are going to increase in the future. So it is consistent with a type of progressivity in these particular pieces of legislation.

There are 39 fraternal societies participating in this $50,000 amount per annum, which is anticipated for the year 1974. That means that on average, what, $1,200 per fraternal society. Of those fraternal societies, 14 of the 39 would be classed as being beneath the $50,000 per annum total premium revenue; that's $50,000 to their firm.

So in other words we're talking about 14 of them being extremely minor in total amount of revenue to themselves, not to mention what the province would receive on the basis of the two per cent premium tax. On those corporations I suspect we're talking around something less than $200 per annum each. It's perhaps significant to them; however it's not of the significance that was originally thought.

On the larger corporations; one of them would be the International Order of Foresters. That is a rather massive organization and I suspect they contribute a significant part of that $50,000 per annum anticipated revenue at two per cent. They have a 20-storey building up here and presidents and so on; they're a big corporation.

Mr. Breithaupt: Can you tell us—

Mr. Walker: The rationale behind the point was that we received information from the Superintendent of Insurance indicating that these fraternal societies are, in fact, engaging in the life insurance business on a commercial scale. Therefore why should they not be taxed on the same premium tax laws that apply to other insurance companies? That's basically the rationale behind it. There seems to be a justice applicable.

Mr. Good: Only among your members.

Mr. Walker: The 1969 amendments to corporation income tax taxed these particular companies by both Ontario and the federal government, and of course Ontario participated in those, so there was recognition of their commercial nature back in 1969, to which this province acquiesced.

The hon. member for Waterloo North raised certain questions, I believe, relative to the distinction between a mutual benefit society and the fraternal society. It can be said that under the Insurance Act the mutual benefit society is defined as being a mutual corporation formed for the purpose of providing sick and funeral benefits for its members, or other purposes related directly thereto except life insurance. There is a distinct exception put in there.

Fraternal societies do not have this distinction. They are not restricted like the mutual benefit societies and can enter into contracts for life, accident and sickness insurance. Therefore, they can engage in what we deem to be a commercial enterprise. It's felt that in all equity they should be responsible for paying the tax that other commercial enterprises enter into.

Mr. Good: Mr. Chairman, one comment lest there be some mistake, because as I understand it the commercial enterprise upon which you are hanging your whole argument is only among members of the fraternal society. Now do you deem that to be a commercial enterprise?

Mr. Walker: The fraternal society is, in itself, issuing these contracts of insurance for life insurance. We are considering it to be a commercial enterprise, and that it should be responsible, like any other corporation issuing life insurance.

Mr. Breithaupt: Not to prolong this too much, Mr. Chairman, but just for a bit of clarification in this area, I take it, then, that from these 39 companies which are going to be providing approximately $50,000 in income—as I recall your comments—some 14 of them are below the $50,000 total premium amount, which would, therefore, give them $100 a year; $200, I suppose, in this pact.

Is it, then, true that, to take the example you mentioned — the Forester's organization, which is a large insurance organization—that it would be providing the bulk of this projected $50,000 figure? Or would this be reasonably spread among half a dozen of the larger ones, with very little coming from the balance? Could you give me a rough ratio as to your expectations from the size of the companies that exist now?

The reason I ask for this is to see if in fact the problem exists really only in one or two situations. The others are going to have to be lumped in, however, in order to have you resolve what you see to be your concern.

Mr. Walker: Fourteen out of 39 provide, perhaps $3,000; and so that means 24 out of the 39 provide $47,000. We get into a bit of a delicate area when we start talking about individual companies, but I do feel it's fair to say that the largest companies, among whom would be the Foresters, would be paying the bulk of that remaining $47,000. But, then, again, for that particular operation, even $47,000 cannot be considered that significant an impact to its overall expenditure. It has a relatively large operation. However, we're not in a position to break down any further than that the individual contributions.

Mr. Breithaupt: It's interesting to—

Mr. Walker: The Superintendent of Insurance publishes reports on insurance. These are available to the public and there may very well be information contained within those that may afford some form of answer to you.

Mr. Breithaupt: I am not particularly interested in going into the dollar amount that any one company would pay. We're looking at this as a matter of some principle. The only presumption was that possibly, again the Foresters, being a larger organization, might well be covering the bulk of this and that you were sort of using a sledge hammer to solve a small mosquito-type problem.

What does interest me is whether or not you will receive any particular approaches from the organization involving these 39 societies. It was my understanding they did have some form of Ontario-wide organization. I am wondering if you can advise us whether the organization has been particularly concerned about this additional cost?

It is reasonable to presume that some of the particular members would feel a certain concern because of the presumption they had made that the benefits they were able to give to their members, even though they might be fairly small, were still benefits that were not otherwise being taxed away; and if those benefits provided certain awards or supported certain projects, there was some value, I suppose, to the provincial society as a whole.

Could you tell me whether any particularly consistent approach has been made or are we really not being faced with a great amount of discontent from the application of this change?

Mr. Walker: The contracts entered into before January 1, 1974, are invalid, but the contracts, after that date no doubt will reflect this two per cent tax to some degree in their premiums. In effect they will be on a more competitive basis, if I can use that term, with the operations of other life insurance distributing companies.

To the question on the type of reaction we have received, my understanding is, as the hon. member has indicated, there is a fairly substantial organization of these fraternal societies and their complaint, if I could call it that, has not been greatly noticed. It hasn't been of any significance. It has not come to my attention in the area of revenue; and one letter has been sent, I believe, to the Treasurer, indicating the fraternal societies' displeasure with this particular tax. However, the reaction has been mild to say the least.

Mr. Chairman: Does section 18 then stand as part of the bill? The member for Ottawa Centre wanted a question on 17.

Mr. Cassidy: Just a question which parallels the question I asked the minister about the banks a few minutes ago. Could the minister or his parliamentary assistant say what was the revenue from the special taxes on railways, sleeping car operators and telegraph lines and so on?

Hon. Mr. White: Which section is that, please?

Mr. Cassidy: Section 17. I asked you if we could go back to that because —

Hon. Mr. White: That has been passed already. I will get it for you though.

Mr. Cassidy: Okay, and what will the revenue be under the new capital—

Hon. Mr. White: The member will give it to you.

Mr. Walker: To repeat the special taxes, with the exception of the banks and the imposition of ordinary capital tax on the corporations to which it applied, results in an estimated net increase in the revenue of $500,000.

Mr. Cassidy: Do you happen to know is it from $500,000 to a $1 million or from $4 million to $4.5 million.

Mr. Walker: I don't have that.

Mr. Chairman: Does section 17 then stand as part of the bill? Any other comments, questions or amendments in any later section of the bill?

If not, shall the bill be reported?

Bill 94 reported.

Hon. Mr. White moves the committee rise and report.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House reports one bill without amendment and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading upon motion.

Bill 94, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT

Hon. Mr. Carton moves second reading of Bill 124, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex South.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, this bill appears to be merely a housekeeping collection of various amendments the minister is bringing in. I know the Highway Traffic Act is something of concern to all, and I would like to comment briefly on the several principles that are enunciated throughout the various clauses of this particular amendment.

Right at the start, Mr. Speaker, I am very interested—and I know you will be, too—that the word "mobile home" has been excluded, in the definition, from a trailer. This has been an area of confusion in the minds of the public and, no doubt the authorities are administering this Act. I am still not clear in my own mind as to whether a camper, as we might know it, is considered as a mobile home. It certainly may be the mobile home of many of our residents during the summer months and I am not clear as to whether interpretation of this particular section would include that particular designation.

In checking with the statutes, I note that in this amendment to this particular principle, it is dealing with exemptions for vehicles not designed to transport people. Here again, I don't know the exact ruling on this, as to whether or not persons can be legally carried in a mobile home as such a vehicle is traversing our highways, and whether or not they are subject to any sort of penalty from the law in our province. Possibly the minister could comment on this particular section.

Mr. Speaker, under section 13 there is another principle involved in relation to the operation of wrecking or dismantling of vehicle yards on a temporary basis. I know many of us who represent rural urban ridings are confronted with this problem from time to time and it is quite a thorn in the side of the enforcement branch to move in on some of these particular operations.

We note that the fines have been raised from $50 to $500, which is certainly more significant; but here again, I wonder where the enforcement takes place. In the county of Essex in the past they have relied somewhat on individual municipal councils to enforce the bylaws on wrecking yards. In recent months in our particular county, the county administration itself has undertaken to regulate these particular operations. This isn't spelled out to my satisfaction in the Act as a whole or in these particular amendments.

There are a couple of good sections with which I think everyone in the House will agree. One is that no longer can these people who like to decorate their cars put a lacquer or some sort of modification on their headlamps, which detracts from the intensity of the beam. I noticed, not recently, but some of the headlights are split in half and have coverings and so forth, and I think this is a very good amendment to The Highway Traffic Act.

In this same section, Mr. Speaker, there are areas that I wish the minister possibly had moved in on. I realize we can't debate the principles of things that aren't in the bill, but it relates to confusion that still exists in the minds of much of the public in relation to the flashing lights on school buses. And more particularly on the safety aspect of having flashing lights on farm vehicles that must traverse our highways and super highways from time to time.

I know my particular councils have brought in resolutions in relation in having flashers on all farm wagons and slow-moving vehicles, and this principle unfortunately hasn't been accepted by the ministry at this point, but no doubt in due course it will be.

I notice one omission in—I guess it's subsection 12 of the particular Act, whereby in this principle the insertion is going to read: "A school bus or vehicle operated by a conservation officer, fishery officer, provincial park officer or mine rescue training officer." This is a new principle widening out the terms for those vehicles that can have warning devices. In our province I believe we do have two national parks and I know that in the one in my particular riding, the national park wardens and their officials have undertaken to do much of the administration of the routine legal matters, and as such, from time to time, they also have these warning devices on their vehicles. I draw this to the minister's attention at this time, so that possibly in the interpretation of the Act, a provincial park officer could be determined so that the national park officer would qualify similarly, or the minister would consent to insert those two words for proper legal identification.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will be pleased to note that there is a principle involved where you can no longer decorate the windshield of your vehicle with any coloured coating. I know that you have never done this yourself, sir, but this is another good principle that has been drawn into this particular bill.

In relation to the mechanical fitness aspects I think here again we in this House applaud the amendment that is coming in which negates the necessity of a mechanical fitness test in the transference of ownership of a vehicle from a spouse. I know I have had several occasions where say the widow of a deceased person has had to have it transferred, and had to go through the irritation and the minor cost of having this done. This has certainly flustered many people and has caused them to phone myself and other members of this House, and certainly I welcome this particular amendment.

On the other section, Mr. Speaker: There is quite a series of technical details going into the gross weight of vehicles, and possibly this can come up in the clause-by-clause discussion should we go into that.

But there is a section in this dealing with the gross weight of a vehicle that may traverse, particular bridges in our province. And I just wonder, Mr. Speaker, having travelled with the select committee this past summer in a bus that weighed some 22 tons, as I recall.

An hon. member: With or without members?

Mr. Paterson: Maybe 23 tons with us aboard, but we—

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communication): The drainage select committee?

Mr. Paterson: The select committee. But we happened to traverse on at least two occasions, with fingers crossed, bridges that were posted with five-ton limits; we were studying drainage and—

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Put all the Conservatives into the back of the bus.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): With praying, we were able to get across all right.

Mr. Paterson: Well I just wonder, Mr. Speaker, how these gross weight limits are determined in relation to the strength of the particular bridge and the axle weight and so forth of the vehicles. Possibly the minister in his reply can enlighten me, because it seems to me if there was that much variance in these two instances, something is amiss somewhere in the engineering studies in relation to this matter.

I think these are the main principles to which I can address myself. There are a couple of other minor points, but that's sufficient.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton East.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Well I take it, Mr. Speaker, that with a bill of this nature, it is hard to stick with what might be termed the principle, and I don't think anyone will send it to House in committee. I don't know anyone in this party who wants to do it, so it might be proper to deal with the sections.

I refer to the explanatory note that says, section 25: "The interpretation provisions relating to triple axles are extended and clarified," and we go to section 25, subsection 2, 1(b) which says as follows:

Where three consecutive axles that are not articulated from an attachment to the vehicle common to the consecutive axles are not a triple axle within the meaning of clause j of subsection 1 because their consecutive centres are not equally spaced, any two of the axles that are articulated from an attachment to the vehicle common to the two axles shall be deemed to be a dual axle and the third of the three axles shall be deemed to be a single axle.

Can the minister tell me exactly what that would look like going north on Yonge St. crossing St. Clair?

Mr. Speaker: Well, perhaps these questions should be saved until all members have spoken.

Hon. Mr. Carton: What we are trying to do in this case, Mr. Speaker, is just make certain that the axles are equally spaced. In this Highway Traffic Amendment Act, basically insofar as the sections on axle weights and loads are concerned, we are not making any changes. We are bringing in two or three amendments where we have found that the users, such as the truck owners, are able to take advantage of certain conversion units, and this type of thing. So we are trying to make it air-tight.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, if we can't get some answers briefly, we'll have to refer to the House in committee, that's why I wanted an open explanation. It's interesting, and I think I get the drift; it's a sort of complicated type of wording.

Hon. Mr. Carton: We had a lawyer who was an engineer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gisborn: That's my question. Do the people who deal with establishing the hook-ups and the safety attachments take an engineering course in this particular field? Or how do they get their knowledge to determine when the dual-axle highway vehicle is operating safely, without the knowledge of that kind of thing? Do you have specialists in your department who are studying this sort of thing?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Yes, we do have specialists, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I just have a few words to say. I gather that most of these amendments are in response to particular problems that have arisen and been brought to the attention of the ministry.

In the section dealing with flashing lights on buses and other government vehicles—pretty well those of Natural Resources or that ilk—I wonder if I could ask the minister if he might amend this bill to make it perfectly clear to the public in regard to school buses. As I understand the Highway Traffic Act, the present provision is that on the highway, if buses stop with lights flashing, traffic from both directions is required to stop. In the municipalities or in any areas where the speed limit, I believe, is under 35 miles per hour, traffic is not required to stop if the buses stop. And the lights apparently aren't put on in those cases in a zone which is under 35 miles an hour.

But in one of my towns, for instance, the school bus pulls up on the opposite side of the street and the very small children cross the street to get into the school grounds. I wonder if the Minister has given consideration to amending the Act, requiring all traffic within municipalities, or even within zones under 35 miles an hour, to stop, when the bus is stopped and discharging students, whether in town or on the highway.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, this is a subject of rather intensive study right now. I appreciate the member's concern. Where part of the difficulty lies is that where it says "over 35 miles per hour," the speed limit in many cases is, in fact, 35 miles per hour. These are regulations that are pretty well universal across the continent insofar as school buses are concerned. But we are studying it, we are concerned about it.

The difficulty, Mr. Speaker, with the member's suggestion to have the traffic stop when the school bus lights are flashing—wherever the bus may be—is that you would truly slow down the traffic, almost to a standstill, within the municipality. This was the principle behind it when it was originally introduced. But in any event, we are studying it and hope to come up with some other method that may be a little better.

Mr. Reid: I can understand that. If I may, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the alternative would be to require all buses to discharge their students on the side that the school is located so that they wouldn't be crossing the street. That really is the problem.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, we will be putting an amendment shortly on the school bus stopping question.

Mr. Reid: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, this Bill 124 is certainly a complex bill. It seems to amend the whole Highway Traffic Act. Almost every paragraph has some change in it, and some of the things are very technical. I think it is incumbent on the minister to give an explanation of this, so I would ask that the bill go to committee before we decide to give it third reading.

I would like to raise a couple of points at the outset, though, that I did notice in going through the bill. One subject I have been concerned with is that of single-use permits. I am presuming that the reason single-use permits are granted is because the load carried is such that it doesn't comply with the present regulations under the Act. In fact, the single-use permit is permission to break the Highway Traffic Act—maybe in length or width or something like that. I understand that there are single-use permits—

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might correct the hon. member. This has nothing to do with that in fact. This is a single trip permit. In other words, where there was a collection of a new vehicle in Ontario by a non-resident, for example, and he just needs a permit to get outside the province; or where there may be an off-road vehicle, whatever it may be, that you want to move a certain distance and it will only be moved once. This single trip permit allows you to pay, therefore, a much lesser fee than if you had to get a registration fee for the vehicle itself. It is something to help the people, and it has nothing to do with what you had in mind.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, if this is an off-road vehicle which is travelling on the road, it has been given special license to accomplish what you cannot normally have. These kinds of vehicles interfere with the normal flow of traffic. The point I am trying to make is that there should be serious thought given to preventing this from getting too far out of line, such as it has with these special use permits.

I have raised with the minister the matter of these long and extra-wide loads. I can see the same thing could be happening here, because our highways are clogged with these special use permits.

This single trip permit appears to me to be somewhat in the same vein as this item covering whatever it may be we are moving for this one particular trip. The trip might be 400 miles long and it might plug up one particular highway for a whole week. I do travel on these highways, particularly single lane highways, with curves and hills. These vehicles can't maintain themselves. I would like to get more information, from the minister on this when we go into committee.

Another point I would like to raise with the minister is the reduction from six months to 30 days of an out-of-province registration. The Act indicates that this is done in reciprocal agreement with other jurisdictions.

Formerly, it was a six months period in any particular year, and I notice that the amendment is reducing this down to 30 days. I would like to know just what arrangements are made with other jurisdictions which might border on us. I just don't understand why we would limit registration to 30 days, when we do invite people to come to the province of Ontario, say on a vacation, or to do business. Have reciprocal arrangements been made with the provinces of Manitoba and Quebec, New York State and these particular states which border on us. I can see that we could get into trouble if reciprocal arrangements have not been made.

Mr. Speaker: Order please, will the hon. member have further comments on the bill?

Mr. Germa: Yes, I will, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have the floor at eight.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 5, 1973

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, just before we start proceedings, I know the hon. members will join me in welcoming the first and third Applewood Boy Scout troops and their leaders from Mississauga here in the West gallery this evening.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Kennedy: No snide remarks.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT (concluded)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury had the floor at the supper-hour recess.

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I have a few more words I'd like to say on Bill 124. This bill has some amendments in it which deal with heavy-duty trucking. I think it is appropriate to ask the minister (Mr. Carton) to define what his long-range objectives are for moving freight and goods between municipalities.

It appears to me that the impetus and focus seem to be on increasing the use of trucks rather than on using railways, which seem to be designed to handle the large cargoes I see on the highways each and every day. These trucks and trailers and pups just seem to be getting out of all proportion.

It appears to me that in this amendment the minister is aggravating the situation by making it easier for conversion units and triple-axle trucks and increasing weight and load factors. I doubt if it's in the public interest to maintain the direction that we are taking in allowing our highways to be subjected to more and more of these heavy-duty loads.

It seems to me that the general public is subsidizing an industry. In fact, we are subsidizing both industries in that we do pick up deficits of the railways and we do supply highways for the trucking industry. It seems to me that were the trucking industry to pay its fair and full share of maintaining its own rights of way, then it would not be in the competitive position that it is now, to continually take loads and freights away from the railways.

I think the Minister of Transportation and Communications is responsible for all aspects of transport, not just highway—rail, pipeline, boats, whatever mode we can have. Also I think we have to have an integrated service. There are certain loads which are, by their very shape and weight, predestined for one mode of transport. There are other loads which should not necessarily be on the highway but because of the competitive advantage given to the trucking industry through our subsidization, more and more of our highways are becoming overloaded.

I suppose to some degree the minister is controlled in laying out specifications by neighbourhood jurisdictions. I'm sure he doesn't want to create an island isolated from the rest of the country. But Ontario being one of the leading industrial provinces, I suspect that a lot of this propulsion in the direction of an extension of trucking weights is coming from this province.

Also contained in the bill is the extension of bus lengths from 35 to 40 ft. Where was the pressure for that increase in size of vehicles, and where does this all end?

At what stage are we going to say that a truck is long enough and at what stage do we say that a bus is big enough and heavy enough? We just seem to be like Topsy. We are growing steadily each year, inch by inch, foot by foot, until we see these massive things on the highway right now.

I think if the minister is going to allow this increase in weights and lengths, then he has to take into consideration the speed at which these loads can move. I think it would have been appropriate for him at this moment to introduce an amendment which would guarantee certain horsepower to a certain vehicle so that it can maintain a certain speed on a certain gradient, because that is becoming a continuing problem in this province. These monster trucks just cannot maintain a safe highway speed to accommodate themselves to the rest of the traffic. The rest of the province is put to some considerable inconvenience to accommodate the vehicles.

These are the kind of questions I would like the minister to explain to us.

I'd like to mention one more point. That is, what is contained in section 19 of his bill "prescribing standards or specifications for any vehicles or any class or classes thereof." Many times from this side of the House we have asked for certain specifications to be laid down and we are usually met with the argument, "We cannot conflict with federal standards."

To some degree I have to agree with that, but this amendment gives the minister full and wide jurisdiction to design his own automobile right here in the Province of Ontario. As far as pollution, emission controls are concerned, bumper safety or any of these things. I just wonder how serious he is and why he would want such power put into this bill. Does he intend to use this and what has he got in mind when he asks for this kind of power?

Certainly I agree that there are certain areas where he should have this power, but to this day I haven't seen him use the power which is already contained within the bill. Yet here we are adding more power to the bill. The minister might like to just tell us what he has in mind in that vein.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to participate? The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, I have only one comment. I think it's probably an unpopular plea but because of clauses 9 and 10 which substitute the new and updated references to the Criminal Code, I want to take the opportunity of putting in a plea for the person who earns his living by driving a truck, and yet finds himself, if convicted of one of the offences, subject to an automatic suspension for three months, and in certain cases for a longer period of time by virtue of the provisions of the Highway Traffic Act.

My experience has been that the men I have had occasion to defend on this kind of a charge are persons who have not been found guilty of impaired driving while driving their trucks in the course of their employment, but are men who were picked up, as most people are, at the end of an evening in a pub somewhere in the vicinity of their home, and have had the misfortune to be spotted and charged.

It seems to me that that is an unduly harsh penalty for the person who earns his living by driving a truck. I hold no brief for people who don't; they can lose their licence and be suspended for three months and they can make their own arrangements. But it is an unduly harsh penalty.

I know that the automatic response to any person with whom I have raised this question is: "Oh, well, if you earn your living by driving a truck it is all the more reason that you should be sure that you don't have a drink and get caught in the evening and charged with impaired driving," and that has always had kind of a hollow ring to me.

I would ask the minister not necessarily to remove the suspension entirely, but to have a provision whereby if, on representation in the courts, it can be established that that person earns his living and supports his family by driving a vehicle, and that the incident for which he is arrested did not occur while he was driving the vehicle in the course of his employment, that there be some special provision inserted for an immediate examination, an immediate lecture, whatever you want to do, something to bring home to the person the danger that he runs.

I think it is unfair that provisions of general application across the province, if applied to a particular limited group, should result in an immensely heavier penalty, and for practical purposes the men either lose their jobs, which is no idle threat—I am not trying to get sympathy from the minister, that is the fact of the matter—or they are required to take a job at a substantially lower rate of pay until they can be reinstated as a driver.

I would ask specifically, Mr. Speaker, that if between now and next year the minister would give serious consideration to seeing if there isn't some halfway house for that special class of persons who suffer that unduly harsh and, in my opinion, excessive penalty because of the suspension provision.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two or three points to make on the principle of the bill. One of them relates to an area that is covered in the bill, and the other one relates to things I think the minister ought to have done during the course of this series of amendments—which are both housekeeping and, in certain cases, matters of principle or of greater merit, or one might say of greater principle.

I mention those items first before going on to something that has already been referred to by the member for Sudbury.

Mr. Speaker, one of the things that puzzled me when the time came to amend the Highway Traffic Act was why the department did not decide to put into this bill general provisions to permit municipalities to institute bus lanes and to create pedestrian malls. It seems to me—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I think the hon. member is really straying too far from the principles enumerated in this particular amending bill. We know that we can only debate those things—

Mr. Cassidy: Your shaft is swift and sure this evening, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Is the member going to lie down and die?

Mr. Cassidy: Well, I don't know.

I do have some difficulty, I must confess, hanging it on any particular clause of the bill. I think I will let the minister comment on that and maybe you can decide whether or not he is in order.

There will be other occasions to comment on this but it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that now is the time, the time is right. The kind of feeling about cities was such that the minister could have put powers in here, which then would have been subject to approval by the ministry, or by the Lieutenant Governor in Council; similar to many other things in the Highway Traffic Act in which there is a power of regulation, or a power of approval by the department, in order to ensure that the power is not unwisely or unnecessarily used.

The other point that I wanted to raise with the minister is that following on from the hon. member for Sudbury, we would very much like to know just what the government has got in mind in the amendment to section 60 of the Act. The new clause, inserted into section 60, gives the minister powers to prescribe "standards or specifications for any vehicles or class or classes thereof." This is a very broad power; there's no question about that at all.

My interpretation of it, and the hon. member for Sudbury's interpretation as well, is that this allows the minister to do virtually anything as far as determining the kinds of vehicles which may be permitted on the road and the kinds of equipment they may have, the kinds of engines they may have. In fact, I suspect that he can probably completely ban every vehicle that currently runs on the road, with the exception, let's say, of the kiddie car and the bicycle, by means of arbitrary or unreasonable standards, which he now has the power to set down in this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, if this were a genuine innovation in government policy, we would recognize it. We would have been called to the Ontario Science Centre about three or four days ago when this bill was put on the order paper. We would have been subjected to a three-, or four-, or five-screen presentation with the minister and his policy minister alternating under a spotlight with a blue curtain behind them.

We would have been told that the Ontario government had decided that the time had come to do something about our cities, to do something about the energy crisis, by restricting energy consumption on the highways and by restricting the size and nature of vehicles using our streets and highways, in particular, our urban streets.

It is evident that that is not the government's intention because they have not had the enormous public relations show so typical whenever they think they have something new under their hat. It is unfortunate that we have had so many of these extravaganzas that the government's credibility has been weakened, even when it tries to tip off the public that it has something major in mind.

However, in this particular case it's evident that the government does not have something major in mind. There will be no grand promises of saving our cities; no grand promises of solving the energy crisis in a province which imports 80 per cent of its energy requirements.

The question then arises, what on earth has the minister got in mind in this particular case? And, secondly, why on earth hasn't he and his government got the determination or the guts to enter into this field to be pioneers in North America, and to make some pretty drastic and important decisions about the kind of vehicles that can use our urban streets, in particular, and about the degree of energy consumption which is going on on the highways of the province every day of the year?

Mr. Speaker, the minister I'm sure has heard, or seen, or read, or been advised by that panoply of consultants who surround him at estimates time, that we are approaching an energy crisis in North America. At the current time, something like 2,000 service stations out of 60,000, I think it is—or 600,000—have been closed in the United States because of lack of fuel supplies. They are independents who have been cut off by the major suppliers because the fuel is not available.

That has been happening in Ontario as well. In the Ottawa area, a chain of 15 or 20 stations is now threatened with closure. The only reason they didn't close down on June 1 was because of the Ontario legislation that prohibits them from closing that suddenly without due notice or payment in lieu of notice to their employees. But they are now threatened with a lack of fuel and with an actual shutdown.

Fuel prices, therefore, with the closing down of the independent operators, are already rising quite drastically. And this is simply a symptom of a situation which seems bound to get worse and worse.

There are several ways of reacting to it. I fear that the government's reaction will be simply to say, "Let the market decide." The Bay St. plutocrats in their Cadillacs will be able to pay the new prices of the fuel and, therefore, there is no particular problem because their friends are well protected. In the meantime, the fellows who work at the industrial plants, east and west and north of Toronto, who have to commute 15 or 20 miles each way to their workplace because they can't afford housing nearby, will find themselves in more and more difficulty with the problems of paying for the new cost of energy.

Mr. Speaker, there is another way. It seems to me that given the situation in our cities, given the impending energy crisis, given the environmental consequences of automobile traffic in particular, that it is time for the government—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect for the hon. member I don't believe there is anything in the particular bill about this. I want to be lenient with the member.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, this is entirely relevant—

Mr. Speaker: I want to be lenient with him but I find nothing in the bill about this.

Mr. Cassidy: —because the powers given in this Act will permit the government to act on the problems of which I am talking or, as I fear, the government won't act. We want to get some answers from the minister.

Mr. Speaker: This may be the hon. member's interpretation but I find nothing in the Act which has to do with the topic about which he has been speaking

Mr. Cassidy: Well, the Act says that the minister—

Mr. Speaker: It's a multi-purpose bill.

Mr. Cassidy: The Act says that the minister may prescribe the maximum weight of automobiles allowed on the roads of Ontario. That certainly comes under standards and specification to the vehicle, or class or classes thereof.

It says that the minister may prescribe the engine capacity of a vehicle which certainly affects the fuel consumption, and also the size. It says that the minister may prescribe the size, the width, the length of a vehicle, which certainly affects the urban environment, the amount of land required for parking, the capacity of our streets, the need, or lack of need, to widen our streets.

It says that the minister may continue, probably more intensively than now, to prescribe pollution abatement requirements and safety standards. In fact, the minister could even prescribe the maximum gas consumption of any new automobile sold in Ontario under the powers that are prescribed in the bill.

One might even dare to say that it's socialist legislation, Mr. Speaker. The only pity is that I don't think that the minister actually views it in that way. He would nod if he did but I don't see him nodding.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): He's not a nodder.

Mr. Cassidy: He's not a nodder, no.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Let the record show he nods negatively.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I can't say that we, in the New Democratic Party, can say how far the minister ought to go right now. What worries us is that there is no indication of great interest in this subject on the part of the government.

I would say that as an initial step certain restrictions on the size of vehicles being sold in Ontario are probably feasible and publicly acceptable at this time; that the people whom they would affect are people who could ride in equal luxury, speed and comfort in vehicles which consume less road space and less energy; and that the principle could at least be instituted in Ontario cities that vehicles above a certain size for the transport of one or two people are no longer acceptable because of their environmental consequences and because of the degree of energy consumption which they entail.

It may be a matter of several years' education before the public is willing to accept that the only vehicles to run within Ontario cities can be the size of Pintos and Vegas and Novas—small compact cars of that sort or, for that matter, Volkswagens and Datsuns, if I dare say the words. But it seems to me that we should be starting to move in that direction.

I think that the minister should take the opportunity to talk on his views about the way in which transport regulations can be used in order to help resolve, or forestall, the energy crisis, to prevent the environmental consequences of those automobiles which inevitably must be used in certain parts of cities, in order to prevent the kind of problems we are suffering from cars right now.

Mr. Speaker, does the minister intend to go that route? Or has he simply been advised by his bureaucrats that the wording of the Act in section 60 as it stands right now is a bit inadequate, because they can see the remote possibility that in certain places the prescription of devices that must be included in motor vehicles isn't sufficient and therefore, like all bureaucrats, they do not want to be subject to this Legislature and therefore they want to have as broad powers as possible without the need to come back here?

You know, Mr. Speaker, if I can again turn for a minute to the energy crisis.

Mr. Speaker: No, I think the hon. member may not. He has been speaking out of order, and I haven't made a ruling, I have made suggestions to him. I will have to make a ruling.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): He is completely out of order.

Mr. Cassidy: Not at all. Do hon. members think the energy crisis is out of order?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: Do hon. members think automobile fuel consumption does not alter the energy crisis?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: It certainly is, Mr. Speaker. I can't accept that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, it is not part of this bill.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept that. It is obviously a portion of the—

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): The hon. member will either accept it or get thrown out.

Mr. Speaker: I have attempted to tell the hon. member he is speaking out of order. He can speak only to the multi-principles enumerated in this bill, and he may speak to those principles only. If he feels there are certain steps that should have been taken that haven't been taken he may introduce his own bill, but he may not discuss them or debate them to the degree that he has been in this particular bill. I would ask him to complete his remarks and speak in order to the principles enumerated in this bill only.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that this minister is prone to use small clauses to bring in big principles?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may not debate my ruling. He may continue to speak to this bill only.

Mr. Cassidy: All right, Mr. Speaker, I think I have made the three points that I wanted to make. One is about the use that the minister intends to make of these very broad powers to prescribe the size, weight, fuel consumption and so on of vehicles; and two and three are the questions of why he is not proceeding to give general legislative powers to approve both bus lanes, to solve the transit problems within the cities, and pedestrian malls such as the one currently proposed for Toronto.

Mr. Speaker: Again the hon. member is out of order in the last few remarks. Does any other hon. member wish to participate?

The hon. member for Ottawa East.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a few brief comments in relation to section 9 of the bill. I think the minister is aware of the points of view that I have expressed to him personally by way of correspondence, and I would like to join the member for Riverdale in making certain comments.

If the minister is making certain amendments to section 20 or section 21 of the Act, it would seem to me that this would have been an ideal opportunity for making the amendments to conform with, in fact, the sections of the Code that are being quoted in the section of the Highway Traffic Act.

I know the position the minister has taken on that. I must say that in all fairness to him and to the officials in his department that the federal government, in bringing in its legislation for intermittent sentence under the Criminal Code, did not exactly do it in a diplomatic fashion. In other words they attempted to shove it a bit down the minister's throat, and he didn't really appreciate that situation. I can appreciate that he would have a certain amount of reluctance in toeing the line with them. There was a lack of co-operation on their part.

In spite of that I feel that they were right in what they were doing. Even though the minister took the approach that they were being soft on drivers who were driving while they were impaired, in fact what the federal government was trying to do—and I agree with its principle, but I don't agree with its methods—was to have fair sentences.

It was not fair when the minister said that everyone convicted under a certain section of the Code would, under section 21 of the Highway Traffic Act, be automatically suspended for a period of three months if there was no accident—

Mr. Speaker: Is this part of the bill? I am attempting to find it.

Mr. Roy: It is section 9 where there are amendments to certain sections of the Code and these sections, Mr. Speaker, refer to suspensions—intermittent suspensions under the Code.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is quite right, he may proceed.

Mr. Roy: I might be on the borderline, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: Oh never.

Mr. Roy: In any event, Mr. Speaker, to the minister, when the amendments to the Code were brought in making intermittent sentences, and he left the mandatory automatic suspension under section 21, which is being presently amended here to conform with the new amendments in the Code, or the new section numbers in the code, it was not fair.

I accept the principle that people who are convicted under the Highway Traffic Act should lose their licence, but is it fair treatment to individuals such as the hon. member for Riverdale has pointed out, who earn their living as truck drivers or earn their living by driving? When he is suspended, when he receives a conviction when he receives a sentence, he automatically loses his job, whereas the minister and I—he is in even a better position than I am because he has got a chauffeur; I can always take a taxi—it doesn't affect my profession, it doesn't affect my employment.

I think he can appreciate what the federal government was attempting to do by imposing intermittent sentences, and I thought that the idea was fair. For those of us who have been in court, and I am sure the minister has, and I would have thought that as a lawyer who probably has pleaded cases under the impaired section to the Criminal Code—

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): They weren't convicted.

Mr. Roy: They weren't convicted. Yes, well, the minister was very fortunate. Very good lawyer, probably. In any event, what I am saying to the minister is that I think he can appreciate that it is not fair if you have two individuals who are up for the same offence, who receive what appears to be, by his legislation, the same sentence and one loses his job and the other one carries on, by using taxis, gainfully employed. I think that is what they were trying to do.

The second point, which is very bad in this case, and again as an officer of the court the minister would appreciate this, is that it looked very bad for the administration of justice. On the one hand, the federal government was publicizing the fact that people from now on would receive intermittent sentences. These individuals would end up before the court, plead guilty and the judges were caught in impossible situations. They would say: "Well, I thought I could get an intermittent sentence." The judge would say: "No, under the Highway Traffic Act, it's mandatory, you lose it."

And so, we should never allow feuds in this country—well, we always will have feuds I suppose, federal and provincial—but we should never have contradictory legislation because the member of the public doesn't particularly care where the legislation comes from. All he wants is some consistency.

The people who get blamed for it are not the federal government, but the judges in the courts. They are saying: "The judges don't know what the heck they are doing. They are out of their minds. You know, I've just read in the paper that I can get an intermittent term, and he just told me I can't."

So you have a very confusing situation. God knows that the administration of justice doesn't need any more bad publicity. It gets enough on its own.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): The lawyers refuse.

Mr. Roy: Well, the hon. member is probably right. The lawyers have some contribution to make to that.

But in any event, I am saying, Mr. Speaker, these are the two points I wanted to make to the minister and I think that in spite of the fact that there was some pressure by the federal government he should have taken this opportunity to make his section 21 more flexible.

Now, the other matter I want to mention, Mr. Speaker, very briefly, is that we are soon going to have to face the problem, when we are talking about motor vehicles, of the question of bicycle safety, because we are getting more and more bicycles on the highway and I think it is time that the Highway Traffic Act faced up to that problem.

I really think this is a serious situation. We are encouraging people to make use of that form of transportation and I think that the Highway Traffic Act—you know young people are not given any instructions and I think we are going to have to lean toward what is being done with drivers: training, licensing and better control.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Any other member wish to participate? If not, the hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I'll deal firstly with the question raised by the hon. member for Riverdale and the hon. member for Ottawa East, and that relates to the licence suspensions. I know the hon. member for Ottawa East will know that there has not been a decision handed down in connection with that case. It was heard, I believe, on May 28.

I have my own personal views with respect to the suspension of licences and I would personally agree that the three-month suspension is rather too harsh. Perhaps a lighter suspension, for example, of 30 days might be more in order on first offence, because I cannot see an employer firing an employee because he happens to lose his licence for 30 days. For three months I can see it, but I think usually an employer would go along with an employee for a 30-day period because by the time he got notice of suspension and in fact it was suspended it might be down for two or three weeks.

So I think it has to be done in that manner. I must say that I do regard the licensing of drivers as being provincial. I do believe that driving is a privilege, and not a right. And I must say I am appalled at some of the requests that I get for intermittent driving privileges when, on checking—and these are from very responsible people, from members of the Legislature, members of the House of Commons, who will write and ask me to check into a certain record—I will find that he may have intermittent driving privileges but in fact he has been convicted three times for driving impaired.

So that is the other side of the coin.

We have to protect people from drinking drivers because 50 per cent of the fatal accidents are caused by drinking drivers. I think it must be tempered with mercy, as the member says, and I would hope that in the future I will be able to bring in some legislation that would perhaps lighten the penalty insofar as the drinking driver is concerned on first offence.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): The minister is going to have a job to convince three of his confrères who answered questions on that on Friday morning.

Mr. Roy: Would the minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Yes.

Mr. Roy: Why would people be requesting intermittent term licences? The minister can't give them except if there is an accident in the last three months. Is that what he is talking about? He can't give intermittent terms under the Highway Traffic Act anyway except for that limited situation.

Hon. Mr. Carton: No, right. These were people who were under a misapprehension of the new law. As I say, it isn't just a case of three convictions for drinking and driving—there are people whose records would include three offences for drinking and driving and, perhaps, another page of driving offences that just appall me when one looks at it. Then there are people making representation on their behalf because they happen to drive for a living.

I think we have to take all these factors into consideration and temper the situation as it now is. I think that perhaps a 30-day suspension might be more in order and I am looking forward to introducing some legislation, perhaps, in that regard in the future.

With respect to bicycle safety, as the hon. member for Ottawa East mentioned, we do have bicycle safety courses in the schools. We are cognizant of the bicycle situation and the rapid growth in popularity of bicycles. As members know, bicycles are now governed by the Highway Traffic Act. As members can also appreciate, the difficulty is that most policemen—and I can understand this—are loath to lay charges against a nine-year-old cyclist. I think the member has the right approach. I think it is a case of education; we do, in fact, have this and perhaps will be able to enlarge on it in the future.

With respect to the member for Sudbury—I am going back to before the 6 o'clock hour—who mentioned the single trips. As I mentioned at that time, the single trips relate not to the overload permits but to a single vehicle. As I explained, it is for someone who is coming to Ontario, purchasing a car and going back to another province. They need a permit to get back and, in fact, would have to buy a licence in their own jurisdiction when they do get back. This would help them in that case.

No matter whether or not they would get a single permit for this purpose, they would still be subject to the load limits and to the length limits and all the other restrictions that would apply to loads. I might add at the same time that I feel we do not issue these permits the member was talking about—the load and length permits—indiscriminately. As a matter of fact, there are many members of the Legislature on all sides who make representation to me when certain permits have been refused. In nine cases out of 10, I will go along with the decision that was made by the ministry officials. They are very tough.

There is the odd occasion and I can think of one recently where, because of a certain combination of circumstances, there may have been 200 people out of work. This was the kind of situation in which we would allow it. As I say, they are not done indiscriminately. We are rather tough with respect to granting those single trip permits so far as weight and length and so on are concerned. They also are done under very strict supervision.

With respect to the bus lengths, the member mentioned that we were catering, as it were, to the trucking industry. The reason we increased the bus lengths very simply was that we gave a definition to bus. The reason we were forced to do this was because there is a 40-ft length limit now but certain of the buses in Metropolitan Toronto, for example, have what they call an energy bumper. It's a water bumper and it makes the bus more than 40 ft in length.

By tying in the definition with the other amendment we made, this allows them.

With respect to the multi-module industry mentioned by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre, I think he would agree with me that over the past number of months the action which has been taken by the ministry in all modes indicates that we recognize our responsibility and that we are dealing with all modes in the ministry.

We are dealing with air with norOntario services; we are dealing with ferry boats with the Tobermory ferry and the Wolf Island ferry; we are dealing with ONTC and its problem relative to rail freight. We are dealing with highways all the time and with construction and with maintenance. We are dealing with municipal road. We are dealing with dial-a-bus. We are dealing with GO Transit. I truly think that we are being multi-modal and are giving every mode the attention that it deserves. I am hopeful, of course, that we can do even more in the future.

With respect to what the hon. member for Essex mentioned at the outset, about a prohibition against passengers in mobile homes. A mobile home is moved only occasionally and therefore the reason we brought in the amendments was in order that owners would only be required to get a licence, a very temporary licence, just to move the mobile home to its resting place—where it will presumably stay for years. Therefore they will not have to pay the cost of a licence for that purpose. It will be a much lesser fee. There is a prohibition that does prohibit people from being in travel trailers when they are behind cars, but this doesn't apply to mobile homes.

Bridge weights were mentioned when we were talking about axle weights. When the axle weight legislation was brought, I understand there was a grandfather clause put in it at that time to enable the trucking industry to be able to cope with the new situation. The legislation that was brought in by the axle weights is more generous with respect to weights.

The bridge weights are not determined according to that formula that is in the Highway Traffic Act. Bridge weights are determined by the engineering principles that we use on the King's highways. Someone mentioned being on a select committee and travelling over bridges with a five-ton limit; that may or may not have been a municipal bridge. I'm not certain how they determine their particular authority.

I might mention that in this Highway Traffic Act, we have an amendment that now makes it possible—until this time it was not possible—to have a penalty for travelling over a bridge if the vehicle is over the weight limit. Until now there wasn't a penalty and this is now included in this particular Act.

The national parks were also mentioned by one of the hon. members. This had to do with red flashing lights and he was asking about the national parks. Well, the Highway Traffic Act would not apply to national park roads because they are under federal jurisdiction.

There was also a question brought up about the 30-day limit pertaining to visitors. This does not affect the visitors coming to Ontario. This relates to a resident of Ontario who drives a motor vehicle with a licence belonging to another jurisdiction. For example, there are, as I understand it, cars that are registered in Quebec that are used by permanent Ontario residents for business in Ontario. This is the kind of thing that we are trying to correct with this particular amendment.

I mentioned that we will be bringing in some amendments relating to the school bus stopping law.

The question of malls was mentioned by the member for Ottawa Centre. These are under the Municipal Act, but are presently approved under the Highway Traffic Act.

We are not increasing the bus lengths, as the member for Sudbury mentioned. I just mentioned that a little while ago—it has to do with the energy bumpers.

With respect to sections 19 and 20—our present authority in the Act for making regulations prescribing standards and so on—these relate to devices in or on a vehicle. That is the way the present authority stands. Through the efforts of the Canadian Conference of Motor Transport Authorities, we now have a standard developed for school buses and this has been published by the Canadian Standards Association. We have all agreed to adopt this standard, but at present we lack the statutory authority to do so. So this is just so we can prescribe the whole vehicle rather than prescribing components of that particular vehicle—that's the purpose of that particular amendment.

I understand, perhaps I'm being presumptuous, but I understand the hon. member for Sudbury was going to have it referred to committee. Since we will be going through it clause by clause, I will end my remarks.

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): May I ask a question of the minister, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Will the minister accept a question at this point?

Mr. Givens: I'm curious to know, in the case of the representations that the minister said have been made on behalf of sinners by what he calls responsible people—MPs and MPPs—would he have reason to believe, when making these representations, that these representors happen to know about the terrible nature of their records? I ask that because I've been asked on a number of occasions to make representations and I've refused because I've suspected the records were bad, but you never really know. Does he have reason to believe that they did know?

Hon. Mr. Carton: I thank the hon. member for that question because that's a very pertinent point. I really don't think that the people who have been solicited for their aid really know what the driving records are and, as a matter of fact, if you inform the person who is soliciting aid on behalf of an individual they're quite embarrassed when you point out the driving record.

The hon. member is quite right. The individuals do not know but then by the same token, the people asking for aid for these particular people could tell the truth, but, in fact, they don't. They sort of gild the lily, or trillium, or whatever.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the bill be ordered for third reading?

Committee of the whole?

Mr. Reid: Third reading.

Mr. Cassidy: We want it in committee, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The whole House?

Agreed.

Clerk of the House: The second order, House in committee of the whole; Mr. R. D. Rowe in the chair.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT

House in committee on Bill 124, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any comments, questions or amendments in any of the first five sections?

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): On section 2, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: On section 2. Is there anything before section 2?

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer to section 2, new paragraph 8. It has to do with these single trip permits again. The minister did say that they would accommodate a person buying an automobile in the Province of Ontario and trying to move it out, but he also mentioned that they may include some off-road vehicle which had just been transported from one site to another. This is the kind of thing that I'm concerned with.

I can readily understand a person buying a vehicle in Ontario and moving it out in one day, but then there is this other problem that the minister intimated was there. Certain stationary equipment, while really not stationary, could be mobile for a certain designated trip. I just wondered what the minister thought about that.

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, there would be, for example, pieces of equipment used in the lumbering industry up north that wouldn't necessarily be mobile except when they were going from one area to another—this perhaps might be once a year. And also, for example, if there was a piece of equipment that you had to move to get repaired it would seem to me ridiculous to make them get a licence that would require them to pay a fee commensurate with a year-round service when it's only being used to move them into a garage for repairs, or whatever.

Mr. Germa: It would seem to me that this type of vehicle then should be loaded on a flatbed trailer which can maintain and coincide with highway regulations and highway speeds and highway safety features.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): They could run on the shoulder.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 2 stand as part of the bill?

Section 2 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any other comments, questions or amendments on any part of the bill?

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Section 19, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Anything before 19?

Mr. Germa: Number 13, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: I'm sorry, which one?

Mr. Germa: Number 13.

Mr. Chairman: All right. The member for Sudbury on 13.

Mr. Germa: Section 13(1) excludes licensing for parking stations and parking lots. Are parking lots and parking stations going to be without any regulation or control, or licence or jurisdiction? There seems to be no provision for transferring under any other regulation. It implies that parking lots are just going to be forgotten about and they can function at will without regulation or penalty.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, this provision as I understand it has been for some time in the Highway Traffic Act and it really has not been enforced. For example, the city of Hamilton or the city of Toronto who have parking lots, do not pay this fee and get this particular licence.

This licence doesn't provide any benefit to the public or to the ministry. That is why over the years no prosecutions have taken place. Probably the reason that there was this provision originally would be in the case of wrecking people who would have licences to turn in, or stolen vehicles or this kind of thing.

But bear in mind that there is still the municipality licence which is the major factor in that it has to do with zoning and all other aspects. It would still be in force. This is just relating to the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 13 stand as part of the bill?

Section 13 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Anything before section 19? All right, section 19 then, the member for Yorkview.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, this has already been mentioned by a couple of hon. member. I don't know that we need to belabour it too long because the minister has already commented on it. However, it is rather a wide power which the minister has in section 60-1(a)—“requiring the use or incorporation of any device in or on any vehicle that may affect the safe operation of the vehicle on the highway or may reduce or may prevent injury to persons in the vehicle on a highway or to persons using a highway and prescribing the specifications thereof."

Subsection (b) designates the power for testing the devices and making sure they are viable. Then we have subsection (c) prescribing standards or specifications for any vehicle or any class or classes thereof.

Mr. Chairman, there is no question that in this House over the years there has been a lot of discussion on the whole matter of vehicle safety and the power of this government to institute that kind of safety in Ontario. The answer has generally been that, after all, the federal government has taken over this whole power of specifying safety standards. As I indicated last Friday morning here, Ottawa has pretty well followed the order of Washington and the Department of Transport there. It has not in any realistic way branched out on its own to meet Canadian conditions.

Certainly this section 60, with the addition that we are proposing here tonight, would give this minister the power to pioneer in the Province of Ontario, and really for the whole of Canada, in the matter of safety devices in the motor car field. After all, nearly all the motor cars used within Canada are manufactured in this province. There has been some change, of course, with the international agreements that have been set up, but by and large vehicle manufacturing is here.

So this minister really has the power to designate the standards for Canadian motor vehicles. It seems to me that he should be using it. As I indicated last Friday, I felt that this minister, and other ministers of transport since they meet regularly across the country, should be looking carefully at this whole field. They should insist on Canadian standards which may be applicable to our climate, our conditions, and not have to wait for Washington to crook its little finger so we can act in a realistic way here.

Certainly this minister is in a position of leadership in this Province of Ontario because of the circumstances I have outlined. He is in the position to give that leadership and to insist that Canada does move forward in this field.

In recent days, with the election of President Nixon, the whole safety move in North America has been cut back and the safety vehicle, as I pointed out, has been cribbed, cabined and confined because of the impounding of funds by the President following his election. So the safety vehicles being built in the United States by the AMF cannot now be tested in a realistic way because of the impounding of the funds which the President has ordered.

So I think we just can't afford to wait and with th's power which the minister has given to him in section 60 and in the new subsection (c) of section 1, there is no reason why we can't move forward in Ontario in a realistic way to do the job that should be done.

I would like perhaps a further comment from the minister in this field, because he has an opportunity and he has a great challenge here and he has a chance to do a real service for the motoring public of Canada and for the people who are using our highways and those who impinge upon the motor industry here.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Chairman, I must say I haven't had the opportunity of reading the address of the hon. member for Yorkview last Friday; I was at a ministers' conference. I am looking forward to the summer when I will be able to glance over the pages of Hansard.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Catch up on your reading.

Mr. Cassidy: That is a bit snide, you know. It is important enough that you should read it this week.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I would say, Mr. Chairman, that we do have an ongoing relationship with the other provinces insofar as it relates to safety. I recognize the fact that we are now having wide authority. As I mentioned earlier, this was done for the very specific purpose that the federal government has no standards for school buses and it does have standards for buses that relate to certain other items like safety glass and lighting, but for the vehicle itself it doesn't. And we didn't have the statutory authority, and that is the purpose for which we want to bring in this particular amendment, and it will serve our purpose.

So insofar as our authority is concerned it is there, Mr. Chairman. But by the same token it takes a combination, I would suggest, of the federal government and the provincial governments. We hear this in many other areas and I recognize the fact and I applaud the member for Yorkview for his concern about auto safety—he has spoken on this particular topic many, many times in the Legislature and he is listened to by all of us on this particular topic because he is becoming rather expert in this particular area.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Authoritative, knowledgeable, definitive.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I won't go that far, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lewis: Well, I will on his behalf.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Thank your leader, Mr. Young. But in any event, Mr. Chairman, we are cognizant of our responsibilities and we are undertaking them in connection with the other provinces and the federal government.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, just one further observation here. Surely this minister, with his knowledge of this field and his concern, is not willing to do as Ottawa has been doing and wait for the nod in Washington before we accomplish these things for the Canadian people? Surely he is unhappy about this? He must be. He looks intelligent and I know something of his concern for people and for their needs.

But in consideration of the thing that has been happening across the line in recent days—not only Watergate but perhaps some of the attitudes that developed into Watergate—when a President is able to cut back the whole safety movement, when he fires the people who were responsible for it and puts new people in their places, then surely in this country we can give leadership, and not have to wait for word from people in that country who have demonstrated their lack of concern for people and their very great concern for the profits of the corporations concerned in this industry?

The minister surely is ready now to become the white knight in Canada and ride his charger into the fray for the people of this province in this field.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 19 stand as part of the bill? The member for Ottawa Centre?

Mr. Cassidy: He didn't even nod his head, Mr. Chairman.

I would just like to pursue some questions I raised earlier and ask a few specific questions. The minister has mentioned school bus standards agreed between the provinces which would be covered under this particular section. I'd like to know whether this ministry of the government has the intention to go further in terms of prescribing standards of specifications for other vehicles or other classes of vehicles. I'd like to know whether you can go further in prescribing standards and, specifically, is the ministry considering reducing automobile size, weight, power or fuel consumption allowed for new vehicles sold for use in the Province of Ontario?

I'd like to know whether the ministry is studying that matter with an eye to energy preservation, or whether the ministry is studying that matter with an eye to relieving congestion, to reducing parking requirements and to reducing road building needs, generally—in other words, directing their efforts to reducing car sizes for the purpose of improving the environment within major Ontario cities?

Hon. Mr. Carton: No, Mr. Charman, we have not gone that far. We are not studying those particular matters.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the minister saying that apart from school bus standards he does not foresee any other use that will be made under this section? Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Carton: No, I'm not saying that, Mr. Chairman, I'm talking of the present. We are not presently studying any of those problems.

Mr. Cassidy: Can you tell us what areas these powers might be used in, in addition to school buses where they are presently contemplated?

Hon. Mr. Carton: As was pointed out, Mr. Chairman, they are very wide powers and they can be used in many areas. I'm mentioning specifically the school bus area because that is the area that we are concerned with at present. Insofar as this province taking the lead in determining the size, the weight, the energy consumption, and so on, of the automobiles per se, no, our ministry is not making any studies in that regard.

Mr. Cassidy: Absolutely no leadership, but the minister does agree that those powers exist under this particular section. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Whether or not they exist, Mr. Chairman, there is also the practical aspect. We are one province among 10 and I still say and always will say that this is a matter that should be taken up by the federal government and that it should be resolved by the federal government—not as the member for Yorkview suggests, by Washington—it should be resolved by the federal government but in conjunction with the provinces.

Mr. Cassidy: So instead of pointing to the South, you are pointing up toward Ottawa.

Is that correct? I would simply say that I think it is time that the minister and the ministry began to contemplate using these powers, that there should be studies under way, that it puzzles and surprises us that there are not studies under way, and that it also surprises me at any rate why, if the government simply intended to do something about school bus standards, it has brought in these very broad powers.

If it only intended to act on school buses, then in fact this is an abuse of the legislative process, because it is the bringing in of powers that far exceed what is necessary to do what the government intends to do.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 19 stand as part of the bill?

Section 19 agreed to.

Any further comments, question or amendments on any later section of the bill? The member for Sudbury.

Mr. Germa: On section 25, Mr. Chairman, could I ask a question?

Mr. Young: Section 22.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Yorkview.

Mr. Young: In section 22, the minister is saying that the half-load provisions "do not apply to a vehicle operated on behalf of the ministry or a municipality or other authority having jurisdiction and control of the highway, where such vehicle is engaged in the application of abrasives or chemicals to the highway or in the stockpiling of abrasives or chemicals for use on the highway."

I presume that means sanding trucks and trucks of that nature, and that you are going to allow them to exceed the limit. I presume there is no great concern over breaking up the highways because of the small number of such trucks that would be involved, and also because of the supervision—the concern that these people may have not to overload.

Mr. Chairman: Does section 22 then stand as part of the bill?

Section 22 agreed to.

Section 25. The hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman: sections 25, 26 and 27 go through the routine of giving regulations and specifications for the conversion of trucks from two-axle to triple-axle, and I just wondered what the full intent is. Is the weight per square inch on the highway going to be increased? Is this the end result of these sections? Is that what we're trying to accomplish here, to put more load on each axle?

Hon. Mr. Carton: No, on the contrary, Mr. Chairman, in fact we are not increasing it. As I mentioned when we brought in the axle weight loads a year or two years ago, whenever it was, there were configurations that were causing us some concern and this is to eliminate that. In other words, this will be to the benefit of the province insofar as the protection of the roads is concerned.

Mr. Chairman: Shall this section stand as part of the bill?

Section 25 agreed to.

Any further comments, questions or amendments on any other section of this bill?

Bill 124 reported.

Hon. Mr. Guindon moves that the committee rise and report.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House reports one bill without amendment and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

THIRD READING

Bill 124, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Guindon moves second reading of Bill 126, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, our spokesman on this bill has just been called out for a moment and perhaps he could speak second.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to lead off on this?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Oh, here he comes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Where was he?

Mr. Reid: Just on the telephone. Just looking after my constituents as usual. Mr. Speaker, thank you for the courtesy.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): It was the member's leader.

Mr. Reid: I thank my leader also. See he gets a raise the next time around.

Mr. Speaker, in rising on behalf of the Liberal Party in connection with Bill 126, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act, there are many things in this bill I want to discuss. There are perhaps more omissions than commissions in the bill. On the whole, however, I should perhaps ease the minister's mind by telling him at the outset that we will support the principle of this bill.

However, we feel there are a number of shortcomings in the bill. We wonder, for instance, why it took the government and this minister so long to bring forth a bill that would increase the small emolument of those people who find themselves on permanent disability under the Workmen's Compensation Act. Generally, the principle of the bill is to raise those people who are presently receiving under or around $175 maximum pension to $250 per month. We wonder if this really is sufficient, particularly for those who were injured in accidents 10 years ago, 20 years ago, perhaps 30 years ago. The bill has been operative, I believe since 1908 or 1909.

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): Since 1915.

Mr. Reid: Right, 1915. And while supposedly we don't have to go back that far, there are still those people who were injured 20 and 30 years ago who have been trying to live on the small pension that has been provided under the Workmen's Compensation Act.

We agree with the minister that perhaps future employers should not be forced to carry the burden for accidents that happened in years gone by. But, on the other hand, when we balance that with the fact that these people have to live in today's world with the rate of inflation as it is and with the fantastic cost-of-living increase in even the last four or five years, we wonder if this is sufficient. We wonder, Mr. Speaker, if perhaps there shouldn't be a greater cushion built into the Workmen's Compensation Act payments by employers to provide for inflation and the increased cost of living over the years.

Surely the minister would agree that for a person who is permanently disabled, or his widow and family living under the circumstances that have been provided by past legislation, this is hardly adequate.

The bill really does not give those people an increase in the sense that they can provide themselves with better accommodation, perhaps a better quality of food, more clothing and so on. What it really does is to compensate for the increases in the cost of living over the past four, five or 10 years. We don't believe this is adequate, but we do believe that the government finally is taking at least a step in the right direction.

We notice, for instance, that the payment to a widow or an invalid husband is doubled from $250 to $500; the payment for dependents is increased from $50 to $70, and for each child under the age of 16 from $60 to $80. We still wonder, Mr. Speaker, if this is adequate compensation for those families that have lost the main bread winner in the family; if this is adequate remuneration or an adequate standard of living for those people who have to carry on under these circumstances. The minister indicated in the question period on May 10, I believe, when he stated these bills would be presented, that a number of people at the lowest end of the scale in regard to workmen's compensation payments would be affected. I wonder if the minister can indicate to us tonight just how many people that is? How many people have been receiving these minor amounts over the years? How many people still will be left without an adequate standard of living under the Workmen's Compensation Act?

It may be a radical thing to do in regard to workmen's compensation, but perhaps the province as a whole, through the consolidated revenue fund, should look to providing supplementary benefits to those people who find themselves unable to exist on the workmen's compensation payments they receive.

This is the first labour legislation we have had in some time, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that the minister, while he has that portfolio, will bring forth some more to equalize and balance the role of the employee in our society. The minister has tried to do this, to some extent I imagine, by this bill, by raising the level from a gross salary of $9,000 to $10,000, and so on, but we still do not feel that this is adequate.

If a workman is injured on the job, especially if he suffers a total permanent disability, he is in the position of being in that situation for the rest of his life. Supposedly he could have that tragic accident at a very early age, and his wife and children would have to exist on the meagre payments that occur under the Workmen's Compensation Act. In a lot of cases, Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, the workman is forced to apply to various welfare boards, Community and Social Services or district welfare to supplement the pension that he gets under Workmen's Compensation Board payments.

There was a radical suggestion made by a workman somewhere up north of Toronto a few weeks ago with regard to the unemployment insurance fund. He said that the employees should be asked to provide more funds for the unemployment insurance so that the benefits could be correspondingly greater. I don't put that forward as a platform that the workmen themselves should contribute to the Workmen's Compensation Board fund, but I think that somebody should, so that they have an adequate level and quality standard of living.

We in this party, Mr. Speaker, would support a move by the minister to build in some kind of escalator clause in these payments to provide for the cost-of-living index to be built right into the plan, so that those people on fixed incomes of the people under a total disability pension would not suffer because they are on a fixed pension plan but would have their incomes, such as they are, adjusted according to the cost of living in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I have one or two other points, one other particularly that I hope the minister would reply to. Under section 6, subsection 11, which has been amended, with regard to agreements for sharing costs of silicosis claims, I would bring to the minister's attention that some time ago our Liberal critic on labour matters, Mr. DeMonte, who at that time represented Dovercourt, spent a great deal of time in the estimates speaking about the incidence of caisson disease, particularly amongst the workers in Ontario where we have a great amount of construction work of this type, particularly in subways. If the municipalities go ahead with the proposed increase in grants from the province with regard to these kinds of programmes, we are going to run more and more into this situation.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the minister could indicate to me why they included silicosis, for instance, in their interprovincial agreement but did not include caisson disease. Could the minister indicate what other avenues or areas that he and his fellow ministers of labour across Canada have been looking at to provide a common ground on which the workman can be protected regardless of whether he works six months in Ontario, a year in British Columbia or two years in Montreal, in order that if he works in Ontario he is still entitled at least to partial benefits?

I wonder if the minister could explain why in this bill this matter has been particularly restricted to silicosis and has excluded caisson disease and other specific diseases that are found mainly in the construction industry across the nation.

Mr. Speaker, again, I say to the minister this party would support an escalator clause in the bill or in future bills to provide for the cost of living, so that those on fixed incomes under the Workmen's Compensation Board will not suffer a lower standard of living because of inflation, which is to a large part brought on by both provincial and federal government action. I say again, to ease the minister's mind, we in this party will support the principle of this bill again as a good step in the right direction, but not totally satisfactory.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor West.

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, we of the New Democratic Party confront this bill, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act, with strongly felt opposed emotions. On the one side, we feel that any increase is welcome, no matter how small these are, to the wives and dependants where the death of a working person has occurred, or to those persons on temporary total disability and permanent total disability, and for all those who have a decent job paying in excess of $9,000. Therefore, in that sense, we are caught in a position of feeling that we might support this bill.

On the other side, however, is the paucity of the increases and the vast numbers of persons who are still left in near penury at the present level of their pensions, because adjustments are not made for their situations, adjustments have not been made for the past. This is completely unacceptable to this party. With this bill we have the opportunity to redress and make adjustments to all those groups of persons for whom the Act contains anomalies or anachronisms, and to all those persons whose pensions won't be changed one iota by this Act.

This bill takes in only a small portion of the Workmen's Compensation Act—that portion relating purely and simply to the scale of compensation. Any bill that does not adjust the injured workman's pension to the present level of salaries and wages is a disgrace. In fact, it is an affront to human dignity and decency. Workmen are paid pensions, be they temporary total or permanent total, dating back to 20 and 30 years ago, to the 1940s and the 1950s, rather than on the wages that they would be making now if they hadn't been injured and were still employed in the same workplace. This is a disgrace and would be acceptable only to Tories and their corporate friends. They are not acceptable to us.

These persons' pensions should be adjusted annually with an escalator clause to reflect the upward changes in the average of salaries and wages. It is in the Workmen's Compensation Board pensions particularly that it is completely appropriate. There is no argument against it. A pension based on a loss or a withdrawal of work should increase in step with the percentage increases in wages and salaries, rather than with the increase in cost of living even. The increase in cost of living is roughly, over the past 10 years, only half of the increases in salaries and wages that have occurred in this province. If there is any pension at all with an escalator clause that should reflect the percentage increase in salaries and wages, it's a Workmen's Compensation Board pension. And you don't even give them increases in step with the cost of living.

In contrast to the Liberals and the Conservatives, we have no trouble with the concept that present employers and future employers should pay for accidents that occurred in the past, when this means that you are going to be paying injured workmen at a level that they should be paid. That is the only human, decent and just thing.

Also it has another positive spin-off. That would be a further inducement for the present and future companies to ensure that the working conditions in their plants and places of work are safe. It has this double inducement and should be very attractive.

Turning to the actual bill itself, I find this bill rather difficult to accept in one point, but certainly understandable. I have always felt that the Labour ministry has really paid only lip service to the position of women in this country. You still are carrying through in this bill the anachronism that a widow of a workman can draw a compensation pension, but a widower cannot. He has to be completely invalidated. Well, isn't that great? A woman can get killed at the job and is not worth anything to the family unless her husband is a complete invalid. What sort of an attitude to women in this country, in this province, is that in this day and age?

A woman is not worth anything to the family if she is killed in the workplace. A man, of course, is. He is worth everything. The widow is given a pension. If a woman is killed, the widower doesn't get a cent, the family doesn't get a cent unless he is an invalid. We will speak to that, and put an amendment to that and we will vote on that one when we come to the clause-by-clause debate.

Just on the same point, another matter which this bill doesn't deal with is a little bit of an anomaly that occurs where a widow, as is still allowed for in clause 1(c) is receiving a pension because her husband was killed, and remarries. That widow is then granted a lump sum payment equal to the monthly payment for two years. But the same consideration is not extended to a common-law wife, irrespective of how long she was the common-law wife of that deceased workman. That is another point that reflects and shows quite clearly the attitude of this Ministry of Labour to women in this province in this day and age.

There has been an adjustment in this bill, too, to the minimum that someone on total temporary disability, or permanent total disability, can receive. Well, you know, it is a good thing you changed it, because by the change from $40 to $55 a week, as a minimum, you are managing to pay this person $1 more than working a 40-hour week at your minimum wage, which earlier in this House I described as unacceptable in any event. Unacceptably low.

You have just managed by this change to get him $1 a week above what he would receive if he worked a 40-hour week at the minimum wage. That is not nearly acceptable. And in fact, if his benefit calculation works out to be less than $55 a week you are paying that injured workman less than what he would be receiving based on the minimum wage in this province.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): He's right on that.

Mr. Bounsell: I'll have some remarks to make on clause-by-clause in more detail as to exactly what the total permanent disability monthly payment should be. Again, it should reflect not $250, which is again just about the minimum wage based on 40 hours a week, but should be an amount based on what is a livable and workable and decent minimum wage for this province, which is not $1.80 per hour.

It is interesting, with the average wages and earnings in this province now slightly over $4 an hour, to see that the minimum wage is around 45 per cent of it only. I wonder if you are happy to pay your Workmen's Compensation Board recipients in their pensions, and see as the minimum wage in this province something which is 45 per cent of the average—and they are included in the average. Can you justify paying a minimum wage of less than half of what the average is when they are included in it?

When you take them out of the average you are paying them less than 40 per cent of the average in this province. How happy and how proud are you of that minimum wage level in this day and age, and that minimum wage level is reflected in the minimums in this bill? If you can't be happy with that you can't be happy with anything that is in this bill with respect to minimums.

Mr. Speaker, one other part of the bill raises the maximum allowable average of the wages. If it reaches $9,000 in the past you have reached your total maximum amount on which pensions can be based. You have a ceiling on these average earnings of $9,000. That is going to be increased by a bit more than 10 per cent. In one small sense that is laudable: at least the maximums have gone up by roughly 10 per cent. Over the eight years from 1963 to 1971 there was an 80 per cent increase in the maximum earnings allowable on which the pensions could be calculated. In this two-year period we have gone up just a shade more than 10 per cent.

I don't particularly like to see the slow-down of the percentage; in fact, that rather indicates that that is going to be the trend that continues. But if the government adjusted the maximum by an average of 10 per cent over an eight-year period, from 1963 to 1971, why are you not applying that to every pension involving injured workmen?

In point of fact, the amount of $10,000 as a maximum on which the pensions will be computed — and the most they will get of that is 75 per cent—is still unacceptably low. I would suggest, and we will be moving again in committee, that the amount of that pension be $15,000, equal to what it is suggested the MPPs should receive.

Mr. Speaker, we in this party feel disturbed in no small way about the smallness of these changes and about the fact that only a small group of injured workmen in this province is going to benefit from them. We feel very strongly, when we consider the entire group in this province, that we should not support this bill.

There are also other sectors that this bill does not cover—other anomalies, other anachronisms — such as workmen who frequently contract lung ailments in the mines in this province, which the member for Sudbury is very familiar with and about which we have talked on more than one occasion.

There is a time lag between the incurrence of that disease and the effect of that disease, an effect that causes the workman to be no longer employed; and yet he is compensated at a rate of pay—a salary or a wage — based not upon when he became disabled, when the injury took effect, but backdated to the incurrence of the disease.

How can any minister bring in a bill dealing with adjustments in the scale of compensation and find himself happy with that continuing situation with respect to the miners and their lung problems in this province if their compensation is backdated to when the disease is incurred rather than when they become disabled and are forced out of the mine by it? This is a bill where the minister could have made an adjustment.

For these and all the other reasons I have mentioned we are unhappy with this bill. We will vote for it because it provides an increase to a few people in this province, but we are not happy about the vast number of people this bill will not help or affect, and who have been omitted by these changes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale.

Mr. J. Duszta (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to support the bill, but I consider most inadequate the pittance the minister is throwing toward the injured workers. This is an Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act, and if we are going to discuss an amendment, something has to be said also about how inadequate the original Act has been.

How can one even say anything to the minister in terms of congratulating him? It is like looking at the dam on a coat and saying how beautiful the dam is when the coat is completely worn out and unusable. How can we talk about this amendment as being of any significance when we realize that the whole Act has been now, for some time, completely outworn and inhuman to an extreme degree?

To give only one example, the minister has the functional overlay in his Act. When he mentioned permanent total disability, nobody specified that we should assume that when the workman gets injured, there is not only a physical injury. There is also a number of other injuries which the minister, in the Act, described as a functional overlay. This is a gross distortion of what really occurs when a worker is injured.

I think that the minister should specify—and maybe it will be done in the committee stage—that the functional overlay is not a functional overlay but is distinctly and directly related to the injury, and should be recognized as such. I am exhausted with constantly pleading with the Workmen's Compensation Board to recognize that if someone develops a neurotic condition following an accident, this is just as much part of an injury as if he lost an eye.

I don't understand how, with the present state of knowledge, the ministry and the Workmen's Compensation Board still does not recognize it. This pitiful amendment does not recognize the fact that it is a major cause of disability among Workmen's Compensation cases.

The minister must have been exposed a number of times to a number of people with this very complaint. To go through this incredible hierarchy of tribunals—the only time that they really work is when you get about three or four people to argue with the board and to persuade them that this is part of the original injury. I think it should come in as much as possible into this Act.

As reluctantly as the member for Windsor West, I have to vote for this Act, but I do say that the whole original Act is actually useless and the amendment is a pittance in itself.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments about this bill. A couple of weeks ago I had a phone call from a constituent who had been working in the mine some years ago. He had been a top wage earner in one of the gold mines, made a very good salary and bonus, and, as the result of an accident, lost the sight of his eyes and received a full pension. That full pension was rather significant back in 1957. It was about $312 a month.

He wanted to know if the legislation that was to be introduced was to do anything to help him. He said, "Here am I on a fixed income trying to get by; I haven't had a raise since 1957; are you going to be able to help me?" I said "I'll have your own particular case reviewed to see what can be done." Sure enough he gets $312 a month and there's a helpless allowance which is paid to his wife of, I think, $50. But here was an excellent workman, making high wages back 16 years ago, and as the result of an accident he has had to live on that pension ever since. It'll be a long time, I suppose, if we are going on with this same method of raising the level of pensions, before he gets any more.

I think there are many people who are just over that $250 level who will not be getting any extra. As the member said, it's 75 per cent of that, as I understand it, and it does raise up the pensions a little bit. For those who have had accidents years ago and who have got such inadequate claims on the lower level, it will mean a few dollars. But the whole concept of pensions and the degree that people are actually disabled is, in my opinion, most inadequate.

The member for Parkdale talks about functional overlays which, to all intents and purposes, result in the accident and the man is disabled and he can't work.

We get older men with back problems who happen to be on the job and hurt their backs. This is superimposed on degeneration and this kind of thing. That man is taken out of the labour market; he is given a pension of 15 to 30 per cent—it's usually in that area—and he never goes back to work. One negotiates with the people of the compensation board to try to get a supplement on top of the pension; sometimes it's possible, sometimes it's not.

The man does not get enough to live on so he has to get some assistance from Community and Social Services. He may be fortunate and get a little bit from Canada Pension but it's all keeping him at the subsistence level. To all intents and purposes that injury on the job has been the straw that broke the camel's back and the man who had been a self-supporting member of the work force is no longer there. He is not given the support that he needs by the workmen's compensation legislation, and the man becomes bitter.

I am sure when one lives in the kind of area I live in it does not take long, in dealing with people, to know how bitter they really become and how really inadequate they feel the Workmen's Compensation legislation is. I have 10 to 15 people a week coming with problems of one kind or another. Invariably, they are distressed about the low level of pensions; when they have had a pension for a few years there has to be deterioration before they can get a higher pension. What happens is that they may get five per cent more.

I think this bill is deficient in that it does not recognize that the value of the dollar is decreasing year by year; the value of the pensions given is less in terms of what the money will buy in the marketplace today. People who have been hurt on the job are not getting the kind of compensation and support that they need.

It's not charity they're asking for; they are just asking for simple justice. I think that it's not just to bring up those at the bottom for a few dollars—and let's not kid ourselves! That's all that this $75—from $175 to $250—is going to do. It's just a small amount. It's all those other people who have work and are just over that limit; their pensions are not touched and they have equal needs.

I hope this bill is only a temporary thing and that the minister is looking at ways and means of dealing with the whole concept of pensions and a way of overhauling the whole Workmen's Compensation Act to make it more just and more realistic and to take away a lot of the bitterness and resentment that people have against this Act and against the board.

Mr. Bounsall: We'll get the same bill with the figures changed in two years' time.

Mr. Ferrier: This is what has been going on for years and years. The government has just been changing the figures. I think the minister has to take a deeper look at it and take a much more just approach. The purchasing power of the dollar is going down and down and it's a most inadequate response to the needs of people today. I just can't accept this as being fair.

The minister has raised the cost of a funeral from $400 to $500. Now I am as willing as anyone else to admit that the funeral directors are doing pretty well—

Mr. Bounsall: They will love it. Donations from them.

Mr. Ferrier: They are not very poor. They are making a good deal out of things.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): It is a dying business.

Mr. Ferrier: It is a dying business and I was going to say they are making a killing out of this.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ferrier: The truth of the matter is that in many places of this province $500 does not pay for a very adequate funeral.

Mr. Haggerty: Not for the miners.

Mr. Ferrier: Not the way that they are asking prices today. I would say that most people are going to have to take more out of their pockets to provide for the kind of funeral they would want. I don't think that this is necessarily an adequate response.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Don't worry about it. Don't comment on it.

Mr. Ferrier: I won't comment on that. The other thing that I want to comment on—and the member for Rainy River could have asked the member for Welland South for an explanation of this change—is the silicosis clause. The thing is, in the past if a man worked so many years in a mine in one province and then he went to work in another province and it was—

Mr. Haggerty: It has been six or seven years since the Minister of Mines at that time was supposed to bring it in.

Mr. Ferrier: Well, we welcome this, but I am almost at the end of the rope in trying to establish silicosis claims, whether it is interprovincial or what it is. I've argued enough claims contending there is silicosis and they are turned down, then after the man dies there is an autopsy done and it takes ages and ages and ages to get a decision on these silicosis claims.

I wish somebody would light a bomb under some of the people down at the board to get a more speedy response to silicosis claims and death claims and so on. It is established in the autopsy that the person has a degree of silicosis, it is present there all right, it is moderate and so on, but there are always a whole bunch of other things there so they say, "Well, he's got emphysema" and "He's got bronchitis" and really these are the things that are disabling and the silicosis is just a passing illness that he has.

They spend all kinds of money and time to get the technical knowledge and make a decision, but as far as I am concerned the whole process of compensating men who have worked in the mines and have chest conditions is not fair. I think they pick up more than silicosis working in the dusty environment, and it doesn't matter whether they are working in Ontario part of the time and worked in BC and Manitoba, wherever it is, I still think that there must be a much broader concept of lung diseases in miners that are made compensable.

The Minister of Mines has had a study going for about six years by an eminent chest specialist in this city, Dr. Patterson. I now understand that it is being typed up and will be made available in short order. I hope that that provides some broader concept of allowing for the acceptance of chest disability in miners and that the government responds much more favourably to the miners with chest ailments than it has up to this point.

I would like to endorse what has already been said here and I hope that from the minister's point of view and his thinking this is just a stopgap approach, that he is going to take a thorough look at this whole Act and he is going to amend it in a real overhaul, do something about the pensions on a very full and fair basis, take away the grounds that make for so much bitterness and resentment among so many of the injured working people of this province, and that he also will do something for the miners who have chest conditions. A much more adequate response is needed than is presently being given to this condition.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Welland South.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few comments to this bill. I think the hon. member for Cochrane South hit on a couple of good topics here. He mentioned silicosis. I can well remember asking the previous Minister of Mines when he was going to get an agreement with other provinces, and I am delighted to see that it has been included in this bill.

But then what happens to those persons who have come down with silicosis in the past five or 10 years? If I interpret this bill correctly, it does not cover any person who has been injured some 10 or 15 years ago. So in a sense it has not given us the way to increase compensation to those persons needing it. I am rather disappointed in that fact that it doesn't cover those persons.

One of the previous speakers mentioned the $55 a week increase. It certainly doesn't cover the minimum wage at all. I am almost hesitant about supporting the bill because I don't think it covers the injured workmen in the Province of Ontario. It adds a little bit to their income.

Going back to the hon. member for Cochrane South, I think he has hit on a subject—perhaps the previous member for Niagara Falls, Ont., moved a private member's bill in the House that compensation should cover all types of accidents in the Province of Ontario, whether it was on the job or off the job. When one looks at the different schemes we have for providing assistance to those persons who are injured—not only under workmen's compensation, but we have private sick and accident insurance covering some persons injured in industry today—that will perhaps give them a little bit more than compensation will. In many cases it does. We have private insurance to provide protection to persons who are injured. We have company pension plans. We have Canada Pension plans. We have in fact, veterans' plans.

I am rather disappointed at the number of different claimants I have represented at the Workmen's Compensation Board, where the board at the final stage says "Well, now look. This is as far as we can go. We sympathize with your injury, but you can go to the veteran's pension." Go to the veteran's pension—somebody who is not even responsible for compensating for the injury in the first place. I have had a number of persons go there to get assistance to survive under present conditions.

When a person has a back injury and is given about an 18 per cent permanent partial disability, with a pension of about $30 a month to $40 a month in some cases, and then they say, "Go to the veteran's pension," this is shameful of the minister, and even the Workmen's Compensation, to suggest this. On top of that, in many instances, they even suggest the injured workmen go to welfare to supplement their pensions.

I can tell you this, Mr. Minister, any person who has been injured in industry today, particularly those with a back injury, is blacklisted. They cannot obtain gainful employment again. And as far as the government's rehabilitation goes, that is, the retraining of those who are injured, it smells to high heaven to me. I don't see that it has a decent programme there for retraining.

I have had persons whom I have helped before the Workmen's Compensation Board who have ended up getting assistance from Canada Manpower centres. They are the ones training them. In many instances after they get through upgrading their education from high school with perhaps six months in one of the colleges in Ontario, then the Workmen's Compensation Board steps into the picture and says "Now we'll pay you." But they would not accept that responsibility at that stage of the game.

I think these are the matters that the members are trying to present to the minister from this side of the House. There are problems with the Workmen's Compensation.

I might add that perhaps the only reason the bill is here—because a bill was brought in last summer to increase the pension benefits of those employed at the Workmen's Compensation Board, the employees themselves. I can tell the minister this much. I listened to some of the hearings that went on here last year before the Workmen's Compensation — some of them getting paid pensions amounting to $15,000 a year. They don't need a pension increase. Increases are what is required for these injured workers in the Province of Ontario. It is my concern that these persons are paid for the damages that are incurred.

As for this business of the board telling them that they can go out and take up a light, modified job, there is no such thing. In fact, many of them lose their jobs in industry today because of an injury that happened in that plant. They are told their services are no longer required and they are booted out the door and told, "Here you are; here is $40 a month; go and live on it." They can't get a job, that is for sure, because nobody will hire them. Yet some place in our society that industrial plant and the Workmen's Compensation Board has a responsibility to fulfil that these persons are paid for the loss of income.

I wonder if any of the members have read this brief to the task force on the Workmen's Compensation Board presented by the Injured Workmen's Consultants. I might say that there are some good suggestions and recommendations here. One particular one that I thought the minister might accept is on page 2. It says:

We recommend that in the case of a workman who sustains a temporary disability, the Workmen's Compensation shall pay compensation benefits at the full rate until: (1) the workman returns to work with no loss in earnings; (2) the workman is certified to be completely recovered from his injuries; (3) the workman returns to work at a partial loss in earnings and, in this case, the Workmen's Compensation shall compensate him fully for the amount of such a loss.

I think that is an important recommendation and I hope that the minister will accept that as an amendment to the bill, because if he now has to appear before the Workmen's Compensation Board this doesn't apply in this case.

Where they come down in the brief with their suggestions on partial disability and what a person should receive, one can't find it reflected in the Act itself. Yet sections 40 and 40(a) pretty well cover this where it says: ". . . after the accident, and is payable so long as the disability lasts." In many cases, these persons who are injured have a disability that lasts for a number of years.

There are other problems perhaps that the minister should deal with. I think another one is that persons today who are involved with Workmen's Compensation have a degree of disability that affects them emotionally—it affects their minds. At the present time, I know a number of particular cases that I have are sent to a psychiatrist for treatment and there is no compensation allowed for this whatsoever. Yet there is an emotional problem. I am sure if any members on that side had lost their income, they would certainly have an emotional problem, if they lost their suggested increase of up to $15,000.

Mr. Reid: There will be a lot of them in the next election.

An hon. member: It will be an emotional problem in the election.

Mr. Haggerty: It will be an emotional problem with them. That is for sure.

These are some of the matters that I am interested in. As the lead-off speaker for the Liberal Party mentioned, there should be a clause added in there, that is, compensation benefits should be adjusted annually according to the changes in the cost of living as determined by the consumer price index. I think it is important that these persons shouldn't have to wait at the whim of the minister here every three or four years for him to come in and say "We are going to give you a slight increase." It is slight, I will tell you that. There isn't too much increase.

These are some of the matters that concern me. I feel that it is a slight increase, but whatever you can get from government, however slight it is, I guess we have to support the bill on this side.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few comments on this bill, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act, Bill 126.

The original legislation was passed in 1915. It did go a long way in satisfying certain inadequacies in compensating injured workers in that it took the case of the injured worker out of the courts. He didn't have to sue for his living, and to that effect the compensation board is a worthwhile endeavour.

In those long-distant days the benefits were such that the worker did not suffer as he is suffering today. In fact, enshrined in the original legislation was the lofty statement "that the contribution that each worker makes to the state shall ensure that he suffers no hardship because of the hazards which may befall him whilst he is working." This was in recognition of the contribution that the working man is making to the state, Mr. Speaker, and I think we have fallen far from those lofty goals which were enunciated way back in the original days.

Now I am speaking, Mr. Speaker, to the miserable increase in maximum allowable earnings, wherein the minister saw fit to include an amendment which would increase from $9,000 to $10,000 the maximum amount of earnings which could be considered as compensable earnings. But, lo and behold, the average citizen of Ontario, the average worker in Ontario, in fact only those people who are forced to deal with the Workmen's Compensation Board really understand what that means. It means that at 75 per cent of $9,000 it has no relationship to $9,000 whatsoever.

They do it this way for publicity reasons probably. A lot of people think 75 per cent of a high income like that is pretty good. But this is not what the person gets. The 75 per cent of allowable earnings amounts to $129.81 weekly. This is to what you are reducing a man who was previously earning probably $200 or $250 a week. You are forcing him to exist on $129.81 weekly, which in many instances is less than 50 per cent of what this man's lifestyle has been adjusted to. So in fact, the Workmen's Compensation Board really doesn't live up to the phrase which was enunciated in the first instance.

Using the $9,000 base we make all our other adjustments relative to this artificial base, such as when a person who is reduced on account of temporary partial benefits to 50 per cent and it is a mystery how the board determines this. The board blames legislation and the legislators blame the board, I have never run across any government agency which is in such a state of confusion, such a state of misunderstanding, and such a commission which seems to be so completely out of control that no one can give a straight answer to how these things function, not even the minister.

When a person who started out with $9,000 assessable earnings comes down to what most of them are living on now, down to 50 per cent in the case of temporary partial benefits, this would reduce his income to $64.91 a week. This is precisely what most of the workers in the Province of Ontario are existing on today. Naturally, most of them have to go down to their welfare office, so you are not only lifting the load off the person responsible for the accident, which is the employer, but you are transferring the responsibility on to the general taxpayer and that is not where the responsibility belongs.

There is provision in the Act to go out and extract from the employer the necessary funds to maintain these injured workers at a level that they should be maintained at. I will not accept for a moment that just because a man is injured, in most cases through no fault of his own, he should be reduced to the poverty level, to the level of welfare. We all know what a miserable level this government has reduced our welfare recipients to, so you are just compounding the injury by reducing these injured men to this particular state.

There is another problem that was mentioned by a member of the Liberal Party.

In the area where I come from, the city of Sudbury, there is a mining and smelting complex, where a person earns his living by the strength of his back in most cases. The slightest impairment in his physical makeup is frowned upon by these companies. As was stated before, you are literally blackballed from obtaining further employment in any of the other mines if you are injured because they know that you may have a weakness and you may be a burden upon them. They think you may not be able to produce the amount that they are used to receiving from their workers.

I'd like to make one other point, Mr. Speaker. A weakness in the legislation is that it doesn't provide that injured workers shall be allowed to return to jobs in keeping with their new reduced ability. A man who is injured should be allowed to go back to work at a modified level. These people, many of them, have worked all their lives and it is not their intent to live as an injured person on the state for the rest of their life. But many times they are forced to doing that because these companies cannot extract maximum production from them and therefore refuse to re-employ them.

In fact, there is a situation in my city now. I understand that 400 partially disabled workers are going to be thrown out, and those people are going to end up on welfare. There is no reason why the mining companies shouldn't maintain them in those jobs which they are capable of doing.

And the question of degree of disability, to use the high-sounding phraseology. They determine this through clinical experience which in fact has no relationship to the man's ability to work.

Take the case of an injured miner who all his life has been handling weights up to 250 pounds, and who suffers a back ailment. The clinical report indicates that he can now only lift 20 pounds, so to all intents and purposes this man is about 80 per cent disabled as far as carrying on his job is concerned. But lo and behold when you find out clinically he is only 10 per cent disabled and he draws a 10 per cent pension then you are further penalizing the man.

If a financier loses his brain power, he is 100 per cent physically capable of functioning, but mentally he is hopeless. He suffers, in fact, more than a 10 per cent disability. I think the same relationship should be used to a man who has to work in heavy industry. If his ability to perform the job which he is normally doing is reduced by 80 per cent, then that should be the basis on which compensation is paid. If his power to lift weights is reduced by 80 per cent, is that not his degree of disability? Forget about the clinical thing that an injured back is only 10 per cent of your body and that you can walk, you can talk, you can drive a car, you can drive an elevator. The man is not a car driver or an elevator driver. He is a miner and he is reduced by 80 per cent from doing his miner's work. On that basis the compensation should be paid.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Right!

Mr. Germa: The whole Act is completely out of kilter with what would be justice and equitability, and the minister has not corrected this.

There are a few Mickey Mouse things in here. Big deal, you are going to give a guy $500 for his funeral. You can't get halfway to the graveyard with $500. You may as well face reality. You are not doing anything for him. This is just lip-service and window-dressing. You are coming out and saying, "Oh, we increased the burial allowance." Well, you know the prices today. A pauper's funeral in the city of Sudbury cannot be had for less than $400. You are burying this man for $100 more than a pauper, a complete delinquent in our society—and these are not delinquents we are dealing with, these are hardworking injured men.

Mr. Bounsall: They are delinquents but paupers. They're not delinquents, they are just paupers as well.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: He gets another—

Mr. Germa: While we have to support these crumbs, this largess of the government, I'll accept these crumbs from the government but in no way does it satisfy my aspirations or what I see is necessary particularly in the heavy industries—mining, smelting and construction and railways.

These industries are particularly prone to accidents. The wage rate is high to take care of the risk factor that these men have to suffer and yet when they do get themselves injured, their lifestyle is completely wrecked. As my colleague indicated, this causes a functional overlay.

I am sure the minister admits there are dozens and dozens of men in this condition; their families are suffering; there are broken families; the children are being deprived. It goes right through the whole life cycle. It doesn't stop at the injured workman; it goes right through his whole family. The minister hasn't taken this into consideration. We have to accept a little bit of window-dressing like this because we are not in power to do anything else.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Stokes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most of the things I would have said, had I entered the debate earlier, have already been said, but I am not going to let the opportunity go by to remind this minister—this minister in particular who is a very sensitive person when one speaks to him personally—that for him to bring in this kind of bill, one would think that as a private member and now as the Minister of Labour responsible for Workmen's Compensation, he had never handled a workmen's compensation case.

I would like the minister to go through my files and see case after case after case in which there are people with serious injuries as the result of industrial accidents. They have legitimate claims against the Workmen's Compensation Board, yet they are denied. Somebody mentioned a little earlier this evening that it was a sort of Alphonse and Gaston act. When the people go to the board, they blame the legislators; when the people go to the legislators such as the minister, they blame the board.

I haven't had occasion to take too many cases before the board. I've had a lot of them at the other two levels and I've been able to satisfy a lot of them by dealing directly with claims officers and pension officers and, in some cases, with the commissioners themselves. There is a hard core of cases in my files—and I'm sure there are in the files of every member who is doing an honest job of trying to represent his constituents in their dealings with the Workmen's Compensation Board.

I want to say to the minister that I am really and truly and sincerely disappointed that he should bring in this kind of bill in this day and age. It is just tokenism.

I had a case very recently which I appealed to the full board; the decision is still pending. There is a father of 10, whose children are all still at home; the oldest of 10 is completely disabled and in a wheelchair. By admission of four different doctors, this injured workman is incapable of being gainfully employed. First of all because of his disability, he is not able to go out and get light work because there isn't any. He is not capable of being retrained because of his educational level—and he is getting the munificent sum of $57.75 a month! As somebody mentioned, when we appealed it at the lower levels they suggested that he go out and get welfare.

This isn't the meaning and the purpose of the Workmen's Compensation Board. It's not up to them to tell an injured workman that he should seek welfare. It's not up to the Workmen's Compensation Board to tell me as an elected member that I should go either to the municipality or the Ministry of Community and Social Services to get welfare for a person.

I have an injured workman who has a legitimate claim against the funds deposited at the board that are to be distributed at the discretion of the board. When you get four doctors who will state unequivocally that this fellow can't return to his place of usual employment, and when you know full well because you have people in the field who go around investigating these cases on a regular basis that the man himself is incapable of being retrained, that he has reached the age where he is unacceptable in the work force, you have a legal and a moral responsibility to do something on behalf of that injured workman.

I have another case of a lower back injury, where, after fighting for three years with the board, we finally got a family of four up to payments of $275 a month. I purposely visit that family at least three or four times a year just to see how they are making out and to see whether his case or his condition has deteriorated to the extent that I could do more for him with the board.

I am not going to describe in detail to you, Mr. Minister, the profound effect of this father's inability to get out. He's a big strapping fellow. I knew him when he worked for the Canadian Pacific Railway and we nicknamed him Tarzan because he used to run alongside of a train with two cross ties weighing anywhere from 100 to 150 pounds apiece on his shoulders, and he used to run alongside a train travelling at about four miles an hour.

When I remind the Workmen's Compensation Board of this they say, "Maybe that's the way he was in his younger days, but the fellow's got a functional overlay, or maybe he's malingering a little bit. He's just going to have to make up his mind that he's got to be able to get used to he pain." Now this, Mr. Minister, is completely unacceptable.

I mentioned two particular cases. I could name dozens. I am not going to do that. All I am saying to the minister, and I am not one who is given to emotionalism, or to standing up here for political purposes to say to the minister, "What you are doing is just not acceptable"; I am not doing it for political reasons, I am doing it because I am sincerely disappointed in this particular minister. I think he does know the condition under which many, many injured workmen and their families are existing in the Province of Ontario today.

We are the most affluent province in the wealthiest country on the face of the earth, and I see no reason why the minister couldn't do something for fellows and their families who, through no fault of their own, have a legitimate claim against the funds that are held in reserve at the Workmen's Compensation Board. I think that if the minister goes back to his files from when he was looking after his own casework, and took a look at those he would convince himself that they are legitimate claims. I think he can come up with a much better Act.

Mr. Speaker: Any other members wishing to participate? The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, just a few words to this minister. As everybody has said, we all on the opposition side are locked into the necessity of voting for this bill in principle because it makes some increase to the compensation pension part of the Workmen's Compensation Act. One couldn't possibly vote against that under any circumstances, but I suspect that all of us were sorely tempted when listening to the Liberal Party spokesman from Rainy River. It was obvious that the Liberals, like the New Democrats, had to wrestle pretty hard with what one does with a bill which is an affront to the dignity of all those to whom it is supposed to apply, and yet requires acceptance in the Legislature.

This minister will live with it because he's the Minister of Labour and it's a cabinet decision — perhaps on the recommendation of the Workmen's Compensation Board—but it is a shocking bill. If it's his recommendation then I hardly know how he can sit and smile at me in a way which says, "I am the law in this portfolio." This is an impossible bill. I really don't know how he can bring himself to introduce it, to speak to it, to defend it.

It is a bitter disappointment for all of those who are on compensation pensions across the province. And it is a terribly bitter disappointment to every member of the Legislature—I would have thought the minister himself included—who has to deal with Workmen's Compensation cases. It is a wretched increase. It is pitiful, and I don't understand why you lend yourself to it, unless it is a dictate of cabinet from which you have absolutely no alternative. And it must surely bother you that a piece of legislation introduced in 1915 about which you boast throughout the western world should be reduced to such ignominy by such inadequate pension payments. I thought my colleague from Windsor West took this bill apart with a scalpel-like precision and with real feeling and justice. He did it well and he did it thoughtfully. And that part of the bill which talks about the basic minimum pension being $250 a month—surely you don't sleep easily on that?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: It was $175.

Mr. Lewis: I want to remind you of something. I want to remind you—$175? And you think that by going to $250 you have achieved something? Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Minister of Labour. It was announced in this House within the last 48 hours that you are paying Barry Lowes $135 a day.

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): For one job only.

Mr. Lewis: On a job to look into the cost of education.

Mr. Sargent: And another $110!

Mr. Lewis: Well, leaving out the $110, do you realize what that means? It means that in 22 working days Barry Lowes makes as much as you pay someone on a permanent disability pension for an entire year. Now does that sound to you as though it is fair? I mean, really, does it sound to you as though it is fair? The Leader of the official Opposition pointed out some little time ago, I think, in dealing with the lawyer who has sat on the Atlantic Acceptance case, that he was making the equivalent of $250 a day for every day he sat.

Do you know what that means? It means that in 12 days that lawyer makes what you are paying a man on a permanent disability pension for an entire year. And then it emerges that the man who sat on the Hydro commission dispute, the dean of law at Western, earns $500 a day for that dispute, which means that in six days—

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): One week.

Mr. Lewis: —one week that man makes as much as you are paying people on permanent disability pension for an entire year.

Mr. Bounsall: And with all they are paying.

Mr. Lewis: And with no discredit to the man who is handling the Hydro hearings downstairs when they sit—Mr. Shibley? Is that his name? The eminent counsel—$600 a day. Which means that in five days, as counsel in a dispute, paid by us in this Legislature, he makes as much as your law authorizes a disabled man, permanently disabled, for an entire year.

Now you explain the inequity to me. I mean you explain the sense of justice inherent in that balance of values. And when you have done that—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): He should take no pay.

Mr. Lewis: —and when you have done that, Mr. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Guindon: It is never paid into the fund.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: —if you are not too busy chortling about it, maybe then you can shift your values over to the other matters which have emerged, like $1.3 billion for a transportation policy, or $250 to $500 million for the purchase of the escarpment, and explain how you can talk in those figures, for those social issues, and confine a man to $3,000 a year on a permanent disability pension.

Now I used the examples to try to strike in you the kind of response which is surely legitimate, not so much that the per diems are wrong, although I think they are vastly out of line, but that the pension which you are paying to the disabled is indefensible. So we have to vote for it because it goes from $175 to $250 a month. Well, I got a letter—it was back on March 20. I guess it was the day the House opened. I want to read it to you, because I think it puts the situation neatly:

Sir:

It was with great disappointment, considerable annoyance and some despair that I read in the July-August 1971 issue of the Compensator about the amendments made to the Workmen's Compensation Act, effective Aug. 1, 1971. I am sure that a member of the general public would think these amendments worthy of acclaim. What the public doesn't know is that workers hurt years ago still receive pensions based on the maximum legislated at the time they were hurt. There is a frightful inequity here, sir.

Please consider the following example for totally disabled pensioners. In March, 1963, on a pension base of $5,000 at a disability rating of 75 per cent, the pension would have been $3,750 a year. In March of 1967 on a pension base of $6,000 at 75 per cent, $3,500 a year. In September, 1967, at a $7,000 pension base, 75 per cent, $5,250 a year. August 1971 a $9,000 pension base, 75 per cent, $6,750 a year. In July of 1973, with this legislation, $10,000 pension base, 75 per cent, $7,500 a year.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Non-taxable.

Mr. Lewis: Exactly double the $3,750 received by the man in 1963. Exactly double.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: That's better than BC. Better than Manitoba.

Mr. Lewis: Let me point out to you that the $3,750, because it exceeds the minimum of $250 a month, does not entitle this man injured 10 years ago to one additional penny under your legislation.

If his wage increases had been at a level of five per cent in the first two years, six per cent in the next two years, seven per cent in the fifth and sixth years, eight per cent in the next two years and nine per cent for the last two years of that 10-year period—which are not major wage increases, perfectly reasonable to postulate—he would today be receiving an income of $10,000 a year.

But you make no allowance for that whatsoever. You lock him in at $3,750 a year simply because of the misfortune of having been injured in 1963. That's not legislation of which you can be proud. That's legislation about which you hang your head in shame. You don't bring in this kind of bill without effecting that kind—

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Where do you get the money?

Mr. Lewis: Where do you get the money? You either take it from present and future employers or out of the public purse. You legislate retroactivity. That's what you do.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: How many hundreds of millions of dollars?

Mr. Lewis: Hundreds of millions of dollars? Nuts! And if it was a princely sum, how better to pay it? How better to spend it? And take a look at some of the tax sources which you refuse to tax.

Let me go on and read the letter.

I am very concerned that the mere circumstance of time should cause such disparity [says the writer.] In addition to their pensions, these totally disabled people may receive money as a helplessness allowance. I am well aware of the care to be taken of such people and since one of the examples is my husband let me tell you the duties to be performed. Namely: 1. bathing and dressing; 2. placing in wheelchair and adjusting clothing; 3. possibly feeding, shaving, brushing teeth or adjusting prosthetics for same where necessary; 4. change, adjust, clean and drain urinary apparatus of different kinds; 5. give laxatives and enemas; 6. be ready to change clothes or sheets at any time of the day or night because of lack of control of bodily function; 7. be aware of any change in patient's condition which may warn of pending illness or complication; 8. check body regularly and thoroughly to guard against pressure sores; 9. superintend diet and medication if necessary, and make sure water jug is always accessible and full; 10. wash hair, manicure and pedicure; 11. act as chauffeur as needs or wishes require; 12. never leave the disabled person unattended for more than two hours; 13. devise a hobby or entertainment so he doesn't just sit.

In addition, a wife will do laundry, shop, cook meals and generally keep house. Where could one hire someone to do all these things at the level of the pension you are paying? In addition to all the above, it is also true that in many cases the pension maximum is far below the income of the worker at the time of his injury.

Today, in the Speech from the Throne [she was writing March 20] amendments to the Workmen's Compensation Act were mentioned as future legislation. I am extremely grateful that the Workmen's Compensation Act exists, for without it the trauma on family and people caused by catastrophic accidents would be almost insurmountable. However, sir, I respectfully submit that amendments made heretofore are pitifully inadequate and inequitable. Since my husband was injured and became a quadriplegic from that spinal cord injury, armed services pensioners have had adjustments and three raises in their pensions. Old age pensions have been increased; the Province of Quebec teachers' pensions have increased; the lowly hamburger has increased from three pounds for $1 to 95 cents for one pound.

I trust sir, that when amendments are made to the Workmen's Compensation Act, it will be by people who have made themselves more aware of the plight of disabled workers, some of whom are forced to live in ever-increasing poverty.

Yours respectfully.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will kindly take his seat.

Mr. Lewis: I am bringing it to the last sentence. Imagine the chagrin, the dismay, and the despair on the part of this writer describing her family's lot in life at what you have done, which is to lock her husband, the recipient of an injury 10 years ago, into a situation identical today to what it has been for the past 10 years.

So we vote for your bill on second reading. But we will fight you clause by clause, and we are bitterly disappointed in what you failed to do.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Haggerty: Think it over, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Guindon moves the adjournment of the debate. Shall the motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the provisions of standing order No. 28(a), it being 10:30 o'clock, p.m., I shall deem that a motion to adjourn has been made, for the purpose of debating certain matters that have been brought to my attention, in which certain members were dissatisfied with the answers provided to them by the ministry during the question period.

I had indicated to the House previously in accordance with the standing orders that there would be two matters that could be debated properly under the standing orders. However, certain submissions have been made to me and in accordance with the provisions of standing order 28(c), I have in fact consulted with certain members of the parties, and it has been pointed out to me that there is a certain degree of lack of clarity in this particular set of rules. I would point out that 28(a) provides for a five-minute debate by members, plural, which seems to indicate that there was an anticipation that more than one member might raise the same question.

I had, in fact, ruled that the third notice I received was a similar question to the one already submitted, but I had overlooked the pluralization of the word "member." This leaves me in somewhat of a quandary as to whether the interpretation should be that the five minutes provided should be split between the two members who had raised a similar question, or whether each should be afforded the five minutes.

There was also another matter of lack of clarity as far as I am concerned, and that is, whether or not a topic or the subject matter consists of the original question or supplementaries asked thereto during the question period, which again provides a little bit of confusion.

Now, while I had indicated to the House that there would be two members only who would be debating the subject they raised, I find that in view of the lack of clarity I am going to permit the three members who had provided me with notices of their dissatisfaction, to enter this debate. In other words, I am going to construe for the purpose of this debate tonight that the matter raised by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre was a different matter, sufficiently different from the matter raised by the hon. member for Ottawa East, and I will permit it as a separate item.

Now, in order that the two hon. members who raised the similar matters may speak consecutively, I am going to permit the hon. member for Grey-Bruce to introduce his item first. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce was dissatisfied with the answer provided by the hon. minister in connection with representations on the commission for the Niagara Escarpment. I will therefore permit the hon. member for Grey-Bruce five minutes at the present time to present his grievance.

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT DEVELOPMENT

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your courtesy.

The bombshell launched in Hollywood fashion yesterday, all of us on this side of the House will agree, was truly a Davis-White snow job by a government which less than five weeks ago was so seriously in debt it had to increase the sale tax by two per cent.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): By 40 per cent.

Mr. Sargent: I am sorry, 40 per cent then; that is better. Now we have the bombshell of the plan to spend $500 million to $750 million on land acquisition.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): The member for Grey-Bruce owns most of the land up there.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): Don't interrupt him.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a family can work the land for five generations from sunrise to sunset, but it takes a Tory bureaucrat at Queen's Park who has never cultivated an acre of land in his life to tell his family what they may or may not do with their own land. This is Tammany on a provincial scale. Here we find the big boss, the Premier (Mr. Davis), in all his glory grabbing the land power and tramping on the rights of individual farmers who are the real backbone of this province. When a man is not master of his own land, it is time to change governments.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should confine his remarks to the question, which was that he noted dissatisfaction with the representation on the commission.

Mr. W. Newman: How many acres does the member for Grey-Bruce own up there?

Mr. Sargent: I certainly will, Mr. Speaker. Everyone in this province knows that this government is haemorrhaging in about 20 different places. Yet when they get the Premier down off his jet, he comes in here and he lays a bombshell like the one yesterday, like this escarpment snafu.

In the whole package of the escarpment programme and setup of the commission, which is the all-important thing I am concerned about, this minister has guaranteed me that we would have representation for our area on it. We have eight counties here. Peel county with eight miles of escarpment gets one member; Niagara has about 12 miles and gets one member; Dufferin has 12 miles and gets a member; Halton has 10 miles and gets a member; Wentworth has about 10 miles and gets a member; Grey county has 120 miles and gets one member; and Bruce county has 120 miles and gets one member.

Mr. W. Newman: How many acres does the member for Grey-Bruce own up there? Let's be honest.

Mr. Roy: Stick to the point.

Mr. Sargent: We have a lot of morons in this place but there is a real one, that guy, he is a real moron.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I don't own one acre of land at all in that package and the member for Ontario South knows that.

Mr. W. Newman: Oh, come on!

Mr. Speaker: Order! There are two minutes remaining.

Mr. Sargent: I haven't even started yet.

An hon. member: That is the truest word the member has said.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I project this will be the biggest land grab in the history of this province. We are being terribly misled, Mr. Speaker, through this legislative game of authorizing without appropriating.

Mr. Speaker: This has nothing to do with the representation on the commission and this was the member's notice.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, you must know that I am talking right on the target here.

Mr. J. M. Turner (Peterborough): The member is off base.

Mr. Sargent: The criminal thing about this, and I have a great respect for this minister, is we are bringing into play here authorization, Mr. Speaker, of park or recreation land without appropriating funds, which will make those on the inside rich.

Mr. Speaker: There are 30 seconds left.

Mr. Sargent: I believe that when it comes to protecting Ontario people in our open spaces, authorization should be tied to appropriation or else a long-term real estate contract should be signed with a downpayment instead of maybe 20 years.

In summary, I suggest kindly to the minister that we demand—

Mr. W. Newman: Who is we?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Interjection by hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sargent: —in the Bruce and Grey county areas representation on this commission based on 40 per cent of the land involved. Secondly, we demand that the freeze be taken off the Lake Huron side of the Bruce Peninsula, and the government can have its half a mile of buffer for the escarpment.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. Sargent: I do thank you, Mr. Speaker, but I want to say that we are not kidding on this thing. We have heard of such things as secessions; it might even happen in Bruce county.

Mr. Speaker: Time has expired. The hon. minister may now reply for five minutes if he wishes; is there no response?

The hon. member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Roy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for you—

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order, do I get an answer from him tonight?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister indicated he didn't wish to respond; he needn't respond. According to standing orders there is no need on his part to reply.

Mr. Sargent: What was it all for then?

An hon. member: He didn't have an answer.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): That's pretty chicken of the minister.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa East.

An hon. member: The people are entitled to an answer to that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, my basic motivation was that he didn't answer my question in the House. That is why I spoke tonight—for an answer tonight!

Mr. Speaker: I am very sorry. The rules don't provide that the hon. minister must reply.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): It's a free country.

Mr. Sargent: Why do we do this then?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: That's up to the hon. member.

Mr. Roy: The Speaker is right. He doesn't have to reply.

Mr. Reid: The minister's consistent—he has no answers anyway.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, thank you for your graciousness in your decision. I trust that you will not dock off my time the interruptions by the member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is starting now, right now.

DISMISSAL OF TEACHERS IN CORNWALL

Mr. Roy: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, in answer to my question, the minister appeared to be satisfied with leaving the responsibility for the Cornwall problem with the school board. Part of his answer was that he felt there was recourse in law for both teachers. I say very respectfully, Mr. Speaker, that in the light of the present Cornwall situation and the explosive nature of that situation, the minister's action is most irresponsible.

It was less than a month ago, Mr. Speaker, when the board clearly demonstrated its lack of objectivity in this situation by refusing to grant a French-language school in an area where 52 per cent of the residents were French speaking. It was at that time that the minister felt obliged, because of this lack of objectivity, Mr. Speaker, to send Prof. Symons to settle that problem, and settle he did. At that time the minister didn't feel the board was objective and yet today, apparently, he feels that it is. How does he rate that particular situation, especially in the light of the firing of the two teachers?

As far as legal recourse is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I think it's ridiculous. In light of the time it takes to get a matter before the court; in light of the fact that the situation is very inflammatory there; that the students are apparently threatening to go back out on strike; that, apparently, the teachers from all the schools in that area are prepared to support their colleagues who have been fired; I think it's highly irresponsible of the minister to say that they have legal recourse.

The minister, Mr. Speaker, says, "I don't like interfering with school boards," but when it suits his purpose, he doesn't mind interfering with the school boards.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Roy: When it suits his purpose, he doesn't mind.

Mr. Speaker: I think there is no point which outlines the situation better than the position taken by all the Franco-Ontarian associations which sent me a telegram dated yesterday. I shall read it in French, Mr. Speaker. It states:

LA DECISION DU CONSEIL SCOLAIRE DE STORMONT, DUNDAS ET GLENGARRY DE CONGEDIER DEUX PROFESSEURS ET DE TENIR LE DOSSIER DE TROIS AUTRES NOUS PARAIT COMME UNE MESURE DISCRIMINATOIRE POUR DES RAISONS CULTURELLES ET LINGUISTIQUES ET CONSTITUE UNE VENGEANCE SUITE AUX EVENEMENTS DE MARS CONCERNANT L'ECOLE SECONDAIRE DE LANGUE FRANCAISE ST-LAURENT.

LE CONSEIL A PRIS SA DECISION SUR LA FOI D'UN RAPPORT DONT LES AUTEURS EUX-MEMES AFFIRMENT NE PAS POUVOIR ATTESTER DE L'AUTHEENTICITE DES FAITS.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, what they are saying is that there was no foundation, there was no basis, for the firing of the teachers. Whatever I say here this evening, Mr. Speaker, I suppose nothing will convince the public more and nothing typifies more the attitude of this government than the reaction or the interjection of the member for Renfrew South (Mr. Yakabuski) when I raised the question. I read from Hansard what he had to say in this situation.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Look at the attitude of the minister.

Mr. Roy: He said, "They should—"

An hon. member: The minister is not—

Mr. Roy: Here's what the member for Renfrew South had to say on this problem.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): They're so smart; there's nothing beyond them!

Mr. Roy: He said, "They shouldn't only be fired, they should be jailed." This is the type of response we get. Now, this is a good way, Mr. Speaker, for the government to inspire confidence in the teachers of this province!

Mr. R. F. Nixon. Pickersgill was right.

Mr. Roy: I would've thought that the member for Renfrew South would have been more sympathetic to the situation in light of the fact that in parts of his riding, in the area of Barry's Bay, there are a lot of people of Polish descent. When these people advocate retaining their culture, retaining the language, something that this government encourages, should they go to jail?

Mr. Speaker: I find that this member's statements were absolutely irresponsible and what I find most disturbing in this situation is that the minister should sit there in his seat while one of his colleagues utters this type of statement. His silence amounts to condonation of his statement, and I say to the minister, how can he ever convince the teachers of this province, or the Franco-Ontarians, that they are entitled to equity and justice? How can he possibly—without publicly and immediately and irrevocably repudiating such statements and reprimanding the hon. member for Renfrew South—have their confidence? His sitting there and not saying a word on that type of statement is condonation and he is as responsible as the member is.

I say very sincerely, Mr. Speaker, in view of that type of statement from the hon. member for Renfrew South, he does not deserve to represent that great riding.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: According to standing orders normally the minister would reply in each case, but, in view of the fact that the original question was put and then a supplementary, I will permit the hon. member for Ottawa Centre to state his case now.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): If the minister wishes to reply, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Sargent: Maybe he will chicken out.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister wish to reply at this moment? The hon. member may speak now.

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): He just wants to be a little better.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, during the course of this afternoon's session I asked whether the minister considered what was happening in Cornwall as reprisals by the school board against Francophone teachers. The minister's reply, Mr. Speaker, was that he didn't know if there were reprisals there because he did not know what the particular situation was.

That is the reason that I brought this matter up on the adjournment debate. It surprised, alarmed and amazed me that in view of the explosive situation in Cornwall the minister didn't know. He should know what is happening there. If a situation exists where reprisals are taking place then there is a clear case for the minister to go in and to intervene.

Mr. Speaker, the policy of the government enunciated by Premier Robarts and by Premier Davis, was to guarantee the rights of Franco-Ontarians and their fundamental privileges. Mr. Robarts said, back in 1967, that the government recognized and sympathized with the desire of French Ontarians as citizens of Canada to preserve their language, their customs and their culture as an integral part of Canadian life. Presumably that means of Ontario life as well.

The Ministry of Education lays down curricula guidelines for school boards. It lays down regulations. The School Administration Act and the Teaching Profession Act even tells the teachers what time they should be at the school, how they should keep it and how they should mind the school bell. That is the framework within which board autonomy, as the minister refers to it, is exercised.

When a board exceeds the ceilings, when it refuses to go along with the curricula guidelines, the ministry is there. But, here we have a minister suddenly falling back on the principle of autonomy in a case where this is a clearly enunciated government policy of giving Francophones linguistic rights in the schools and where there is an equally clear prima facie case of reprisals being taken against Francophones and only against the Francophones.

The minister might be aware that a certain teacher in the Stormont system, Ronald MacKay, has had a newspaper column in the area for some time, in which on occasion he has criticized the school board publicly. Other Anglophone teachers have spoken up in public, in public meetings and similar situations, in order to state that they believe that the French-Canadians in that city should not have their own secondary school and they have argued against the demands of the Francophone group in that particular school board. But has there been any disciplinary action taken against those teachers? The answer is no, no action has been taken.

Mr. Speaker, in this particular case, not only did the school board act in an arbitrary fashion by picking on Francophone teachers who had indicated some support for the Francophone students who were seeking the rights that the government had promised them, but in addition they carried out a secret investigation, the results of which have not yet been released to the teachers. They carried it out on the basis of hearsay evidence from students and from newspapers without interviewing the teachers concerned.

The redress available at law is not only dilatory but it is also unavailable both to the teacher on a probationary contract and to the three teachers who are having a dossier placed in their files with a record of their actions during the Cornwall school dispute, the contents of which they do not know. They do not know what effect this will have on their future within that particular school system; and, so far as I know, there is no particular legal redress.

When Mr. Symons was in Cornwall, he told trustees, of course, that in any strike situation there are no reprisals, but he said that privately there were no guarantees. When he left, though, there was a feeling of goodwill among the school board; the Francophones were led to believe that the situation had been resolved and that they would be equitably treated.

That is not the case now. Reprisals are clearly being taken. There is evidence that the school board is acting against the interest of Francophones in the case of elementary pupils in another district, in Crysler, where they are being transported 18 miles when there is a brand-new school only three miles away and they are being denied access to that particular school.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we get the real attitude of the government coming out. The government states a policy on one hand, but acts in a different way; it finds the member for Renfrew South to enunciate it when he says that the teachers shouldn't just be fired, they should be jailed. Mr. Speaker, the member for Renfrew South should resign for a racist remark like that. He should get out of this House and go back to his home constituency.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Time has expired.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): He should be ashamed of himself.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the minister himself—

Mr. Lewis: It is a contemptible remark.

Mr. Speaker: Time has expired. The hon. member has had five minutes. Now the hon. minister may respond; he may take no longer than 10 minutes in total.

Mr. Sargent: Does he get 10 minutes?

Mr. Speaker: Five minutes for each member.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I find very little in the two speeches that have gone ahead of me to support or do anything for the cause of the Francophones in this province. When the two hon. members who have spoken can build a record like the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Guindon), the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Villeneuve) and others on this side, along with this government, in fighting for and winning—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Don't forget the member for Renfrew South; include him too.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —in fighting for, and winning in, the cause of Francophones in this province, then they can stand and talk with a little experience.

Mr. Lewis: Is the minister deliberately excluding the member for Renfrew South? Is he deliberately excluding him from his tributes?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Let them get a little background and establish a reputation, as my colleagues here have done and as this government has done over the years. And as this government will continue to do this—

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): If it should last so long!

Hon. Mr. Wells: —in a climate based upon mutual trust, and not the kind of a climate where one tries to get both sides fighting against one another.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister's actions belie his words.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, all I am going to do tonight is read my letter to Mr. Omer Deslauriers, which I sent to him yesterday. I think it outlines our position in this matter very well.

Mr. Cassidy: The Rhodesians keep telling the blacks to wait!

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): Keep quiet!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I wrote:

Thank you very much for your telegram concerning the teacher dismissals in Cornwall. I would like at the outset to assure you that I share ACFO's concern over this situation. I am deeply troubled by any suggestion that this action is by way of reprisal and that the students may go on strike once again in protest.

I know that ACFO would join with me in urging that this not happen in light of the fact that, thanks largely to the efforts of Prof. Symons, an acceptable policy on French-language education has been adopted by the Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry Board of Education.

The matter of the dismissal of teaching staff is, as you know, entirely within the jurisdiction of a school board. As far as the dismissal of Father Besozzi and Mr. Boyer is concerned, one can only assume that the majority of the members of the Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry Board of Education felt justified in taking this course of action.

Although Father Besozzi is limited as far as recourse goes by the fact of his probationary status, Mr. Boyer can by law apply for a board of reference to hear his cause. I would suggest to you and to ACFO that should a board of reference take place, all the aspects of this particular situation will be examined closely.

Once again, thank you for contacting us. Kindest regards.

Mr. Cassidy: The Franco-Ontarians won't forget this.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that recourse to law is here. If my hon. friends knew the legislation concerning a board of reference, they would know that it has all the powers of a judicial inquiry. It gives to a member of the judiciary and two other people, one representing the person dismissed and the other representing the board, the opportunity for a full and complete hearing. It holds up any action concerning the—

Mr. Roy: What about the professor?

Hon. Mr. Wells: It holds up any action concerning that teaching position—

Mr. Cassidy: Only one teaches the course—one out of five!

Hon. Mr. Wells: The position is held until the decision of that board has been reached.

In effect it is the proper kind of judicial inquiry that should be held in this particular situation. As I indicated to the House earlier, if Mr. Boyer applies, his application will be looked upon with favour and a board of reference will be granted.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: This completes the debate on standing order 27.

I should point out to the hon. members that I will make a ruling as quickly as possible, in any event, no later than next Tuesday, clarifying the two points which seem to require some clarification in connection with standing orders 27 and 28.

In accordance with clause 2 of standing order 28(a), I now deem the motion to adjourn to have been carried.

This House stand adjourned until 2 o'clock, p.m. tomorrow afternoon.

The House adjourned at 11 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 6, 1973

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our guests today in the east gallery are students from St. Bernadette's Separate School of Guelph and from Earl Beatty Public School of Toronto.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to rise on a point of personal privilege. Last night here on the late show—and I call it the late show because that's all it was, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Why wasn't the member here?

Mr. Yakabuski: The hon. members for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) and Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) intimated that I was reflecting the position of this government when I made a remark concerning two teachers in the Cornwall high school situation.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Does the member mean it was just his own position?

Mr. Yakabuski: Quote, "They shouldn't only be fired, they should be jailed." I never have, Mr. Speaker, nor do I condemn the objectives of the teachers involved. I do condemn the methods they have used to attain those goals.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): What is the point of privilege?

Mr. Yakabuski: This is a personal view, Mr. Speaker, mine only and not one of my government.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): What made the member say it?

Mr. Yakabuski: I was influenced by a similar occurrence in Sturgeon Falls some two years ago which has had tragic results.

An hon. member: Shame on the member!

Mr. Yakabuski: A community is divided, where formerly lifelong friends are now enemies, where people of the same religious denomination—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order! On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Yakabuski: —because of varying racial backgrounds, are no longer welcome at the same church.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Oh, shame, shame! What's wrong with the member?

Mr. Yakabuski: On any—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order, please!

Mr. Lewis: The member is just obsessed with this. Leave it alone.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. members will please be seated. The hon. member for Downsview has raised a point of order.

Mr. Yakabuski: Well, Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will please be seated.

Mr. Yakabuski: I would like to conclude.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will please be seated!

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, for the last time, will please be seated!

The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, surely it is not a point of privilege to raise in this way if a member wants to explain a position that he may or may not have taken. If he wants to explain his position there must be ample opportunity given in the general orders of this House for him to do it. I suggest it is highly improper to try to make an explanation at this point of time on a point of privilege.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: His only ground is a full retraction, if he was misquoted.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, if the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Throw him out!

Mr. Yakabuski: May I conclude, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will be seated!

Mr. MacDonald: No. The member has been asked to sit down. He is a law unto himself; that is his problem!

Mr. Speaker: I must say that the point of order raised by the hon. member for Downsview does have some merit. The hon. member for Renfrew South had arisen on what he called a point of personal privilege. I was listening carefully to determine whether or not he had one, and I think it's only fair to let the hon. member continue. It was an important incident, and in fairness to all members of the House, I think that it's only fair to hear him out, to see if, in fact, there is a point of personal privilege. The hon. member may continue.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, any member of this House who, for political gain, would encourage, be part of or exploit an explosive situation such as exists in Cornwall today—

Mr. MacDonald: That is what the member for Renfrew South is doing.

Mr. Yakabuski: —is completely irresponsible and is not worthy of sitting in this chamber.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That is out of order.

Mr. Lewis: That is absolutely out of order.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, if the language I used in my remarks yesterday was too strong—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: This sort of statement is out of order. The hon. member will be seated. He is out of order. For the last time, will the hon. member be seated. He is out of order.

Mr. Yakabuski: I want to withdraw my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: I hereby name the hon. member and I request him to leave the chamber as of now for the remainder of this day's sitting. The Sergeant-at-Arms will please escort him from the chambers.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): You are making a mistake.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Yakabuski: You did not allow me to withdraw my remarks—

Mr. Speaker: The Sergeant-at-Arms will escort the hon. member from the chamber.

Mr. Yakabuski: —and to apologize to this House.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: This is a travesty of justice.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will please leave the chamber or I will construe this is a matter of serious consequence. You will please leave the chamber at this moment.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): On a matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would ask respectfully if you could take into consideration the remarks of the hon. member for Renfrew South, made last night, which I will not bother to quote in their entirety, in view of the fact that they represent a derogation of the due process of law for which this Legislature exists.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. H. Jessiman (Fort William): Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: This cannot in any way be construed as a matter of privilege. It is not a matter of personal privilege or a matter of order. I heard what the hon. member has spoken, and I will be glad to consult with him after. But there is no place at this time in the proceedings for the hon. member to raise such a point.

Statements by the ministry.

Are there any statements?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I believe there is a statement.

Mr. Lewis: We are just waiting for it.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAMME

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Thank you very much. I wanted, as I had given my word, to indicate to the House today the bills that would be forthcoming in the balance of this part of the session. I would say, first and foremost, that the bills that I will enunciate now are for first reading only and will be placed on the order paper by the appropriate ministry. I will give the members copies of this.

Grain Elevator Storage Amendment Act;
Weed Control Amendment Act;

Ministry of Colleges and Universities Amendment Act (in regard to public libraries);

Osgoode Hall Law Scholarships Amendment Act;

Child Welfare Amendment Act;

Day Nurseries Amendment Act; and Homes for the Retarded Persons Amendment Act.

Then the bills that will be introduced to be enacted during this part of the session will be:

Livestock Medicine Act;

Extra-Judicial Services Amendment Act;

Jurors Amendment Act;

Liquor Control Amendment Act;

Liquor Licence Amendment Act;

Secondary Schools and Boards of Education Amendment Act;

Schools Administration Amendment Act;

Development Corporations Act;

Conservation Authorities Amendment Act;

Ontario Urban Transportation Development Corp. Act;

Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act;

Durham Regional Government Act;

Halton Regional Government Act;

Municipal Amendment Act;

Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Amendment Act;

Niagara Escarpment Act;

Ontario Planning and Development Act;

Parkway Belt Act;

Peel Regional Government Act;

Ontario Education Capital Aid Corp. Amendment Act;

Ontario Universities Capital Aid Corp. Amendment Act;

Property Tax Stabilization Act;

Regional Development Councils Repeal Act;

Regional Municipal Grants Amendment Act;

Regional Municipality of Niagara Amendment Act;

Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton Amendment Act;

Regional Municipality of Sudbury Amendment Act;

Regional Municipality of Waterloo Amendment Act;

Regional Municipality of York Amendment Act;

Residential Property Tax Amendment and Repeal Act;

Wasaga Consolidation Act.

Mr. Lewis: I am glad we are taking the week off for Her Majesty!

Mr. Singer: There are 10 more.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, in addition to this there will be a number of bills regarding energy, which I don't have before me yet, and the Waterloo Lutheran University Act. I would say to the members opposite—when they look over the list they can make their own judgement—that quite a number of these I read finally are house-keeping and not of tremendous importance.

Mr. Singer: Be certain to tell that to—

Mr. Cassidy: He can do his housekeeping in the first two months.

Mr. MacDonald: May I ask of the House leader, by way of clarification as to the future agenda of the House: Can one conclude from this that the remainder of the session prior to the summer adjournment will be exclusively devoted to legislation and that we will not be returning to estimates? What is his thought with regard to the estimate ingredient in our agenda?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I would say in answer to that, Mr. Speaker, that after a perusal of the list I have supplied, I think negotiation can take place and that can be resolved. I would suspect though, that probably the time would be used for legislation.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): May I ask just one question in regard to the list?

Mr. Lewis: There is a significant absence on the list.

Mr. Deans: Am I to assume from the list that the Hamilton-Wentworth regional government is not proceeding this session?

Mr. Lewis: Well, one might say that.

Mr. Deans: It is not on the list.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Yes, that should be included if it isn't.

Mr. Reid: He can't even read!

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Oh yes I can. I have compiled this with the benefit of consultation, and it may have been missed by someone else.

Mr. Singer: This is only a tentative list. The final list is—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I am too.

Mr. Deans: Perhaps he can clear up one other matter, just in regard to the asterisk which is placed beside those bills which have already received cabinet approval. I assume that bill has not then, since it doesn't appear?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I am not prepared to say that. I accepted these from the Treasurer (Mr. White) not too many moments ago.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, a little mistake occurred there and the asterisk shouldn't have been in. A slight oversight.

HALDIMAND-NORFOLK REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT STUDY

Mr. R. F. Nixon: On a point of order, just before we begin the oral question period. It has to do with the Hansard report of our daily debates. In perusing the debates having to do with the exchanges with the Treasurer on May 31, the day the Haldimand-Norfolk report was tabled, I have been unable to find the Treasurer's comments, which I distinctly heard on that day, when he was questioned about the position of land assemblers who had evidently assembled the land, not exactly in the spot where the report indicated a new town would be developed.

I recall the Treasurer distinctly saying the words to the effect that he hoped that they would lose money. These words are not contained in the Hansard report, sir, and it seems to me that they indicated a fairly important prejudice, if not a philosophical position, by the Treasurer, and I feel that they should not have been omitted from the report of our debates. I would ask you, sir, if you would look into this matter?

Mr. Speaker: I must say to the hon. Leader of the Opposition I have no knowledge whatsoever of any omission. I can't particularly recall the comments at the time in the House. If the hon. Leader of the Opposition will provide me with details then of course I will read the transcript of what he has just said. But I would like to discuss it with him so that I may properly review the situation and see if in fact anything has been omitted which should not have been omitted.

Mr. Lewis: You can go back to the—

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions. The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

MUNICIPAL ZONING COSTS

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Chairman of the Management Board:

Has any provision been made to pay the costs of the changing and zoning orders related to the land freezes, particularly in Norfolk county, but in other areas where special freezes have been imposed by government announcement? This is in view of the fact that council meetings in the case of the township of Townsend, which has had its whole land development frozen, cost $125 per meeting, and planning boards $100 per meeting, and that their costs have increased considerably since they have had to cope with the freezing order imposed by the Treasurer.

If there is no provision for financial assistance, will the Chairman of the Management Board give consideration to making such financial assistance available in much the same line as it is made available in the announcement for the three bills that were introduced earlier this week, where if zoning bylaws have to be brought into line with any proposed provincial plan in the future, moneys are made available to absorb the special cost?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I will consider that, Mr. Speaker, thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

TORONTO-CENTRED REGION

Mr. R. F. Nixon: In the absence of the Treasurer, I would like to put this question to the House leader: Would he undertake to consult with his colleagues in the Cabinet, particularly the Treasurer and the Premier (Mr. Davis), so that any changes in the provisions of the Toronto-centred region plan which have been undertaken by order-in-council, or even by memo—

Mr. Stokes: This question is for the House leader.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Right; to the House leader.

Mr. Lewis: He is a little flustered by what the Leader of the Opposition leaked today.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He has so many hats, he forgot he has one entitled "House leader."

But I would put the question to the House leader, Mr. Speaker, whether he will undertake to consult with the Treasurer and the Premier, and any other cabinet ministers who might be involved, so that we can have tabled in the House any variances by order-in-council, or by memo, or by letter, to the Toronto-centred region plan, which was accepted by government policy; any variances that have been undertaken by the government in any way, which would have any effect, legal or otherwise, on the approval for certain plans of subdivisions or certain applications for development in the area covered by the Toronto-centred region?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will certainly do that for the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT COMMISSION

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I would like to ask the House leader in his capacity as member for Grey South, I guess, if he has been contacted by municipal officials in the region covered by the Beaver Valley planning area with objections which they have brought to my attention and to the attention of other members of the Legislature, with the proposed establishment under the Niagara Escarpment statute of a special commission which they feel does not take into proper recognition the work and planning that has already been done in that area, either through let's say the interjection of the work that has already been accomplished, or adequate representation on the commission as proposed.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not had any communication from anyone, and not accepting the premise of the question as it was put to me, I believe that the result of the action taken on Monday will make the situation entirely more flexible than it was. I expect that the plan, and I suppose, too, the zoning bylaw that is currently being prepared, will be honoured to the greatest possible degree, and that the people who will be appointed will be people from the area who will understand more what the development and the aims and the objectives of the people are there and will do their development accordingly.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Would they understand the aims of the local area better than the planning board?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That is quite correct.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary then: The minister, when he talks about greater flexibility as being one of the great advantages of the programme which has been brought forward by the administration—which is supported by the House leader, obviously—is talking about flexibility in the sense that there will not be, in fact, zoning orders but some sort of a development control. This means that the decision is going to be made by some group of people, a commission, or some other group set up, rather than the acknowledgement of bylaws established by the municipality, or zoning regulations established by the province. Just in essence, then, that is the kind of flexibility which he feels is going to be more in the interests of the people in the Beaver Valley planning area?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: What I believe will be more flexible for the people of Beaver Valley and all of Grey county that is involved, and Bruce county as well, is that the person to be appointed will know what development should occur in accordance with the planning that has already been done, and without the completion of the entire plan they will be able to say, "Proceed." Not as it has been up until this point in time.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: Then it is government policy to proceed with the development of the area on ad hoc approval or disapproval of specific projects rather than fitting it into a plan that has been established by the local people?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Not one bit. It will take into consideration—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That is what it is exactly. The decision of some individual.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: It will take into consideration the plan that is there right now—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He calls it flexibility—it is dictatorship.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Winkler:—and the zoning that has been done—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Winkler:—and that is what I have understood it was getting and it will happen.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It is open to all sorts of abuse.

An hon. member: Dictatorship.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Not a bit. Not a bit.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: Wouldn't the minister recognize at least the fear in the minds of a good many reasonable people that the programme that he proposes will be open to all sorts of abuse and intrusion—

Mr. Singer: Absolutely.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Chatham-Kent): Oh, come on, come on.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: —from politicians in the area or even from Chatham?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, there will be no abuse and the decisions will finally be made back in there where the people have their toes in the sand.

Mr. Singer: By whom?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Yes, dictated from Queen's Park.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: By the people we appoint.

Interjections by hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The worst kind of political abuse.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: And any amount of disturbance by the member's colleague from Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) won't deter me.

An hon. member: He's not here!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Scarborough West have a supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: Nothing deters the House leader.

Mr. Speaker: Is this a supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, it is a supplementary.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: It takes a lot to deter the House leader.

Mr. Lewis: What possible justification can the minister have for supporting a development control approach to the whole escarpment which ultimately gives primary power to the one individual who is a government appointment from the area? How is that a better planning process and a more useful planning process than what we have now?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It is going to be the Winkler plan.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: No, not at all. Because he will co-operate with all the local planning boards, knowing what their goals are.

Mr. Lewis: Then again, this is a private sellout. The government is doing to the escarpment what it did—

Hon. Mr. Winkler: It is not and the member knows it. He's trying to make political yards out of it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I didn't think you fellows would spoil my day this way today!

The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I have no further questions at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

PARKWAY BELT

Mr. Lewis: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the resource treasurer—sorry, the secretary—I elevated him. Will the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development table the draft regulations on which the parkway bill will be based, retroactive to June 4?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): No, I won't be doing that, Mr. Speaker, but the question can be referred to the Treasurer. I'll see that he receives it.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development—whom as I recall was one of the voice-over-tape specialists at the showing during the parkway presentation, so these questions are appropriate—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Singer: "We will have it working in a minute, Mr. Lawrence."

Mr. R. F. Nixon: This is not acceptable, Mr. Lawrence.

Mr. Lewis: Where is the new generating station to be located in the Oakville-Mississauga minibelt of the parkway west?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I don't know, Mr. Speaker, but I will find out.

Mr. Lewis: Good. What is the minister going to do about the admission of failure on page 17 which says: "There will be little protection from the noise associated with Highway 403, but development pressure leaves little alternative." Is he satisfied with that environmental debacle?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I will assess the question and respond to it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Right. May I ask the secretary for a breakdown of the $150 million to $200 million acquisition programme associated with the parkway belt—how much is for public parks, how much for land bank, how much for highways, how much for utilities?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we can provide estimates. We can't, of course, base our response on detailed appraisals but we'll do the best we can with the estimates that have been developed in the department.

Mr. Lewis: I would presume, given all the work on these various schemes, the escarpment and the parkway, that the minister would have those figures at hand, or at least at mind. Can he not give them to us now?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, the figures that we were using were basically those developed by the task force. The task force itself, as I understand it, didn't try to base its figures on an analysis of the depth one would use, for example, before the Land Compensation Board or before an assessment appeal body.

As I undertook yesterday, I will obtain from the task force and from the people who work in the department on the parkway belt today the best basis or the best figures that they came up with. As I say, they are not based on a total statistical analysis of property values.

Mr. Lewis: I want to understand this because I was flummoxed yesterday and I'm flummoxed today. Is the minister saying that he accepts a report which involves a major parkway design and posits an expenditure of $150 million to $200 million, that he participated in its unfolding to the public but he doesn't have the basis for the arrival of those figures at hand? He doesn't have them easily at hand; he hasn't gone over them as head of the resource field?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: No, Mr. Speaker. The task force in relation to Niagara, and the work done on the parkway belt involved scores of people. The task force itself was, I think, about a dozen people.

Mr. Stokes: The minister's $200 million figure is about as precise as $3 billion.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: They relied on advice and information from other departments and from conservation authorities. As I say, the opinions as to value were developed on the basis of the judgement of these people and the sources they went to. They were not developed on the statistical basis of a total review of either individual sales of the ground or by way of assessment rolls.

Mr. Lewis: Does the minister know then how much will be spent this year for the total category?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: This whole thing is a farce. This isn't a serious planning proposition. This is a game.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I think the hon. member misapprehends the situation. The question of lands and their purchase and the cost of those purchases at the moment is one which can be answered only by looking into the individual departments.

Mr. Lewis: Did the minister come to a figure?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Those figures, as I say, were developed on the basis of the judgement of the task force, the members of which relied on—

Mr. Lewis: There is no task force on the parkway belt.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: —for the parkway belt, a number of the same people; again those involved in the Ministry of Treasury and Economics developed these figures. I admit the limitation and I presume that that relates to cost and time because we were under great pressure, as you know, not to sit on either the Niagara Escarpment or the parkway belt any longer.

They used their best judgement as to figures of what will be expended this year. The great difficulty here, Mr. Speaker, is that within the Ministry of Natural Resources there are blocks of money, some of which are going to be spent by the ministry; some of which will be spent by conservation authorities. In the Ministry of Transportation and Communications there is another large block of money. One goes through the departments and it is extremely difficult to analyse these all in the year 1973.

Mr. Stokes: The minister is responsible for them all.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North has a supplementary.

Mr. Good: It is a supplementary concerning the parkway belt, Mr. Speaker. Why was no mention made of where the Hydro right-of-way from Nanticoke to Pickering—the 680-ft swath that Dr. Solandt's commission looked into—fits into the parkway belt concept, whether or not it does fit in and whether this will be another 700-ft green strip through the area?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Dr. Solandt's commission, I think as the hon. member knows, is still working and is not expected to report for some weeks. Therefore there can be no mention of it. He has been proceeding essentially independently, as members know. Whether or not the announcements on Monday will affect his judgement, I don't know. We simply have to wait for Dr. Solandt's commission's report.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Good: Supplementary: Doesn't the minister think that there should be consultation or there should be a working out of perhaps the most vital cut through the province that will ever take place—something just under 700 ft? Is the minister saying that no consideration was given as to where that would fit into the parkway concept and does he not know whether Dr. Solandt is going to take into consideration government policy on the parkway belt?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: In view of last Monday, I would think he would obviously have to. But, if he was to operate as an independent commission, it didn't seem from the government's point of view that he should be working in the same milieu as the planners in TEIGA were concerned.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development. How many new parks are planned for the parkway belt—not the inclusion of existing parks but new parks?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: That question should be properly put to the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier).

Mr. Lewis: Since this minister made the presentation and it is his policy field, I am, therefore, asking him how many new parks? What is new in the parkway belt, other than that the government has decided to run a highway through a park and, therefore, is calling it a parkway? What are the new parks in the belt?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: As I said, Mr. Speaker, I can't answer that as policy minister. The development of parks within that particular area is the responsibility of the Minister of Natural Resources.

Mr. Lewis: Are there any new parks?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Yes, there are. I do recall new parks. I can't name them.

Mr. Lewis: The minister can't think of any offhand?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: It is not for me to answer that question in any case.

Interjections by hon. members.

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Lewis: Has the minister now found the calculations on which the $3 billion figure was based in the Niagara Escarpment report?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I have seen the draft of the figures this morning, Mr. Speaker. As I undertook yesterday, those will be developed and produced as soon as I can. Perhaps tomorrow I will have a detailed or relatively detailed statement to provide.

Mr. Lewis: Sure, contrived at the eleventh hour in order to justify what the minister didn't have available yesterday.

Mr. MacDonald: It is as fictional as the Minister of Revenue's (Mr. Grossman's) housing programme was three years ago.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I simply do not believe that people of the calibre of those who worked on the task force would contrive figures.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, as a last supplementary in this area, does it not strike the resources policy minister as peculiar that he unveiled for this government a major land-use plan for southern Ontario, involving the escarpment and the parkway, and in the process does not know how the $3 billion figure was arrived at and does not know how the $150 million to $200 million for the parkway will be spent?

Mr. McKeough: Question.

Mr. Lewis: I am asking a question. When the member for Chatham-Kent has a voice he can intervene; so I am asking it.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: There is no answer to the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: Is it a fact that the minister does not know where a new generating station is going; that he does not know whether there are any new parks; that he does not know whether the regulations will be tabled—

Mr. McKeough: Question.

Mr. Lewis: —that, in fact, that whole operation was an elaborate sham; and that the bills are faulty from the base?

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Does the minister agree?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary, if the minister is so frustrated about the absence of voice perhaps the member for Chatham-Kent can be given elevated status. Does the minister not, in fact, believe that it stretches credibility to the breaking point, that he should purport to present a plan of this size without making any details available to the House after its introduction? Doesn't it embarrass the minister and humiliate him?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Okay.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Didn't the member for Chatham-Kent embarrass him either?

Mr. Speaker: Does the member for Scarborough West have further questions?

Mr. Foulds: He is just recognizing what, in fact, is true.

Mr. Lewis: Now that the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development is just improbable rather than embarrassed, can I ask the Minister of Revenue a question?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Singer: The by-elections embarrassed both of them.

Mr. Lewis: Why break this happy exchange by recalling the by-elections?

Interjections by hon. members.

PROPERTY TAX CREDIT

Mr. Lewis: Why be so poisonous?

Can I ask the Minister of Revenue, Mr. Speaker, does he realize that the federal minister in charge of revenue, Mr. Stanbury, confirmed the policy on Friday of deducting tax credit returns from senior citizens whose income tax is in arrears or whose income tax had been—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Forgiven?

Mr. Lewis: No, I won't use forgiven. Well, I think it means forgiven but, in fact, was reinstated—by saying that this confirms an agreement with the provincial government covering the tax credit scheme. Did the minister realize that he had entered into that agreement with the federal government, in light of what he said the other day?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should make up his mind precisely what his question is. The other day he said that the property tax credit was being used to get the federal government—

Mr. Foulds: Answer it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member thinks he can do better he can get up and try. Go ahead.

Mr. Reid: That wouldn't be hard.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I don't know what you fellows had for lunch today.

Mr. Lewis: It is what we didn't have.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It wasn't crackers and milk, I can say that. The hon. member the other day in his question—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member, the other day, in his question asked whether it was true that we had entered into an agreement with the federal government to allow them to deduct from the property tax credit, or use the property tax credit, to get some of the taxpayers to pay back—

Mr. Lewis: Arrears in income tax.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member didn't say "arrears." He said "forgiven arrears."

Mr. Lewis: Right, right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Then it's a different ball game altogether and the hon. member knows that.

Mr. Renwick: That is what the taxpayers thought; they thought it had been forgiven.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: My people were in touch with their counterparts in Ottawa. They were not aware that at any time taxes were ever forgiven—

Mr. Renwick: That's right, but the taxpayer thought they were forgiven and forgotten.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—so that didn't apply. We want to get from them, if possible in writing, precisely what they think the situation is in respect of our arrangement with them. If the hon. member is not referring to taxes which are forgiven—

Mr. Lewis: I see.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—in fact there is no such thing—then he must be asking the question whether, in writing up the tax form, because of the structure of the tax form, credits and debits are all calculated on the form and the net effect of those debits and credits either gives a net credit or a net debit to the taxpayer. I gave the hon. member the answer at that time and my people have been trying to reach his office—I don't know whether they've succeeded—without any success so far—

Mr. Lewis: What is the minister talking about?

Mr. Renwick: The door is always open.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—to ask him to provide me with the copies of the letters, which he promised to do.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I will.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I presume he didn't want to do that because I read in the press—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, don't be so silly. I asked the question on Friday. It's in the mail.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—that the hon. member said he refused to give that information out. That may be correct or it may not be. As soon as we get the two letters which the hon. member said he had, pointing this out, we will investigate.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Scarborough West have further questions?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, on a point of privilege, I refused to give the names of the people involved. I will be glad to give the minister the correspondence. It is on its way to him.

By way of supplementary, in the minds of the senior citizens involved, and by virtue of their direct experience—and, indeed, in correspondence with the Ministry of Community and Social Services in one case—they felt that the taxes had been waived, which I called forgiven.

Mr. McKeough: The member would forgive the tax on Rochdale.

Mr. Speaker: Is that your point of privilege?

Mr. Lewis: No, I'm asking a supplementary. How did Rochdale get into this?

Mr. McKeough: He would forgive them too.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: The only person I wouldn't forgive is the member for Chatham-Kent, not under any circumstances.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister whether he thinks that the—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. McKeough: Why doesn't he go back to Kentucky?

An hon. member: Is the member for Chatham-Kent trying to take the member for Renfrew South's place?

Mr. McKeough: The only person—

Mr. Lewis: I said so many nice things about him, all of which I regret. May I ask the minister, doesn't he think that basically, regardless, it is wrong—

Mr. McKeough: Just because they won't say anything about Kentucky, we won't care.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Lewis: —for the tax credit to be used in that way by the federal government?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Again, Mr. Speaker, we apparently aren't clear precisely what the hon. member feels the tax credit is being used for.

Mr. Renwick: Oh, he does. Past taxes.

Mr. MacDonald: Past taxes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Ontario government has provided a property tax credit. The federal government has agreed to arrange for this credit through the income tax system. Obviously, we are bound by certain conditions which they require for the efficient operation of the income tax system.

If the hon. member feels that because of that system some taxpayers are, in fact, not getting the property tax credit or a portion of it because some of it is being deducted because they owe some money on another portion of their taxes, what he is suggesting is that perhaps if this is the case we should try to make some other arrangements with our federal counterparts.

If that is the case I doubt very much whether they will agree.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, can I ask the Minister of Revenue a question?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member for Downsview is entitled to a turn at this point.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Sure. And no interruptions from the member for Chatham, either.

IMPROPER DISPOSAL OF USED OHC BUILDING MATERIALS

Mr. Singer: Or from the member for Sarnia. In view of the fact that the reporter who wrote the story in Thursday's Sun has now denied the allegation put forward by the minister that there was a setup; in view of the fact that the union head of the CUPE local of OHC has denied the story was a setup; in view of the fact that the material that was apparently returned eventually to an OHC warehouse has been, apparently, stolen again; in view of the fact that there has been a certain number of questions asked and inquiries initiated about an over-supply of toilet seats by OHC in Mississauga—

Mr. Reid: They are sitting on them over there.

Mr. Singer: —in view of the fact that—

Mr. Speaker: Is this still the first question?

Mr. Singer: This is still the first question, yes.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Singer: —in view of the fact that there have been submitted, apparently, snow-cleaning bills out of all proportion to the work done and accounts paid completely beyond the work done and the services retained in the Don-Summerville area in Toronto—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Singer: —will the minister now advise us how many investigations are going on into the functioning of the OHC? Will he report in detail on these matters and will he now consent to having an open and public inquiry into the affairs of Ontario Housing Corp., particularly its administration?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of investigations going on at this present time. One was initiated by OHC and they asked the OPP to make an investigation. As to one or two others which may be going on at the present time, OHC is a vast corporation. So far as we can tell at this moment there is nothing of such a serious nature that it would require an open investigation.

I don't want to make any comment on the investigations which are going on at the present time because obviously we wouldn't want to prejudice them. I don't intend to get into a debate as to the number of toilet seats required by the Ontario Housing Corp., nor can I keep track of 80,000 toilet seats which we have in OHC.

Mr. Reid: The minister is just trying to flush these problems away.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If some toilet seats are being misplaced or not properly handled, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that—

Mr. Bullbrook: It is appropriate, I am sure. It is his responsibility.

Mr. Singer: He would be a better minister in charge of toilet seats.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—whatever investigation is necessary will be carried out.

Further, Mr. Speaker, insofar as statements made by the union organizer are concerned, I repeat what I said the other day: It would seem to me that, particularly in view of the fact that negotiations are going on between the union and the corporation, the union organizer would be better advised, if he finds anything going on with OHC which is wrong, which is illegal, to report it to OHC and/or the police. That's where those charges properly belong. He would be better advised and would be doing a better job for his union members if he would stick to his last and try to do a good job for them—

Mr. Bullbrook: Don't tell him how to run his union. The minister can't even run his own responsibilities.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—rather than create a cleavage between them and the corporation operations.

Mr. Singer: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, could the minister answer the first question I posed?

Does he stay with the story he gave us on Friday that this was a put-up job, staged solely for the benefit of the newspaper notwithstanding the positive statements that this was not so which were made both by the reporter involved and by the union president?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I didn't say it was a put-up job.

Mr. Singer: The minister certainly did. He said it was staged.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member will bother reading Hansard! I can do this from memory.

Mr. Reid: Well, that is no trick.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What I did say at that time was that this occurrence took place—the first one; because he only asked about one occurrence, one incident. I told him, I advised the hon. member that there were, in fact, two. I said there was one at 9:30 and one which was apparently a replay for the benefit of the union organizer and the press about an hour later, and by that I stand.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Drea) wanted a supplementary.

Mr. Singer: By way of further supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister still stick by his statement that the materials involved were all used and apparently useless materials, even though there is in existence—and I will produce it for the minister if he wants—a photograph showing particularly acoustic tiles in their original wrappings, indicating that they were new acoustic tiles.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is speaking of the same incident he talked about the other day, the information I gave him is the information which I was provided by the staff of OHC. If he has any evidence to the contrary, not only would I feel that he shouldn't wait for my invitation, he should provide me with that information; because, in fact, if there is something illegal going on, it's his responsibility to make sure we know about it.

Mr. Singer: The minister said it was all put and up there was nothing wrong with it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I guess the member doesn't want an answer.

Mr. Singer: Yes, now we get the facts of the minister's investigations, and there was nothing wrong.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The minister's a phoney.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member will look to the press gallery again and see if they are paying attention.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: No. I am looking at the minister. That is enough.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I take it he'll provide me with this information or provide it to the police. Either way suits me fine.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre; a supplementary.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): On a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, in light of his answers on Friday to the questions concerning the improper disposal of used OHC building materials, and part of his answer today, will the minister inquire from the management of Ontario Housing Corp. if it is true that the union involved made concrete proposals to the corporation more than a year ago for a labour-management committee to go into cost efficiencies, and which also included the question of the disappearance of materials and other matters, and which was rejected out of hand? Secondly, can the minister give assurance that any working man or woman of Ontario Housing Corp. who refuses to take part in any attempt at the improper disposal of materials will not be disciplined by the supervisors who are attempting to have them do so?

Mr. Singer: Very good questions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will give the hon. member—insofar as the last part of the question is concerned—my assurance that if there is any evidence that this is a practice which is being carried out, such practice will have to stop. It would be highly improper for this to go on; indeed, this is what we would expect a member of the corporation and a member of the staff to do. If they have any such evidence, of course, to inform those officials in OHC who are responsible for carrying out those duties, it is their responsibility to let us know, and if there are any reprisals, if the hon. member has any evidence of any such reprisals having taken place, I'd be very pleased to have that information.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And as to the first part of the supplementary—

Mr. Singer: Could I ask a supplementary to the question of the hon. member for Scarborough Centre?

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last supplementary.

Mr. Singer: In view of the suggestions made by the hon. member for Scarborough Centre, wouldn't the minister deem it proper that he should make inquiries since he is in control, rather than asking the hon. member for Scarborough Centre and myself and other people to produce evidence and prove that he is wrong?

Mr. Drea: Well, he didn't ask me to produce evidence.

Mr. Singer: Yes, he did!

Mr. Drea: No, he didn't!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I didn't ask the hon. member for Downsview to do that either. I said if he had any evidence, to provide it to me, obviously.

Mr. Singer: Well, why doesn't the minister do a proper investigation?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I think the answer to that is so obvious.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

NORTHERN ONTARIO DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMMES

Mr. Stokes: Thank you. I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism.

Is the minister aware of a study that was done by the Department of Regional and Economic Expansion concerning the effects of existing programmes in northern Ontario, and does he agree that the future for northern Ontario looks very bleak, with the exception that they might have some application because of existing programmes in the centres like Thunder Bay, Timmins, North Bay, Sudbury and Sault Ste. Marie, and does he still feel that the impact of DREE and NODC will bring northern Ontario into the mainstream of economic activity?

Hon. C. Bennett (Minister of Industry and Tourism): Mr. Speaker, let's take the last question first. As far as DREE is concerned, it is the federal government's responsibility. I am going to be meeting with Mr. Jamieson tomorrow afternoon to review the DREE programme relating to the Province of Ontario. Some of the remarks we've had so far have not been encouraging. We think that the impact of the Northern Ontario Development Corp. certainly will afford great benefits to northern Ontario and that we will see some advancements and improvements in the tourist industry as well as other industries in that part of the province.

As far as the report that the member speaks of is concerned, I am not aware of it, sir, but I see great possibilities in a lot of areas in northern Ontario from separate reports that we are making, relating to individual communities and individual projects.

Mr. Stokes: Supplementary: When does the minister expect to implement the new terms of reference or the new guidelines under NODC and ODC that will do the kind of things which he anticipates in northern Ontario outside of the main centres, the prime centres?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I would invite the member to be present on Friday morning at the session.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary?

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Yes. Is the minister aware of the statements concerning the pulp and paper industry in this report, and will he look into the fact that it predicts that there will be closures of five pulp and paper mills in northern Ontario? Will he give us the assurance that he will do everything possible to see that this kind of thing doesn't happen, particularly with a place like Iroquois Falls?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, my ministry's responsibility is to make sure that industry stays in existence in the Province of Ontario and to try to develop and encourage the economic bases that will make it a stable industry.

As far as the member's remarks are concerned, certainly we will see to it, but I am not giving him any assurance. I do not, nor does my ministry, nor does the government, have all of the parts to play in the stability of the economy in any part of this province.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. Foulds: Before the member asks a supplementary, would the minister be precise about the time and place of that meeting, and would he welcome at the meeting any members from northern Ontario concerned with this problem?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I didn't hear the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Foulds: Could he give us the precise time and place of that meeting on Friday morning that he mentioned to the member for Thunder Bay?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I said, Mr. Speaker, that I would be making a statement in the Legislature on Friday morning.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia.

INCREASE IN PER DIEM RATES OF PARKWAY COMMISSION MEMBERS

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, I want to direct a question to the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development.

Could he tell me if it was as a result of the policy initiative of his secretariat that the recent increases in the per diem rates paid to members of various parkway commissions were made? If it was, in view of the refusal of members of the St. Clair Parkway Commission to take that increase as being unconscionably generous, would he reconsider his policy?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I have no recollection of such a policy coming before the policy field.

Mr. Bullbrook: Could he tell me then why, for example, the chairman of a parkway commission's per diem would be raised from $60 a day to $105 a day? If it doesn't go through the minister's policy responsibility is this an ad hoc decision that is made by the Minister of Natural Resources? In view of the response of responsible citizens saying, "It is too much money, we can't take it," would he give an undertaking to the House and the public purse that he will review this situation?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I will have the minister review it and obviously I will ask my colleague, the Chairman of Management Board, to review it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview.

AUTOMOBILE DIAGNOSTIC CLINICS

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations whether he is contemplating any legislation to regulate the activities of automobile diagnostic clinics in Ontario and to see that the operations of these clinics are inspected in a regular fashion?

Hon. J. T. Clement (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): Mr. Speaker, my predecessor did, in fact, look into this problem, particularly as it related to the State of California to see what their experience had been. The difficulty in regulating by legislation an automobile diagnostic clinic is the difficulty in determining where incompetence terminates and where criminal fraud commences.

I think the hon. member is referring to the situation where cars are taken to two or three or half a dozen clinics and various prices ranging from A to Z are suggested. The same thing has happened in the past with the television industry. I am not actively considering any legislation along those lines right now but I am aware of the problems in those jurisdictions where legislation does in fact exist.

Mr. Young: As a supplementary then, I wonder if the minister would consider spot checks on the part of his own department in order to see just what is happening and to warn the public?

Perhaps he saw the article in the Sun this morning? I have further information here, which I will make available to him, in respect to my own car having run through three of these clinics. I think it's important that this matter be looked at by the minister and the public, at least, informed of what is going on.

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, complaints relating to diagnostic clinics have come to the attention of my ministry from time to time. I am advised that, because of the very nature of them, some of those have been referred to the Metro police; they related to the Toronto area. I understand that in one instance a criminal prosecution was launched. I don't know the outcome, whether or not there was a conviction secured.

When we are put on notice, we do look at them. We have no legislation to deal with them per se, but if we feel that it amounts to a criminal act being committed against the citizen or the consumer, we immediately involve the police force concerned.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education has the answer to a question previously asked. I might say there is one minute remaining.

GUIDELINE FOR ENVIRONMENTAL SCIENCE COURSES

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, this was a question asked by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Riddell) and it concerned the environmental science curriculum. He indicated that this guideline had been prepared and printed and was sitting in our ministry. This is not the case. The final draft of it was completed only recently and it is presently being printed and will be ready for distribution later in the summer.

It is my understanding that there is a meeting of environmental science teachers being held on June 21 and 22. If the teachers at this conference wish to have drafts of this guideline, we will make them available to them.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I'm sorry, the time for questions has been exceeded.

HALDIMAND-NORFOLK REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT STUDY

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I called your attention earlier in the question period to the fact that the statement made by the Treasurer, having to do with the profit position of certain land assemblers in the Norfolk area, could not be found in Hansard on May 31 in the questions concerning the tabling of the Haldimand-Norfolk report. I now find it is found in Hansard in total on June 1. The error was mine, not Hansard's nor anyone else's.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. Leader of the Opposition for that explanation.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Before the orders of the day, I should like to deliver a ruling pertaining to the debate last night, in connection with what has become known as the late show, as provided for in rules 27 and 28. The hon. members will recall that there was a certain amount of controversy in connection with the interpretation of those particular rules and I did inform the House that I would give further study to the provisions of those rules, standing orders 27 and 28, in order to clear up what seemed to me to be some ambiguity.

The provisions of these two orders were taken almost word for word from standing order 39, subsection 6, and standing order 40 of the House of Commons of Canada. Standing order 40 provides that the member—singular not plural—raising the matter may speak for not more than seven minutes; and the minister of the Crown, or a parliamentary secretary speaking on behalf of the minister, if he wishes to do so, may speak for not more than three minutes. It, therefore, appears clear to me that the pluralizing of the word "members" in the eighth line of our standing order 28(a) resulted from a typographical error.

Mr. Reid: Better burn the encyclopaedias next time.

Mr. Speaker: In any event, the standing order clearly provides that no one matter may be debated for more than 10 minutes—five minutes to the members raising the matter, and five minutes to the minister. Therefore, even should the plural be allowed, the five minutes would of necessity be divided between the members raising the matter. However, it seems much more logical to recognize the fact that the word "members" is a misprint and to interpret it in the singular, and I so rule. Standing order 28(a) also provides that, where there are several such matters, the total time allotted to the debate on all is 30 minutes, the Speaker terminating the debate at the end of that period by adjourning the House, as has been done.

As the federal House of Commons has had this procedure in its rules for many years, I thought the House might be interested in its application there. On each subject matter the member who raised it, that is who was dissatisfied with the answer he received in the question period, or with the Speaker's ruling that it was not urgent, speaks to it for not more than seven minutes. A minister or parliamentary secretary may reply for not more than three minutes, if he so wishes; the total debate on each subject matter being, as in this House, not more than 10 minutes. At the end of 30 minutes, or when the debates on all the subject matters have been completed, whichever comes first, the Speaker declares the House adjourned until the next sitting day.

Two points of their practice are of considerable interest:

1. No points of order, or any discussion other than the two speeches provided for by the standing order are permitted during the adjournment debate.

2. No concern is given to the matter of a quorum. As the debate is technically on a motion to adjourn, a quorum call would simply result in the premature termination of the debate and the House would adjourn. I am told that very often by the time the last matter is being discussed the attendance in the House consists of two, the member raising the matter and the minister or parliamentary secretary.

An hon. member: Supposing there was only one?

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday, the question was raised as to whether a question supplementary to one on which notice had been given under this rule could itself be debated; could itself be subject of a notice for a separate debate. I think it is fair to say that I will deal with such matters as they arise. If I am satisfied that there is a sufficient difference in the point raised by the supplementary question, I will permit a separate debate thereon, but only as the last subject of the adjournment debate, if time permits within the half-hour total limitation.

In other words, perhaps that might be called an ad hoc situation in which I will be required to determine whether or not the matter raised in the supplementary question is sufficiently different from the original question to constitute a separate subject.

Mr. Reid: We have complete faith in you.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, further to your ruling, as a member of the select committee on the rules and procedures of the Legislature, I believe I recall correctly that it was the intention of the committee to make that "member" rather than "members," and that the only one permitted to speak would be the member who raised it. I see the chairman of the committee is nodding his head the wrong way; but that is my recollection in line with your ruling.

Mr. Lewis: It is not right.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Mr. Speaker, I think it was the intention of the committee to say "members," because I think it was the whole broad subject that was to be dealt with. If two people talked about it, it would be considered as the one subject matter, and would be "members" in the plural in that sense, in that regard.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I agree with that.

Mr. Speaker: I have been viewing the standing orders very carefully, and the provisions of the House of Commons in Ottawa, from which the ruling was taken, and it's more likely that it is meant to be singular; and I have so ruled.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The sixth order, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 126, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT (concluded)

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should determine whether or not any other hon. members wish to enter this debate before the minister replies. If not, the hon. minister may proceed.

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is with a deep sense of pride and satisfaction that I rise in defence of the bill before us today. In spite of the adverse criticism and unfavourable comments from members opposite, particularly from the NDP caucus, Bill 126 represents the best package of compensation benefits that has ever been introduced in any Legislature, bar none.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Has the minister ever checked the other provinces?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: The members opposite can scrutinize legislation in the sister province of Quebec, or if they prefer going into socialist country, perhaps go to the sister province of Manitoba and go as far as British Columbia, and nowhere will they find that the benefits, which have been suggested in this bill, are as generous as in Ontario.

What this bill means, Mr. Speaker, is $12,428,000 in additional benefits each year. What this bill means is that, as of July 1, 1973, the benefits will increase from $175 million a year to $188 million a year to injured workmen of this province.

I can recall that several months ago I asked the members of the Workmen's Compensation Board to bring to me a report showing how we could possibly increase the benefits to our injured workmen. Three proposals or alternatives were presented to me. I make no apologies, but I took the most favourable one for the people of this province, and at the same time the most costly one to the employers of Ontario.

As minister responsible, I had to make sure, of course, that funds were available. I had to have consultations with employers, with the CMA and many other people. I would like to say at this time that I am pleased to see that the employers of Ontario do not shirk their responsibility, but do exercise this responsibility to the employees in Ontario.

Of course, I would have liked to increase the benefits by millions of dollars. I would have liked to give an increase across the board as was suggested by members opposite. But the dollars were not there. That is why a minister responsible cannot always do as he wishes.

The hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Reid) in his remarks, referred to the escalator clause which would mean an increase across the board to all recipients. This was looked at very closely. But, there again, it is not that equitable because we find that the recipient who gets the highest benefits will also get the highest increases, while the one who gets the lowest benefits will once more get the lowest increases. So we could not consider that with the amount of money at our disposal.

In his speech he referred as well to silicosis and caisson disease, what we commonly call the bends. There can't be any comparison between the two, as was pointed out by my friend from Cochrane South (Mr. Ferrier). Silicosis disease is sometimes detected years after it has occurred, and in this instance we have workmen who discover they suffer from silicosis after they have left the Province of Ontario. Under this bill we will be in a position to compensate them, because we have agreements with other provinces. Insofar as bends are concerned, perhaps my hon. friend does not know, but we have only had six or seven cases in the last eight years.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): I was just using that as an example.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Right. Yes, it is a good example, except for the fact that in the case of caisson disease or bends, doctors can detect immediately the impairment and compensation is given immediately. If the person or the workman who suffers from bends decides to move outside of the Province of Ontario, his pension follows him immediately.

My hon. friend from Rainy River wanted to know how many people were affected under this bill. The answer is exactly 43.1 per cent, which means somewhere about 22,000 people in Ontario.

As for my good friend from Windsor West, in perhaps one of his most radical speeches, he said, quite bluntly, that the bill was acceptable to Tories and their corporate friends, but not to the members of his party.

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): Or to the Liberal Party.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour, for one, has no corporate friends. He has right down through the years, in his private life and private business, had to fight against big corporations for survival. I know their shortcomings as well as the members opposite.

By the same token, I think I have to be honest enough and have to have courage enough to give the devil his due. I would say today, thank God, we do have in this province a great many good corporate citizens. We do have a great number of employers who can face their responsibility toward their employees.

Mr. Gisborn: Why haven't they decreased the accident rate?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: My hon. friend referred to the widower's pension, stating there was discrimination against widowers insofar as industrial accidents are concerned. I do not deny this. I know that at the present time we have no widower's pension. On widower's pension, I think perhaps I should explain that this is in the case of a woman working in an industry who happens to be the victim of a fatal accident. Unless her husband is totally dependent on her he will not receive any benefits.

What the member was referring to is that compensation should be paying benefits whether the husband is totally dependent or not dependent at all. I am looking at this very seriously.

In all honesty I can tell the hon. member that I was just about prepared to put it in the amendment today or yesterday, except for the fact that we have at the present time a task force which is looking at all benefits and pensions under the Human Rights Code. I'm referring to subsection 4(1)(g) of the Human Rights Code, which is presently under review. Once we do get this report I would think, if it is favourable, that by next year I'd be only too glad to make this statement. Of course this does not apply to too many people in this province; I would think maybe two or four cases at the most every year.

Two or three members opposite have referred to the maximum of $10,000 being not enough. We are all for motherhood, including the minister, but nowhere, not in any jurisdiction, have we seen that the maximum is higher than $10,000. As a matter of fact, I think that we are, if not the only one, one of the two provinces which go as far as $10,000.

The maximum, of course, means that any injured workman who receives a salary of $10,000 or more will qualify for 75 per cent of $10,000, which means $7,500 a year. This amount is not taxable under income tax or any kind of taxes. In fact, it is the equivalent, in the case of a single man, of another $1,000; which would mean, probably, an income of $8,500. No jurisdiction has a higher maximum at the present time.

As for my good friend from Cochrane South, he made a different point concerning the burial expenses. The increase from $400 to $500 didn't appear to him to be quite satisfactory. It's certainly not extravagant, but what most people forget is that in the case of a fatal accident there is immediately, with no questions asked, a payment of $500 to the family, which is over and above this $500 for burial expenses. But to top it all, last night I heard the leader of the NDP calling this bill a pittance, if my memory serves me well. Mr. Speaker, $12,428,000 of additional benefits over a period of 10 years is not a pittance. The spending of approximately $188 million a year in benefits to our workmen is not a pittance.

When I look across the floor at the members of the NDP caucus; his members individually are all my friends. When I look at them collectively and I ask myself the question: "What is their contribution to the workmen's compensation fund?" I am afraid that the answer will be: "Nil, very little, perhaps not one token." But they are the people who last night—I am talking about members of the NDP caucus who criticized this bill so harshly last night.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): That is irrelevant.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: It's all right, I am talking about members.

Mr. Reid: He's just catching on from members there.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: But in any event they are the people who were trying to tell the minister responsible last night what to do, how much to give. It is always the same thing. Those who do not contribute will ask you for more. Give, give, give!

The minister would be happy, Mr. Speaker, to give more if he had the money available. To illustrate his point, the leader of the NDP last night used a comparison which was fallacious. He was trying to compare the plight of the injured workman with the fee of the arbitrator who was appointed to arbitrate a Hydro case, a fee of $500 a day. Of course I agree that $500 a day for an arbitrator is exorbitant, but what he forgot to tell the members of this Legislature is that the arbitrator was not appointed by the government, was not appointed by the Minister of Labour, but was agreed upon by the two parties. I imagine he has set his own terms and conditions, which were high—$500 a day. But who knows, perhaps he didn't want to do this job; perhaps he didn't want to arbitrate and thought that by asking $500 a day they would turn him down, but he was accepted.

In any event, the point here and the inference that the member was making is that the government would set a fee of $500 for an arbitrator, which we have never done. As a matter of fact, the only arbitrator appointed by the Minister of Labour is under the Hospital Disputes Arbitration Act and the fees are set there at $150 a day for the first day and then $125 subsequently.

It is not the first time my hon. friend has posed as a demagogue. I can so vividly recall that in the month of November of last year, on the very steps of this Legislature, when the Minister of Labour had to meet a group of protesters as a result of a demonstration by injured workmen—organized by, I don't know who it was, but by the tone of their speeches some of the young people seemed to me not to be with the same philosophy; they could have been Marxists for all I know, Trotskyites, communists, I don't know. On this very occasion the two leaders opposite had to make speeches and so did the Minister of Labour, who admittedly was pushed around a bit—nothing new for him and he doesn't mind it so much. But on this particular occasion the two leaders opposite had to make speeches, and I have to give credit here to the Leader of the Official Opposition who was very responsible.

Mr. Reid: Always is!

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Sure, he did criticize the Minister of Labour—that is his job—but in a responsible fashion; not trying to work on the miseries and the hardships and the sufferings of the working people in front of this Legislature.

But when it came the turn of the leader of the NDP it was a different story. With his arms right in the air—you would think that he was a real Frenchman—and I'll never forget his words, and his attitude in front of this House: "This minister will not do a thing for you." Those were his words.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister did something for them. Because on that occasion my heart really was bleeding; not for the organizers of the demonstration, but for the poor injured workmen on crutches on a cold day. Those injured workmen had been dragged here probably on crutches, with sore backs; some of them were amputees as well.

My heart was breaking for them, and was aching for them.

So I made no promises then, because I don't work under pressure. Perhaps I should warn my friends opposite, I don't overact. I don't work under pressure. But at that time I'd made up my mind; anything I can possibly do for the injured workmen of Ontario I sure will. And we did it with this bill to the extent it was possible to do at this point in time.

This is why, the hon. leader of the NDP doesn't like it. That is what he doesn't like about the Minister of Labour; because the Minister of Labour has a deep, deep concern for the people of this province, for the little people, and the people who need the assistance of government.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I find it strange, to say the least, that no member has referred to subsection 5 of section 5 of the bill, dealing with the Statutory Powers Procedure Act. Under this section the decisions of the board will not be subject to appeals in court.

Perhaps the members don't know, but I fought hard to get this section in the bill. I fought a long time. Who was I fighting for? For the injured workmen. Not for the big corporations, I can assure you that. For the injured workman who cannot afford to be dragged in courts for two years; who cannot wait two years before getting his award. I fought hard for them.

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): Who did the minister fight against?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Well, against different people of course.

Mr. Bounsall: The cabinet?

Mr. Reid: All in the cabinet.

Mr. Germa: Tell us who.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: And the labour federation does know it; the members opposite do know it.

As a matter of fact, even the local papers have labelled the Minister of Labour as a tame politician. Tame politicians don't make too many mistakes. But no member in the opposition last night would even give the minister credit for placing this section in the bill.

But it's quite all right, all Ministers of Labour know they have to be kind of lone wolves.

Mr. Reid: It would have been a travesty not to have it in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: They have to fight against both sides. But they all carry with them the recompense and the reward of their concern, their dedication and untiring efforts on behalf of labour and management of our country and of our province.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is for second reading of Bill 126. Shall the motion carry?

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the bill be ordered for third reading?

An hon. member: No, committee.

Mr. Speaker: Committee of the whole House.

Agreed.

Clerk of the House: The second order, House in committee of the whole House; Mr. R. D. Rowe in the chair.

MINISTRY OF EDUCATION ACT (concluded)

House in committee on Bill 113, An Act to amend the Ministry of Education Act.

Mr. Chairman: Bill 113, An Act to amend the Ministry of Education Act.

We had completed a study of this bill except for one amendment, which we were waiting for from the minister.

The hon. minister.

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): Mr. Chairman, the education critics of the other two parties, I understand, are downstairs in the estimates of the Ministry of Colleges and Universities. They were going to come back up.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York Youth): I can speak on behalf of my colleague, the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds). He was satisfied the amendment is meeting the point that apparently had been raised in the earlier debate so as far as we're concerned, we have nothing further to add.

Mr. Chairman: If the minister would care to place the amendment?

Hon. Mr. Wells moves that subsection (2) of section 3 of the bill be amended by striking out subsections (6) and (7) and by renumbering subsection (8) as subsection (6).

No. 2. That the bill be amended by renumbering sections 3, 4 and 5 as sections 4, 5 and 6; and by adding thereto a new section 3 as follows: Section 3 subsection (1) of section 10 of the said Act, as amended by the Statutes of Ontario, 1972, chapter 73, section 3, is further amended by adding thereto the following clause: Item (p) make payments out of funds appropriated therefor by the Legislature to a board, an individual, a voluntary association or a corporation without share capital having objects of a charitable or educational nature.

Subsection (1) to assist or advance programmes, activities, or projects for students that involve a cultural and educational exchange with other provinces and countries, provincial or interprovincial travel, school twinning and related assistance, leadership training or summer employment.

Subsection (2), to foster and promote educational advancement by means of programmes, activities or projects that are provided for visiting educational officials designed to further the professional development of teachers and supervisory officers, including exchange of such personnel, as are considered by the minister to be valuable and advancing a particular area of study; and, subject to the terms and conditions that are approved for such purpose by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, make an accountable advance to the recipient of a payment under this clause or to an individual not being a member of the public service who conducts or assists in conducting or participates in any such programme, activity or project.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Could I have that again, please?

Mr. Chairman: Shall the minister's motion carry?

Agreed.

Shall this bill then, as amended, be reported?

Bill 113, as amended, reported.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT

House in committee on Bill 126, an Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Mr. Chairman: Bill 126, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act.

We might just clarify where we'll start. There are eight sections to the bill. Are there any comments, questions or amendments in any of the first four sections?

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): Yes.

Mr. Chairman: And if so, which section?

Mr. Bounsall: I have one on 1(1)(c).

Mr. Chairman: Section 1(1)(c). Is there anything before 1(1)(c)?

Mr. Reid: No, go ahead.

Mr. Chairman: All right. The member for Windsor West then on 1(1)(c).

Mr. Bounsall: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I have an amendment that I'd like to place at this time. I would move that section 1(1)(c) be amended. Because the same change occurs in other clauses, I will indicate also the other amendments. I do that, asking the committee to consider another discussion of section 1(1)(d) when we get to it.

Mr. Bounsall moves that sections 1(1)(c), 1(1)(d), 1(2)(a) and 1(2)(b) be amended by replacing the words "an invalid husband" with the word "widower", and replacing the word "$250" with "$425 adjusted semi-annually in accordance with the percentage increase in salaries and wages in Ontario".

Mr. Chairman: Does the member have any comments?

Mr. Bounsall: Yes. On this, I was interested to hear that the minister seriously considered replacing "an invalid husband" with "widower". I find it a little difficult to understand why he didn't carry on and make this amendment.

His reason appeared to be that the task force and the Human Rights Commission would be reporting in the near future. He implied—at least I took the inference—that this would be one of the things he expected them to report. Therefore, why does the minister not, for once, lead in terms of legislation in this province; why does he not make this change now?

If that is not a thing which they recommend, or they note in their report that they were about to recommend it but it became unnecessary because the Minister of Labour had made that prior change, that would've been a real accolade for the Minister of Labour. Why has the Minister of Labour failed—with that background, with that implication he made to the rest of the House, that inference that I, at least, have drawn from what the minister said?

Why doesn't he carry on and make that change now, particularly as the minister has admitted, and I also suspected that this would not in the course of any given year be affecting more than a handful of people in the Province of Ontario?

However, what is important about it is the principle, the principle being that a wife is recognized as making a contribution to the family whether she works or not. In this case, a wife would be recognized as making a contribution to the family, particularly if she is working. That is the principle if we are looking at the situation, the position and the rights of women in our society today.

People in the women's bureau and people in the minister's Human Rights Commission must certainly be telling him that on those occasions when he talks with them.

A phrase like this should not be allowed, in principle, to exist in a bill. It would be so easy to change it now. Will the minister not take the lead in doing so?

It's important in principle to recognize that women do have a contribution to make to the family, particularly when they are working. But not to change it, even though there's only two to four involved in a given year, as the minister said, means that your view of women in this society, particularly those who are working, has not changed from when this legislation was initially written.

The ministry officials are still back with the 1915 concept of women. It is the due of the women in this Province of Ontario that this section be changed. Do it now. Don't avoid it for fear of being a little bit ahead of the task force investigating and making recommendations on the Human Rights Commission.

In the second part of the amendment I am changing the monthly payment in each of these sections where it occurs from $250 to $425. I mention, with respect to the $250, Mr. Chairman, that that is the figure that can be arrived at by taking a 40-hour week, times the minimum wage in this province of $1.80, times 75 per cent of it. This is what, within a penny or two, $250 in these clauses calculates to be.

What I am saying with respect to that is, that I don't agree with two aspects of it: Neither the 75 per cent of it, nor do I agree that the calculations should be based upon a minimum wage in this province of $1.80.

The minimum wage has just been increased to $1.80, that is early this year. Just prior to the announcement of that I spoke at some length in this House as to why $1.80 was not an acceptable minimum wage in the Province of Ontario in this day and age. I suggested at that time that a more reasonable minimum wage of $2.50, with regular adjustments to occur according to the percentage increases in salaries and wages that occur, adjusted semi-annually for those increases in salaries and wages, would be a much more appropriate minimum wage in this province.

Therefore the figure of $425 is taking $2.50 as an hourly minimum rate, times the 40, times 100 per cent, and with 4.3 weeks to the month I'm really shading it a little bit by putting $425 rather than $430—4.3 being the accepted number within the Province of Ontario agencies for the number of weeks in a given month.

On the minimum wage, Mr. Chairman, and in its use as a calculation for the amount of monthly payment here, it's interesting to note that that minimum wage is now 45 per cent of the average wage in the Province of Ontario, that average being determined by including those people who are on the minimum wage.

I do not think this Legislature or this government should be proud of having a minimum wage which is less than half of what average salaries and wages are in the province when one includes those people working at the minimum wage. If you exclude those people working at the minimum wage from the average one would find that the minimum wage would be less than 40 per cent. At $2.50 an hour as a suggested minimum wage, one would find that the minimum wage would be 62.5 per cent of the average in this province.

I can't see this Conservative government, with their attitude towards labour and wages in this province, thinking that 62.5 per cent would be an acceptable level for the minimum wage vis-à-vis the average in this province.

But yet again, if you took those people on the minimum wage receiving $2.50 out of the calculation of the average, you would find that minimum wage of $2.50 would work out to just slightly over 50 per cent of the average hourly wage in this province. And I suggest, therefore, that is the proper level of minimum wage to have here and now in this province.

And with that in mind, the figure of $425 is the proper amount to have in these sections to be paid to the widow—and hopefully the widower—of a person who has been killed at their place of employment in this province.

My amendment also includes, Mr. Chairman, that this $425 figure be adjusted semi-annually in accordance with the per cent increase in salaries and wages that do occur in the Province of Ontario.

We heard last night, and it is well known to the members in this House, that the Province of British Columbia has already incorporated into the Workmen's Compensation Act of British Columbia a cost-of-living escalator clause. This should be done in this province which prides itself on having—at least the Minister of Labour prides himself on having—supposedly the best Workmen's Compensation Act in the western hemisphere.

There is one small section, Mr. Minister, one involving an automatic increase, that means Ontario is not the best in the western hemisphere. The minister can say: "Well, their hourly rates, their hourly payments, aren't as high as ours." The minister can say that, but I would suspect that those hourly rates will be increased; they can be increased easily. And that escalator cost-of-living clause will still be in that British Columbia bill at that time when those figures are changed. And Ontario will not have an escalator clause, a cost-of-living clause; or what I suggested, an adjustment made in accordance with the increase in salaries and wages that occur in this province.

There are only two areas, Mr. Chairman, where the government should reasonably accept increases in salaries and wages rather than cost of living as the basis on which an escalator clause could be calculated. One is in the calculation of minimum wage increases, and that has been the practice that has been followed over the past 10 years. What is basically wrong with the minimum wage is that it started at far too low a level—a dollar in 1963. So that pitiful dollar level has been adjusted according to the per cent increase in salaries and wages, but the base was far too low.

The other area is precisely the area of Workmen's Compensation pensions, where you are paying a pension to a man or a woman deprived of their livelihood by an accident that occurs at their work place. Those pensions should be increased by the per cent increase in salaries and wages that occur in this province, which over the past 10 years has been roughly doubled, the cost of living increases that has occurred. Irrespective of all other discussions we might have of benefits that should have an escalator clause in them, it is very obvious that these two areas, both with respect to wages, are ones that should have have that type of escalator clause in them.

If it is allowed—and I think it should be, Mr. Chairman—I will be making a further amendment to 1(1)(d), but because it carries on with other sections that can't be mentioned with respect to this amendment, I will save my comments for that appropriate time.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, we rise to support the amendments as offered by the member for Windsor West. We feel there is really not much sense in offering any amendments because we dealt with this minister before, and we know that once he has made up his mind on something, or he is handed a bill, he goes ahead with it as it is laid down for him and there is no deviation from that.

If anyone is in doubt of that, they might recall the bill on the elevator strike in which this party offered some well-reasoned, well-thought-out amendments; and if I recall correctly the minister paid no heed to them at all. He had the bill in front of him and he was going to get the job done.

We too, are planning perhaps on amending the bill in regard to the escalator clause. I am not so sure the minister's defence of not having an escalator clause on the fixed disability pension isn't somewhat specious. To say nothing of that fact that he doesn't really give us any idea as to what the cost would be.

If we take the 22,000 people that the minister suggested will be affected by the bill in front of us presently, and there is a five per cent increase in the cost of living per year—let's just take that as an average—the way I have worked that out that comes to $1,100 per month or $12,200 per year. That really is an insignificant amount and could be borne rather easily, I would think, by the companies involved.

I would suggest to the minister that when he balances that with the fact that he is going to maintain the standard and quality of living by people who have to maintain themselves on a fixed pension, then surely he should give this escalator clause, cost-of-living increase serious consideration. It really doesn't cost that much yet the benefits to be derived from it are infinitely great in relation to the people who are stuck on fixed pensions.

As the minister's federal leader is fond of pointing out, governments themselves in large measure, both provincial and federal—and municipal I suppose—are one of the greatest contributors to inflation in this country and in this province, and perhaps this would be some small way of recompensing those people who find themselves in these circumstances.

In regard, Mr. Chairman, to the case of subsection (c) of subsection (1) of clause 1, where the widow or an invalid husband is the sole dependent—a monthly payment of $250—it is interesting to hear the minister say that he has a task force looking into these matters. However, one must really wonder if we should not be consistent and fair and equitable and amend the bill immediately so this applies to both the male and female side evenly.

One would also wonder, perhaps, Mr. Chairman, if one might ask the minister about the philosophy behind such payments in regard to the survivor in the family of an industrial accident. One would ask, for instance, is the payment supposed to be one monetary payment for the loss of a breadwinner in the family? Or is it to be compensation for the loss of that persons to the family? Just what is the rationale for providing the payment?

I wonder, if the minister would think for instance that the payments should be in relation to the breadwinner of the family, I suppose, under the most dire of circumstances both the father and mother—or wife and husband—could be killed in different accidents under different circumstances. Surely the minister would agree that it's only just, right and equitable that the survivor, the husband, the male member of the household, should be treated the same way as the female and vice versa in these matters.

Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, that is sufficient for now. As I say, we would like to amend the bill but I believe we are speaking on the amendments of the hon. member for Windsor West. Perhaps we could have the minister's comments.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Mr. Chairman, I'd like to add a few words to the amendment. Too often I find that the survivor's benefit is rather low in many cases, not only with the Workmen's Compensation but in many other cases in the Province of Ontario. I know the minister is concerned about this particular matter. He says he is worried about the cost involved, that perhaps it would cost an extra $12 million or $20 million a year.

After all, when you look at our gross national product, particularly in the Province of Ontario, I think we can well afford to look after those persons who have lost their bread-winners, and look after the survivors. I have often attended the Workmen's Compensation Board and in their assessment of a person who is disabled, if they find out that the injured worker's wife is working, this is taken into consideration and his benefits are then reduced.

In a sense you are working it both ways for the benefit of the Workmen's Compensation, with very little sensibility. I am concerned about the person who has to live off the benefits from Workmen's Compensation.

On the matter of the escalator clause, I don't know whether or not the minister reads any of these submissions but this is to the government of Ontario, 1973, to the Ontario legislative committee from the International Railroad Brotherhoods, Toronto. I believe I have seen in their reports for a number of years now that they have had this recommendation, which says: "We request legislation to implement an escalator clause in accordance with the minimum wage law, and adjusted semi-annually."

I'm sure if the minister would listen to their plea he would give consideration to this amendment.

The other matter I should perhaps talk about is that in the case of a survivor, there is no consideration given to any of the contingencies that occur after an accident or a death in the family. An amount of $250 a month is peanuts, in a sense, to live on today, even for a single person. There is nothing in there that says we are going to pay for the OHIP premiums that usually are paid for by a company through the bargaining process. Mortgage payments are not taken into consideration. There is nothing in consideration of loans on home furnishings and other matters of concern to the survivor.

I don't think the minister has seriously given consideration to this. When he brings in $250 I just can't go along with his view that this is the best we can do. I think you can do a lot better if you want to for the workers of the Province of Ontario; after all, these are the persons who bring in the tax dollars of this province.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Cochrane South.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): I think, Mr. Chairman, that when we put the figure at $250 for a widow what we are really doing is we are confining that widow to live in poverty for the rest of her life, with not much opportunity of ever getting out of that strata to the standard of living.

The husband can be out working and making a very good wage. When he is killed in an accident, unless he is different from most people today, he will have a number of commitments and probably owe a number of payments and this kind of thing. Some of them might be covered by insurance, but there will be a considerable number that won't. It will be extremely difficult for this woman to make much of a life, to make any major changes in the home that they may have and to buy some things that they really have to have, but like so many of us have put off for a while.

If a man has been making $7,000 or $8,000 or $9,000 and then his widow is suddenly brought down to live with $2,500 or $3,000 a year it is a terrific drop. Granted there may be some children and this will raise it up a little bit; nonetheless, it seems to me that it's far too low.

We sometimes get caught up in this whole scheme of trying to find a few more dollars here and there, and if we find them we think that this solves the problem. I think that this is too little. For the minister to get up and say none of us in this party are employers and therefore we are completely oblivious in terms of what employers should be contributing is irresponsible.

Some of us in the professions we were in were giving some employers pretty good guidance. Had they accepted the admonitions that we gave them, they would be living better lives and carrying on their businesses in the proper way and it would have strengthened the whole fabric of life in this province. So I don't think his argument in that regard has very much cogency. In our economy today, where the value of the dollar is going down and where the cost of living is rising and where it is costing more and more to buy the basic things of life, it's only right and just that there be an escalator clause in this legislation and that these pensions rise, as my friend from Windsor West has suggested.

If I recall correctly, when Mr. Turner brought in his federal budget and tied the cost of the old age supplement, or the pension to a cost-of-living clause, Bob Stanfield got on the TV and said: "He's just stealing our ideas. We're glad that he is, but he is just using our ideas."

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): A really good Tory for you.

Mr. Ferrier: I would think that the minister would feel that Bob Stanfield is a great guy and he's got great ideas. The minister doesn't have to step aside or compromise his principles in any way in going along with this escalator clause. He's the pioneer that opened the path for the minister and all he's got to do is walk along in it.

I would say, just arguing on the basis of the principles that your federal leader has laid down, that it would be no difficulty at all for you to incorporate that.

I don't know about other people, but you say where do we get the money. Right now, in many cases, it has to come from the public purse anyway. Maybe in some sections it will not only be from industry but from somebody else, that part of the funding of this would have to be found.

As I say, I think that the suggestions that my colleague from Windsor West has put forward here by way of amendment give the widow a little bit of a break and do not confine her to live at poverty levels for all the rest of her life.

It's bad enough losing a husband and all the adjustments that that makes and the great difficulty it brings into a person's life, with the sadness and the sorrow and the bereavement and all the rest of it. I don't think we should have to push her down. I think we should give the widow much more generous treatment than has been given heretofore and that you have put forward in your bill here today.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Chairman, the members opposite have raised a number of points which are quite interesting, and which I suppose some day could be looked into or could be implemented in legislation, especially insofar as the widow's pension is concerned, or what I call it here, the widower's pension for women working in industries.

It is a fact that the task force is presently preparing a report for my attention, and I am of the opinion that if we were to implement this now it would more or less preempt or prejudice the decision of the task force. This may have very far reaching effects.

When we talk about pensions and benefits to women the Minister of Labour would be the last one to discriminate. I think he showed it quite plainly last year by amending the Ontario Human Rights Code and adding a section on marital status to the Code, which was a great step forward—

Mr. Bounsall: But you have got to keep the faith all of the time, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Exactly. On that occasion, I would say to my hon. friend from Windsor West, I did get an accolade or two, but if we were to proceed too fast I may be getting a kick in the pants, too. So for the time being, as I say, I am considering it very seriously. Had the report been made available to me before today, had it recommended it, I see no objection why I wouldn't have accepted your amendment; but perhaps the next time.

Mr. Reid: Don't be afraid to think.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Now the member for Windsor West spent quite some time talking about the minimum wage. Of course, the whole theory of the minimum wage is simply to protect the exploitation of employees. This is not something that I would recommend or that we would recommend to employers. Far from it. But there are areas, particularly service industries, private businesses—and they employ over 50 per cent of our work force in this province—where they could not afford at time to pay over the minimum wage, which was set several months ago and which is again being reviewed by our ministry.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: A couple of months ago I visited with the Department of Labour in London, England. I had long chats with representatives of the ministry over there and I was amazed to find out that they don't even have a minimum wage in England. I was; really! I just couldn't believe it. I had to ask the question four or five times, because as I recall they had a socialist government for six years. And they still don't have a minimum wage.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): You know why though. They are 98 per cent organized, that's why.

Mr. Bounsall: They are decent human beings over there. I have lived there.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: I found out that the median wage over in Britain, in London—I saw the paper in the morning—was roughly $2,800 a year.

Mr. Bounsall: And how does that compare with the average wage?

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa East): It is $200 a year in India. What does that mean? That is an irrelevant comment.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: On the minimum wage here you would be getting about $3,700 a year. And the cost of living is really comparable, there wasn't that much difference.

That doesn't mean that I am in favour of keeping minimum wages as low as I can. Far from it. It is strictly a minimum, strictly a thing that we do not encourage—

Mr. Cassidy: And it is not a living wage in this country.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: —but we have to live with at times; and then, of course, it is being reviewed all the time.

Now I did not say to my good friend from Cochrane South that the NDP members were irresponsible. You didn't quote me. I didn't say that. I just said that in their speeches some of them last night were certainly trying to dictate and say: "This is what you should do," not that they are irresponsible. I would never say that against so many good friends. I think the point that is being missed at times, and I think I should quote here Mr. Justice Roach, and he puts it so clearly, the whole thing of compensation and the Compensation Act, for instance:

It should be considered for what it is and was originally intended to be, namely a scheme by which compensation is provided in respect of injuries to workmen in industry. It is not a system for dispensing charity. It is not unemployment insurance. It is not social legislation for the purpose of elevating the standards of one group in society at the expense of another.

I think this is very welcome. This is what it is.

Mr. Bounsall: It is pretty obvious. No disagreement there.

Mr. Haggerty: We all agree with that principle.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: All right. If you want to talk about guaranteed annual income, that's a different story. But when you are talking about compensation, it is a right for the workman to get paid for his injuries.

Mr. Haggerty: Don't send them to welfare.

Mr. Bounsall: Pay him at such a level that he can exist.

Mr. Chairman: Order please. The members have had an opportunity to speak.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Perhaps some day they may devise other plans through the guaranteed annual income; but it might be different. I only hope, as Minister of Labour, that we could afford to pay and give more to our injured workmen. We are all for motherhood.

The figures we have set out here, of course, are actuarially sound because every time you pay into a pension, the money is set aside. It is amortized. That's the reason we cannot force future employers to contribute to it. The money is set aside at the time.

In other words, even though I would like to bring this amendment at this time, I might say that it is, perhaps, just for a matter of months.

Mr. Chairman: Are we ready for the question?

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Chairman, I have a point of clarification, for some information. Could the minister inform me whether or not golf courses and racetracks come under this programme in the Workmen's Compensation Act? If not, why not?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: No. I don't think I would know whether they are. Yes, they do; I am told by my official that they do come under it. I mean, they are covered by compensation, if that is what you mean.

Mr. Haggerty: Are you sure?

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Race horses and hobby farms are out.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: I'll get a nod, yes or no.

Mr. Haggerty: I mean employees at racetracks and employees of golf courses in the Province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: No. I am informed that they are not covered. It is the same as the white collar workers, as a matter of fact, they are not covered yet.

Mr. Haggerty: What is the reason for not having them included under the Workmen's Compensation? Racetrack business in the Province of Ontario is one of the biggest industries, too, you know; the same as golf courses today. At one time years ago there might have been one golf course in a range of 30 miles, but now there are two or three in each municipality. I think the employees should have some protection. There are hazards and dangers working under those conditions.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I finally got the answer. It is optional. If they want to be covered they can, but they don't have to.

While you are talking on this point, it came up during the federal-provincial conference. I note that in the Province of Quebec, for instance, people working in banks are covered by compensation. They are not in Ontario so far, but what I contemplate some day is that perhaps instead of covering different segments we will do it on the one shot.

Mr. Chairman: Are you ready for the question, then? The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Yes. I'd like to ask the minister: I understand that the calculated increase in cost for this change in this first section would move it from $175 million to $183 million?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: For the first year? You mean the increase in benefits?

Mr. Gisborn: No, the increase in the cost.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Benefits paid by the Compensation Board will be increased, of course, by $12,428,000. That is what it is going to cost with the amendments that we have made.

Mr. Gisborn: Per year?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: In a full year.

Mr. Gisborn: Does this mean there will be an increase per capita payroll for the employers?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Definitely. Where else can the money come from?

Mr. Gisborn: I am asking if you have that kind of a surplus anticipated. If there is going to be an automatic increase this year to coincide with the payment in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes; the increase in assessment would be roughly 7.8 per cent.

Mr. Gisborn: About 7.8 per cent. That's the point I wanted to get at. I take it that I am correct in assuming that the Compensation Board's report for the last fiscal year shows that there has been no substantial decrease in the number of claims, which indicates that—

Mr. Reid: Ten thousand more claims!

Mr. Gisborn: Which indicates to me the accident prevention association has not been doing the kind of job that is expected, even on their own admittance in their criticism of the industries that there are too many accidents. I would think if you want to give them some incentive to do a tougher job, to decrease the accident rate, then the increase in these benefits and the increased capital cost to them might give them the incentive, more so than having accident prevention conventions, where it seems to me they still continue the old line of exhibiting and selling safety equipment.

It doesn't really do the job. I would think that you could accept this amendment for another three or four per cent increase in the cost, maybe $5.5 million to $6 million for a 25 per cent increase in the benefits. That may provide more incentive to the industries to do a better job in decreasing the number of accidents.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Of course, Mr. Chairman, the occurrence and the number of accidents, you know, is not due to just the one cause. I mean there is always an increase in population as well, which could have a bearing on this; but as you know we are very conscious of our accident prevention programmes.

As long as I'm Minister of Labour I will, as a matter of fact, be tougher. There is a bill coming next to this one which shows it, insofar as the construction industry is concerned. We would like to do a better job so far as industrial accidents are concerned as well.

Mr. Gisborn: A little bit of disappointment in that Act though.

Mr. Chairman: Ready for the question then?

Mr. Young: One question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Young: I'd like to ask the minister, in connection with the golf and country clubs that are not covered, does this mean the whole operation of golf and country clubs is not covered by compensation, the interior as well as the exterior workers? Because it has just come to my attention recently and I haven't had a chance to check it through yet, where claim for compensation was turned down, of course, because the club was not covered by compensation. This information was given to the gentleman and it came to me through the information service of the government. I have not been able to reach him by phone because it was just a day or two ago.

Does this mean, then, that all employees of a golf and country club are excluded unless the club itself voluntarily comes under the Act?

And on what philosophy is this based?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Well the golf clubs can be covered if they want it, as I see it. As I understand it, at this very moment if they do not apply, don't pay their contribution, well they are not covered.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, I would say so.

Mr. Young: There are some?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes.

Mr. Young: And the minister hasn't any number, then, in proportion of the total number of clubs?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: I have no figures here, unfortunately Mr. Chairman, but I will give you the details.

Mr. Chairman: It really doesn't pertain to this particular matter.

Mr. Ferrier: Could I just ask a question then?

In a situation such as this where workers aren't covered, can they sue for negligence against an employer if an accident happens; to show liability on the part of the employer if necessary?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, I would say that an employee can sue the employer when he is not covered by compensation. He can go to the civil court.

Mr. Chairman: Ready for the question then?

Those in favour of Mr. Bounsall's motion will please say "aye".

Those opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Shall we stack this with any possible future ones?

All right. Any further comments, questions or amendments?

Mr. Reid: Yes, on section I, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Section I. Shall we take this one?

Mr. Bounsall: Section I(d).

Mr. Reid: I thought we were taking them all at once.

Mr. Chairman: Well no, there are other discussions on section I.

Mr. Bounsall: I have another amendment on section I(d), Mr. Chairman. Again, on doing it in section I(d), in order that it be consistent throughout there will be another section to which I will refer.

Mr. Bounsall moves that section I(1)(d) and I(1)(e) be amended by replacing $70 and $80, where these figures occur, by "$90 adjusted semi-annually in accordance with the per cent increase in salaries and wages in Ontario"; and add, after "16 years," the phrase "or in full-time attendance at school, college or university."

Mr. Bounsall: Yes, Mr. Chairman. In saying just a few, brief words on this amendment, it strikes me that the change from the $70 and $80, where they occur, to $90 is a reasonable figure now—the proper base for a child for a month; although my perception is that the $90 figure is a really base figure. That is the minimum that we can say most children cost a family per month.

I cannot, in this instance, give a reasoned, detailed explanation as to why it should be $90, as I previously did for the $425 in the previous amendment as the monthly payment for a widow or widower. This is more a gut feeling and a perception of what it costs a family today to house, clothe, feed and entertain a child. Therefore I am suggesting the $90, but again to be adjusted by an escalator clause in accordance with the increase in salaries and wages in Ontario.

The second part is self-evident, as far as I can see. Right at this very moment in the estimates of Colleges and Universities in committee room No. 1, you hear, in terms of the student awards programme, the students grant loan programme, that every person who has a parent or parents under the age of 24 is considered to be—

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Parents under the age of 24?

Mr. Bounsall: Any person under the age of 24 who has a parent or parents!

Mr. Reid: Hopefully everybody has.

Mr. Bounsall: We'll get it straight yet!

They are considered to be fully dependent on those parents and therefore not eligible at all for a major portion of the grant-loan. There is a provision in this Act for payment for children up to the age of 16; but many children are in secondary school beyond the age of 16. Thereafter, in spite of the disadvantage of having had one of their parents killed and not around to provide support and a balanced home life for them, those children who have found their way to college and university are told that in the calculation of any grant loan under the Ontario student awards programme, that they are considered to be receiving great support or help from that parent.

I don't know how I can further elaborate on this. I don't want to use adjectives which would injure the minister with respect to not having put this type of provision in. He seems to be very fragile these days about whether or not he gets his accolades for things, so I won't lay a heavy on him on this, except to say that this to me is so obvious. If the minister hasn't had time to think of it, think of it now and consider very seriously at least making this addition which supports children of compensation workers who have been killed as these youngsters thereafter go on in full-time attendance to finish their secondary schooling or go to an institute of post-secondary education.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, again we feel this is a futile exercise with the minister but we will support the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. minister?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Chairman, very briefly; in the case of children under the age of 16 as set out in the legislation, I think subsection (4) of section 36 states this quite clearly—and I know that the board does extend pension after 16 years of age up to the Bachelor of Arts degree.

The section says here:

Where in the opinion of the board the furnishing of further or better education to a child appears advisable, the board in its discretion may, on application, extend the period for which compensation shall be paid in respect of the child for such additional period as is spent by the child in the furthering or bettering of his education.

So it is covered there and I know for a fact the board does pay up to the BA level.

There is nothing magic about the figure $90. I don't know why my hon. friend did not suggest $110, for instance. It is just a question of assessing the employers and finding more money to contribute. If you start changing the figures set out in the bill you put this bill out of kilter because the minister has to find funds for it.

Mr. Chairman: Ready for the question?

Mr. Gisborn: I want to ask the minister does he know or can he find out how many applications have been made for the extended payment to children?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: No, I can't tell you how many off the top of my head, but I would think several. I will get the exact number that were paid in the last fiscal year.

Mr. Gisborn: That is a very important point, because that being in the Act—it has been noticed before; I think the emphasis had to be put on it by the member moving the amendment—but I dare say there are very few widows with children as dependents who are aware of that section. I would like to know the figures and how it applies. If the figures do look reasonable enough to fit the statistics on education, then there needs to be a job done in regard to widows taking advantage of this section.

Mr. Bounsall: Just another question of the minister in this respect. He has promised to give us the numbers that have qualified under the provision he read out where the Workmen's Compensation Board "uses their discretion" and "if the circumstances are correct" and the whole bit; which implies that it isn't very automatic. Does the minister know of any applications that have come in requesting funds for continuing education in which the Workmen's Compensation Board has said "No" for some reason? And if there has been one over the years, then this is a very necessary amendment.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Chairman, I have been in the office of Minister of Labour for about 15 months now. I didn't get one claim so far—not one to my knowledge—that came to my attention.

Of course, these claims will go to the Workmen's Compensation Board, but I would think that if they did not get proper attention they would zero in—they always write to the minister. I didn't get any letters.

Mr. Bounsall: Well, why would the minister think this shouldn't be anything more than automatic? If the parent or the child in question can provide proof of his attending and getting post-secondary education, or after the age of 16 completing secondary school, why should the board have to even concern themselves by going through the paper work and making a judgement on the matter?

Why can't the minister see that this part of the Act should be made automatic, or use the amendment I proposed to see that it becomes automatic? I can't see any reason why it shouldn't be. If the child is not in attendance—starts and does not continue—there are provisions in the Act that take care of that situation. But the decision to pay him, to extend the benefits, should in these circumstances be automatic. Surely the board shouldn't have to be discretionary in the matter.

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, could I say a couple of words on this?

I think we have created here a third category in society. Under certain legislation the parent or guardian is responsible for a child up until the age of majority, which apparently now is 18. Yet for Compensation Board purposes I think you have indicated here that the age between 16 and 18 is sort of a no man's land. I think there has to be some uniformity in relation to other legislation that we function by.

If you are not going to go with the person while in full-time attendance at school, the least you could consider is bringing this responsibility of the board up to that point in time when the child reaches the age of majority, which is 18. That is the least that you could go for, because only then will the thing make any sense at all.

Right now you are putting a child in limbo from age 16 to age 18. He has not reached the age of majority, and yet the Compensation Board absolves itself of responsibility. It falls back on the guardian, who in turn falls back on the Compensation Board. So maybe you would like to tell me just where does this person go between the ages of 16 and 18?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Chairman, I have to tell the hon. member for Sudbury that I think it is a good point; one that deserves my attention, and which I will take up with the board. Now you are referring of course to the age between 16 and 18. As was stated in this clause, section 36, those attending university can be considered for further benefits. But I think the point he has raised is one that I would like to discuss with the board as soon as possible.

Mr. Chairman: Ready for the question then?

Those in favour of Mr. Bounsall's motion will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

We'll stack this one along with the others. Which number now?

Mr. Bounsall: I am on section 1(2)(b).

Mr. Chairman: And the hon. member for Rainy River, where are you?

Mr. Reid: No, I'm going to be on subsection 4.

Mr. Chairman: Okay, section 1(2)(b).

Mr. Bounsall: Again I have another motion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Bounsall moves that section 1(2)(b) and 1(2)(c) be amended by striking out the words "not exceeding in the whole $460," and replacing the figures $70 and $80 where these figures occur by the figure $90, adjusted semi-annually in accordance with the percentage increase in salaries and wages in Ontario.

Mr. Chairman: I presume with the same explanation.

Mr. Reid: The same debate?

Mr. Bounsall: Same debate? Yes, I won't run over the same debate on the $90 replacing the $70 and the $80 to be adjusted semi-annually. We have talked at length about escalator clauses, and my general perception that $90 is a more reasonable figure on which to base that escalator clause rather than the $70 and $80 mentioned here.

The other portion of it which has not been discussed is removing the $460 maximum amount. What this allows for, Mr. Chairman, is for a widow—and not a widower; he's got to be completely invalidated if he is male—to have three dependents only to arrive at the maximum of $460.

What does that mean per year? It means that a widow with three children, or a completely invalidated husband with three children, in spite of all the extra strains they have on their lives, and all the extra expenses they have by being a single parent, and all the help which they might need to pay for in order to meet that situation, in order to pay the extra costs which come on them from babysitting fees, whenever they decide to go out at all, with no one around to help them, when they have three children, that's the maximum. If they have four or five children; tough luck, it's still $460 a month. The yearly amount that this calculates out to, which is a figure which I think may be more understood, is $5,500 a year. That's one third of what it is recommended we in this Legislature should make.

I don't know how many members of this Legislature have three children or three dependents. I suspect many of us do. And how in heck could we live on $5,500 a year? And if any of us have more dependents than that, we know that we can't live on $5,500 a year.

We'll get the old argument now: Where are we going to get the funds? Well, I think that we have not been charging the people we get it from nearly enough in the past—not sufficient so that they have been all that concerned about safety in their work place. If we had been collecting at the rate we should have been collecting, which allows the payment of a decent level of pension, they would've been much more concerned about making their work place safe.

The minister knows from other reports he's had of companies arranging to avoid that section in the Industrial Safety Act which seemingly tells them that they cannot suspend or take disciplinary action against a worker who gets concerned about the safety of a particular job. There are instances all over this province where they have laid off a workman because he refused to work in a place that he felt to be unsafe.

I can give a detailed report I know under this bill, Mr. Minister, where they did suspend a workman because he refused to work on that job and put another one in. It was only a matter of days until an injury occurred to that replacement workman. If the proper charges were being made across this province and proper fees collected to pay decent pensions to workmen who are injured, then you wouldn't be getting that type of attitude from the corporate sector in this province.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Chairman, it's the same debate, of course; the same arguments.

It's a question of finding the money, there is no question about it. But you know, you also have to be reasonable. I am sure if we had set a figure of $560, my friend opposite would have asked for $650. According to the present time and conditions and as I say with the funds that are available, $460 as it is now for a person and three children is considered—

Mr. Bounsall: Could you live on it?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: I have lived on much less than that.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): How many years ago?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Well, some years ago, but it wasn't a question of $460, it was a question of $12 a week. I was single, but it was $30 a week with three children, and we managed.

Mr. Martel: Well, the rent wasn't $150 though.

Mr. Chairman: Ready for the question, then?

Those in favour of Mr. Bounsall's motion will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Mr. Chairman: Shall we stack this along with the others?

Stacked. All right.

The member for Rainy River.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Bounsall: I have one on 2(a).

Mr. Reid: I am on section 1. I am going to propose an amendment to put a new subsection in, Mr. Chairman. I would like to amend section 1 by adding a subsection (4) that reads: That the said full pension be increased automatically yearly at the end of the year by the same percentage as the increase in the federal cost-of-living index.

Mr. Martel: The member opposed that. I raised that question when the minister introduced the bill.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Reid moves that section 1 be amended by adding a new subsection (4): "That the said full pension be increased automatically yearly at the end of the year by the same percentage as the increase in the federal cost-of-living index."

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, we have already really had this debate on the escalator clause in the bill. The minister's response has been that it is a question of money. It is a fact that if you are getting a $100-a-month pension and you get, let us say a five per cent increase for the cost of living, you get $5, while if you are getting a $500 pension, you get $25. There is certainly inequality there. I am sure the minister has the resources within his own department and within the Treasury to figure out some kind of equitable scale so that those people on the bottom end will be compensated adequately for the increase in the cost of living.

I am sure, as I said, the minister would agree that those on fixed pensions are under a real hardship with inflation and the increases in cost of living today.

Their standard of living, which is low to begin with, is lowered by inflation. This amendment, or the spirit behind it, would go some distance in relieving that pressure, easing the standard of living and increasing or keeping equal the standard of living of these people at the lower end of the scale who have to live on what they are getting in the pension.

The minister has agreed that the pensions are low. It is a matter of money, he says at one point. I have already indicated that if we use the minister's 22,000 people as an effective figure, and let us say an average five per cent increase in the cost of living, even across the board for everyone it only comes to something like, I believe, $12,200 a year.

Maybe my figure is wrong. Mathematics was never my strong subject.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: That is why you did well in economics.

Mr. Reid: I am sorry. You are absolutely right; the figure is wrong. It would depend obviously on what they are getting. I was figuring it out at $5 a month which is obviously very low, but it might compensate someone for the increase in the cost of living.

I think it is an idea worth considering. I would ask the minister to do so, although I know he is not going to accept it, because he hasn't accepted anything we have put forward in the way of amendments.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reid: Please wait until I sit down before you get up and say: "Yes, I accept"; because I couldn't stand the shock. I wonder if the minister could indicate if this is a topic that is under discussion or review by his task force?

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I want to speak to this for a number of reasons.

First, I concur with it, when the minister introduced the bill, I questioned him on that occasion as to whether the department would consider some type of escalator clause. I did that because it was interesting in the debates which took place when the Minister for Community and Social Services (Mr. Brunelle) was in Ottawa he was advocating an escalator clause in, I guess it was the Canada Pension Plan.

How, on one hand, can one ministry of this government go along and say: "Now look boys, we should have an escalator clause in there because these pensions are so small; these people are the ones who are affected most rapidly by any increased cost of living"; and on the other hand when the Minister of Labour, just a number of days later, introduces a bill and you ask him about putting an escalator clause in there, he says: "Oh no, no, no"?

Do you talk together over there? It just doesn't wash very well, Mr. Chairman, that you would be advocating that the federal government introduce an escalator clause in a pension on disability, and then be reluctant to introduce the same escalator clause in a pension scheme, call it what you may, that you are totally responsible for. You can't have it both ways.

I hope the minister doesn't do as his colleague, the member for Scarborough Centre, (Mr. Drea) did last year when I suggested those people—the blind and so on who are on FBA—should have an escalator clause attached to what they were receiving. He indicated that would have been terrible because we would have made an elitist group of those on family benefits and general welfare by putting an escalator clause in the amounts they receive. If that's an elitist group I certainly don't want to be part of it, for all the elitism in it.

I would just hope that the minister would accept this. This government recommended it to the federal government in another field, and you are fully responsible for this. These are the people, and the minister is well aware of it, who, when there is any inflationary trend at all, are the first to feel the crunch. It is too long, in my estimation, to wait for six months, eight months, a year or two years possibly before we see a raise in the amounts received.

I don't think it would be all that costly, and I would urge the minister to accept this recommendation.

Mr. Chairman: I would suggest that we have covered these same arguments on the previous clause.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): I just want to endorse the amendment presented here by the member for Rainy River. It certainly is the type of amendment we think the government shouldn't hesitate at all to adopt. They have already adopted this principle when it came to the teachers' superannuation, where they indexed and provided additional funds to one segment in government service. So I can't foresee the minister not accepting the principle of the cost of living escalator.

The individual who has a physical handicap has enough for one individual to bear; that is one crutch. But with the government's attitude here, you are providing the other type of a handicap to that individual, and that is the financial handicap. It not only aggravates his own situation but also puts the individual, with the tremendous rapid rise in the cost of living today, in a position where, if he has to keep life and limb together — provided he even has the limb in some instances, Mr. Chairman—he is going to have to deprive himself of some of the necessities of life.

I think the cost of living escalator has already been proved an asset in other pension schemes, such as the old age security scheme on the guaranteed income supplement. I think the minister really, at this time, should accept the recommendation or the amendment of the member for Rainy River, and in that clause implement a cost of living index so that the individual receiving Workmen's Compensation has a standard level of income coming to him regardless of increases in cost of living at any time in the future.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Cochrane South.

Mr. Ferrier: I don't want to belabour this point, but last night I mentioned the case of a fellow who was hurt in 1957 and got his pension based on costs at that time—it was $312—and this is what he now lives on. He has had no raise since 1957. I think this escalator clause would help this type of people too, you know. You bring it up to $250, but there's an awful lot of people just immediately above it who really are taking it in the neck.

The fellows who were at lower wages are getting something out of this, but others are not. They're suffering physical disability, and people who are getting compensation for disability are physically impaired. I would say that the little bit that would be involved here I think has to be included. You have to do something for these people. They need it.

Mr. Martel: It's as simple as that.

Mr. Ferrier: It's as simple as that. I think you have people coming into your office on Saturday the same as I have. You know their problem of trying to get dollars together to meet the expenses and so on, and the hardship that is involved. I hope that you will reconsider it and incorporate this into the bill.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor West.

Mr. Bounsall: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I am rather a little disappointed, since the member for Rainy River has consistently supported the amendments that I have made up to this point, which ties the escalator clause to percentage increases in salaries and wages, which is double what the federal cost of living increases have turned out to be over the past 10 years. The member isn't in the House at the moment but I would have hoped he would accept the wording of, and the intent of more importantly, the other amendments which he also is supporting.

Also, as I understand it—and maybe the member can now answer—by his amendment I understand that he is saying that all full pensions paid by the Workmen's Compensation Board be adjusted. Certainly we can support that addition to this Act. I am just sorry that it isn't tied to percentage increases in salaries and wages, which is double what the federal cost of living has been over the past 10 years and was part of those amendments of ours that you have previously supported. This remains on a federal cost of living increase basis.

On the principle of gaining some kind of escalator clause in this bill, we in this party will support that, even though it's not as much as we would hope in terms of increases. We would hope sometime—obviously not today from what's been said—that the Minister of Labour will see this finds its way into the bill.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Chairman, yes. My colleague from Sudbury East referred to the Workmen's Compensation Board and compared it to other administrative departments of the federal government I guess. Of course the Workmen's Compensation Board is not directly a branch of my ministry, although I do report and am responsible for them. You know, if we were to listen to all the recommendations that were made last night—

Mr. MacDonald: You would have a good bill.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, and we would be short hundreds of millions of dollars. This is what people don't seem to realize—

Mr. MacDonald: Nonsense!

Hon. Mr. Guindon: I figured it out; it would have cost hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. Ferrier: That's extravagant!

Hon. Mr. Guindon: No, it isn't.

Mr. MacDonald: That's like the $3 billion for the Niagara Escarpment!

Mr. Martel: Brunelle had to take one thing and the loss of—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Look here, your colleague from Timmins was talking about something else. He wanted to help—and I would like to help—those who are locked in because their accidents occurred over, let's say 10 or 12 years ago; and they are caught in this escalation of costs.

Mr. Bounsall: Actions speak louder than words.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: They all suffer on that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reid: You don't say you are not going to accept it.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: The question is, the practice over the years in the Province of Ontario has been to provide increased benefits by specific amendments, as I have done here today in this bill, and with the approval of the Legislature. Otherwise, if you tie it to the escalation of costs, what if this cost of living keeps going up—and it's automatic, as was suggested—

Mr. MacDonald: So the cost of living goes up for the families who have to bear it.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: —and then some day you get a big depression. Would you have a de-escalator?

Mr. Bounsall: Sure, why not?

Mr. Guindon: Oh yes, it is all right to say now.

Mr. Martel: When is that going to happen?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: The way it is being done, and I think it is better to have it controlled by the Legislature, is to have a responsible Minister of Labour when the time comes say: "This is it, the benefits are going up." Like we're doing today in this bill.

Mr. Martel: Why did you ask the federal government for escalator clauses?

Mr. Chairman: Ready for the question?

Mr. Martel: No Mr. Chairman, my question hasn't been answered. Why do you people insist the federal government attach an escalator clause to the Canada Pension Plan, when the argument you've just given could work there as well? Yet the minister responsible for Community and Social Services made his whole case—and I've read his documentation—to the federal government to improve that, to overcome the poverty brought on by the increased cost of living.

You make a whole case before the federal government. You have an opportunity to implement it yourself in the Workmen's Compensation Act, and then you look for a red herring that doesn't make sense to try and opt out.

You can't have it both ways. Don't ask Ottawa to put it in if you are not willing to put it in the pension scheme you are responsible for. That just doesn't wash, Mr. Minister. It just doesn't wash. Now maybe you can answer why you are doing one thing on one hand and on the other hand opting out?

Mr. MacDonald: Why don't you practise what you preach?

Mr. Ferrier: The Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Brunelle) was posturing in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: You have to ask the Minister of Community and Social Services. I told you what my stand is; and that's it.

Mr. MacDonald: He is part of your government.

Mr. Martel: I am interested in knowing just what in God's name goes on over there. Do you just go down to Ottawa to make all kinds of cases and make lots of loud noise and then come back here and practise the same fofoeraw?

Because you are blaming them for not putting an escalator clause in? You want it, but you won't put it in in Ontario. Now what kind of nonsense is that? It seems to me that you are just going down there to see if you can grab headlines.

Mr. Ruston: That's all they are doing; looking for money.

Mr. Martel: Then you can come back and tell the citizens of Ontario: "Oh look at that nasty group in Ottawa"—and they are, I want to make that abundantly clear, they are. But you are not much better. You are just like Scrooge. You say one thing and do another. You can't have it both ways, Mr. Minister.

Now either the Hon. Rene Brunelle gets up and says: "It was just a big sham. The government of Ontario didn't mean there should be escalator clauses." Or if they meant it, then they should introduce it themselves in those areas for which they have sole responsibility.

It just doesn't wash with me, Mr. Minister, and you don't answer it very convincingly.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, this raises a point which is rather interesting. In the government's new reorganization they put Labour, not where it belongs in social policy, they put it over with resources like steel and wood and everything else.

That's the way you treat labour. It is just like any other product that is to be bought and sold on the market. It is just possible—I wouldn't like to guarantee this, but it is just possible—that if labour were where it belonged in the social policy field, conceivably you would have sat down with the other minister and come up with a consistent policy and not gone to Ottawa asking for an escalator clause on pensions up there while you deny it here.

The inconsistency is because you've got two different approaches. Labour is in the wrong place here. But it is an accurate reflection of the approach of a Tory government to have it where it is; so perhaps we shouldn't deceive the public and move it to where it belongs.

Mr. Chairman: Ready for the question? The member for Yorkview.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, the minister asked some time ago where all this money is coming from. It is going to cost, he said, hundreds of millions of dollars to do this job. Let me point out to the minister this one statistic: This year the gross provincial product is going up from about $42 to $47 billion in Ontario.

What does that mean? That we are increasing our product in Ontario this year by $5 billion, that is five thousand million dollars.

All right, if we can't administer that increase so that the people who are suffering industrial accidents and their families share in that $5 billion increase, then there is something wrong with the administration of that government.

Mr. Ferrier: Oh we recognize that!

Mr. Young: We ask the minister the question; How is it that you can justify the present distribution of that colossal increase of our gross provincial product and you can't find any more than this picayune amount for the people who are casualties of our industrial system? These are the people who are producing this extra wealth! These people, or the ones who were there and have been hurt, they were producing it before they were hurt. Surely they deserve some consideration. Surely out of this vast increase this minister and this government can find some way to distribute a little bit of this largess, a little bit of this increase, to the casualties of the system which is producing this wealth.

I call that to the minister's attention and point out to him that an increase of hundreds of millions of dollars—it likely won't cost that—doesn't scare me one iota when, again I repeat, we are going to increase our gross provincial product this year by five thousand million dollars.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, the subsequent amendment and this amendment are an attempt to put some protection into the escalating increase in the amount in the future. The minister questions where we get the figures and why we do change $80 to $90. He says it's just a case of money.

It's hard to tell where the ministers of this government get their guidelines. He tells us in this bill and the amendment that we expect a widow to keep six, seven or eight children on $460 a month, which is around $5,500 odd a year.

The Croll commission on poverty in its up-dated figures now declares that $5,700 is needed for a family of four—two adults and two children—on an escalated basis for a fair income basis.

What criteria is the minister using when we have such a disparity in reports that are done on basic research and surveys on needs based on fair budgetary allowances? Why such a disparity when a commission that has done an in-depth study along with others feels that amount is needed to keep a certain number of people with certain kinds of dignities?

We have one report that defines a reasonable figure at $5,700 for a family of four, plus a reasonable escalation for additions. Here we find that we are providing for a family of any number above four a figure of $5,500 a year. We just can't find out what kind of criteria the government is using.

Mr. Chairman: Any further question? The hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Briefly, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for York South points out quite rightly—and I have said that myself and at times I do question it—whether our Ministry of Labour should be in the resources policy field or in the social development policy field. I am interested in both fields.

We have to work very closely with Industry and Tourism because we are interested in jobs. I am interested in jobs for people in this province.

At the same time, it so happens that I think the minister himself is a very human being, a man who cares for people, and I certainly wouldn't want the opposition to think for a moment that, even though we don't belong to the social development policy field, we don't have feelings for the people of this province. Far from it!

I have said it many times, and I can repeat it again, I happen to represent an area which is highly organized, as far as labour is concerned. And when you go over the records of the last five elections, I certainly get my support—perhaps not the union leaders, but certainly from the rank and file of the people who believe in the union movement as they do.

So I wouldn't want them to think for a moment that we have forgotten all about those needs for people even though we belong to the resources policy field. Our increase in gross national income, as far as Ontario is concerned, is good news and we want to keep it this way. It is a fact also in other provinces—I would think in Manitoba, British Columbia — but yet none of those governments can do better than Ontario is doing in the field of compensation.

Mr. Ferrier: British Columbia has the escalator clause in their Act.

Mr. Young: We are the richest province and we should set an example.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: None can do any better; as a matter of fact not as good.

Mr. Chairman: Ready for the question? The hon. member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: I just want to put another point to the minister. He tells us this change alone comes out to about a six per cent increase on the payroll per capita payment for industry. I don't know what relevance that has outside of saying it costs a little more, but he knows that the average increase in profits after taxes was some 24 per cent last year in the Province of Ontario. I am sure that their increase of six per cent to pay for this increase in their per capita payroll costs to pay for this improvement will be tax deductible, which will likely end up at 2.5 to 3 per cent. So you could have raised more money from them without hurting them a bit this year in relation to last year.

Mr. Chairman: Ready for the question?

Those in favour of Mr. Reid's motion will please say "aye." Those opposed will please say "nay." In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Shall we stack this along with the others?

Now, section 2 then, the member for Windsor West.

Mr. Bounsall: Yes Mr. Chairman. I have an amendment on section 2.

Mr. Bounsall moves that section 2(a)(i) and 2(a)(ii) be amended by replacing $55 a week with $100 a week, "the amount to be adjusted semi-annually according to the per cent increase in salaries and wages in Ontario."

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Chairman, in activating the amendment here, again it is interesting to note how that $55 a week turned up in this section. The calculation for those on temporary total disability is arrived at by taking the present minimum wage times 40 hours a week, times 75 per cent of it. That works out to one dollar less than $55 a week. So this is how that figure is arrived at, so it could be said—

Mr. Gisborn: Taking the poverty line!

Mr. Bounsall: So it could be said that temporary total disability pensions in this province are above the minimum wage. That is all that has gone into the turning out of this particular figure.

It is interesting to note that at least the Minister of Labour was concerned about the fact that heretofore before we got this change, they were concerned about a benefit, which was less than the minimum wage situation in the Province of Ontario.

This $100 a week that's proposed is set on the same basis that I used previously here this afternoon in an argument as to why the minimum wage in this province should be $2.50. Multiplying $2.50 by 40 hours a week and taking the full 100 per cent of it you get $100 a week.

When I did that previously Mr. Chairman, I did not speak to the 100 per cent situation or why I feel this to be just rather than 75 per cent. The minister has mentioned that by taking 75 per cent one must remember that they pay no income tax on that amount. They aren't paying income tax at the rate of 25 per cent in total on their earnings.

If that is the argument, at this level of pensions it certainly doesn't make up that difference of 25 per cent over and above what their salary was or what any minimum was or what any minimum wage times 40 hours is, taking only three-quarters of it. It works out to be $55 in this case. There is no justification for paying 75 per cent only of average earnings of any sort in calculating Workmen's Compensation pensions. The argument cannot be that there is no income tax because that just doesn't match or equal the decrease.

I guess it's an attitude of the government that we are going to make people in this province, men and women who have suffered in industrial accidents, suffer a little bit. We want to see them punished a little bit financially for having had that accident occur.

Mr. Martel: They had the audacity to get hurt!

Mr. Bounsall: We're going to give them almost enough; we will make it almost equal to what they were getting before, but make it pinch just a little bit, make it hurt just a little bit.

You sure wouldn't let it go the other way—give them a 100 per cent, and leave it non-taxable as it is at the moment, to make up for the pain and the suffering and the mental anguish and all the other additional expenses that accrue to injured workmen when they're in that temporary state of disability; to make up for all the taxis or the buses they have to take because they aren't capable of driving their cars; and all the extra costs which they incur, not just medical, but all sorts because they are now injured, in pain, disabled.

You won't do that—give them 100 per cent of what they have and leave it non-taxable so that they can get that extra maybe eight, 10 or 12 per cent over what they were making before so that, with that, they can do and perform and acquire for themselves things which will help them through their period of disability. That's why we're not going to put in 75 per cent of it, as you have done in this calculation. That's why we believe so strongly that this whole Act should be at 100 per cent of earnings.

I phrased this amendment to fit the particular wording of this bill. There is no doubt in my mind whatsoever that any workman who is on a temporary total disability should be receiving his full earnings from the board at 100 per cent. When he returns to work if it is in a slightly lower category because of that disability still pertaining to a certain extent, the board should make up the full amount of the difference between his former earnings and the earnings he receives now in the work force.

Another interesting thing, if one plays with figures Mr. Chairman, is that further on, in the next section—I mention this only because it pertains to a remark here—for permanent total disability it's $250 a month. We recognize why that is there; again, it's just a bit above minimum wage. If we make a calculation based on the 4.3 weeks in a month, taking permanent total disability at $250 as in the bill and translating it back to what should appear in this section, rather than the $55 the ministry has, in point of fact one discovers that $55 a week here does not match $250 a month. At $55 a week times 4.3 weeks, that would be only $236.50.

So even in the minister's calculation, based on his premises, this section is inadequate in terms of the temporary total disability cases, which we have suggested should be at $100 a week, or exactly equal to the complete and total amount of the earnings he is not making.

Mr. Chairman, I say this with no great feeling of success that these arguments are having effect upon the ministry. But, in any event, I want to make them to make it clear to this House what we in opposition—and I believe on every point so far the Liberal Party has been in agreement with us on our amendments—

Mr. Reid: And vice versa.

Mr. Bounsall: And vice versa for their one amendment so far; we'll see, I'm sure a few more from both of the opposition parties. We want to outline what we would do and have in a Workmen's Compensation Act in this province with respect to that section dealing with claim compensation.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, just for your guidance, if you allow that section to go to a vote, I'd like to know if we're still then capable of speaking to the section following, 2(a)(ii), that section which reads, "and for temporary partial disability. . . ."

Mr. Chairman: Well, we have four motions up to now which we have stacked. I presume this would be stacked as well.

Mr. Martel: No, Mr. Chairman, you missed the point. What I want to know is if you stack that, does that preclude me from speaking to the section following 2(a)(ii)?

Mr. Chairman: Well, can you not make your remarks now on this particular section?

Mr. Martel: Well I can, but I just want to know if you want me to make them here or to just discuss that amendment.

Mr. Chairman: I suggest you make them right here.

Mr. Martel: All right. I have some lengthy comments I want to make on this section, which reads, "and for temporary partial disability, a proportionate amount in accordance with the impairment of earning capacity."

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): And just be earning.

Mr. Martel: What disturbs me to no end is that when a man gets an amount equal to 50 per cent or he has been determined to have a temporary partial disability, and he reports for work, the company says: "Sorry, buddy boy. We don't have any work. You go home." And he ends up on the welfare rolls.

What is happening in my area is that there are more than 450 men in one company headed for that avenue. And what in God's name is the welfare doing picking that up? The man didn't get hurt working for the Province of Ontario. But that great benevolent company that I have in my area has a new game—

Mr. Ferrier: What's the name?

Mr. Martel: I won't even name the company. The minister knows. But it has a new game.

Mr. L. Maeck (Parry Sound): Tell us the initials.

Mr. A. J. Carruthers (Durham): Would it begin with an "T"?

Mr. Martel: Yes, I-n-c-o. Right.

Mr. Bounsall: He couldn't resist it.

Mr. Martel: And there's another one, but it's not as bad. But what's happening is that this company has got more than 400 men—

Mr. Carruthers: That's a little farther east.

Mr. Martel: It has more than 400 men who've been on light duty anywhere from a year to two years, and who will never go back to full duty—never; if they live to be 100!

Mr. MacDonald: So we pick up the tab instead of the company paying it.

Mr. Martel: What Inco is doing is to bring them in one at a time, one or two a week, and they say to the man: "Well, sir, tomorrow you go back to full duty."

Mr. Haggerty: They know perfectly well he can't do the job.

Mr. Martel: They know he can't do it. You know he's got four vertebrae fused and the guy says: "Well, I can't." They say to him: "Well, the option is yours. You can go back, but we have no other work for you." Now what's the guy going to do? What's he going to do?

Mr. Haggerty: Blacklist them, Elie.

Mr. Martel: So he goes home. They won't give him his pension. I am working on cases with 31 and 32 years' experience, and even with neurosurgeons' reports saying the man is totally disabled, they even refuse to give him a disability pension from the company, which he is entitled to. But they don't.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): How much would you give them?

Mr. Martel: I would give them what the contracts negotiated by their union called for. That's what I would give them. You wouldn't understand it. It's just over your head.

Mr. Gilbertson: You are raising your voice.

Mr. Martel: I suggest you go back to St. Joseph Island—

Mr. Gilbertson: Oh, isn't that great, eh?

Mr. Martel: —because you would never get involved in anything that was meaningful.

Mr. Gilbertson: Is that right?

Mr. Martel: Maybe you could go and peddle some maple syrup.

Mr. Gilbertson: I am an employer and I pay that compensation, too

Mr. Martel: Yes, you're an employer. Go and peddle your maple syrup, will you?

Mr. Gilbertson: I paid that compensation.

Mr. Chairman: Order please! Back to the bill.

Mr. Martel: You haven't got enough income on what you make here, you peddle maple syrup on the side.

Mr. Chairman: Order please!

Mr. Carruthers: Get back to the bill.

Mr. Martel: And we're talking about a pension for industrial workers.

Mr. Gilbertson: And you eat it, too, don't you? And like it.

Mr. J. H. Jessiman (Fort William): Are you moonlighting?

Mr. Gilbertson: Sure!

Mr. Carruthers: You sweet little thing.

Mr. Gilbertson: Sit down!

Mr. Martel: Well, you go and peddle some more maple syrup.

Mr. Gilbertson: You are all through now, why don't you sit down.

Mr. Martel: Your 12 grand isn't enough.

Mr. Reid: Well the level of the debate is on the rise again.

Mr. Martel: Well anyway, we have this sweet little arrangement, Mr. Chairman. So the man is caught. The company doesn't give him his pension; it refuses to, even though it involves 30 or 31 years in some cases.

I sent these cases to the minister. There are 450 on their way. That doesn't include the 400 who have some other type of industrial sickness that wasn't compensated, but have been working part-time.

But what does this clause mean, and I want to come back to that, "in accordance with the impairment of earning capacity."

Their earning capacity is zero, and you won't recognize it. You say: "Well, he's 18 per cent disabled, he's 25 per cent disabled, he's 35 per cent disabled." But he can't get a job anywhere, because in northern Ontario, as even the member from St. Joe's, I am sure would agree, there are very few light duty jobs available. We are involved in heavy industry, whether it's pulp and paper or whether it's mining. The vast majority of work up there is heavy work.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Peddling maple syrup isn't very heavy.

Mr. Martel: Well, no, he wouldn't give it to them.

Mr. Haggerty: A weak mind and a strong back.

Mr. Martel: Now that clause, if I interpret it right, Mr. Minister, would indicate—

Mr. Gilbertson: It takes a lot of work to make it.

Mr. Martel: —that their earning capacity is zero. Are you willing to pay these men maximum benefits, not some phoney percentage that was arrived at?

Just how do you determine whether a man is 35 per cent disabled insofar as his earning capacity is concerned when he can't work? His earning capacity is zero. And yet you interpret it this way.

How do you rationalize getting that, from that wording? It's very clear: "An amount in accordance with the impairment of earning capacity."

That, to me, is clear; but it is always interpreted in favour of whom? The workman? No way. Because the assessment against a particular company, as I understand it, would go up too high. If he can't work, then he must be totally, even if partially, disabled.

Mr. Haggerty: Tell them to go to Canada Pension.

Mr. Martel: What is he doing on the welfare roll, Mr. Chairman, because that's just another way for the Province of Ontario to subsidize industry. We subsidize industry every time we support a man and his family on welfare. The man might be getting 18 per cent or 20 per cent from compensation. Whether he gets welfare, or as we have done just within the last two months, we have put him on FBA because he is a long term disability and not employable, we in fact are using the public purse to subsidize industry—because they opt out of their responsibilities.

For a company to expect a man who is injured working for them—after a broken leg or two or three fused discs in his back—to go back to produce to the same capacity that he was doing prior to his injury, is ridiculous.

I'm sure the minister agrees with me that no workman can suffer a severe, crippling accident and be expected to produce to the same degree or the same capacity that he was able to produce prior to his injury. Yet that's what old father Inco wants.

I want to give credit to the rehabilitation people in your department; they really try. You have got some good people in northern Ontario. But you know they just don't have the jobs to retrain people for it because there is no secondary industry. You can't make jobs where they don't exist.

Mr. Stokes: Oh, you could.

Mr. Martel: Well, we could. I would. You people would have problems.

Mr. Ferrier: They've done it sometimes.

Mr. Martel: You people would have problems, because that would infringe on the free enterprise system. I don't have that hangup, you know.

Mr. MacDonald: You could create a lot of jobs.

Mr. Martel: I would infringe like mad. You're bloody right I would. I wouldn't allow 26 per cent unemployment, as the minister has had in his area for three years; not with everything that is there. No way.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: What is your secret?

Mr. Martel: I'd put in government money and I'd start a Crown corporation—yes—with the natural resources that are in my area, whether they be mining, whether they be pulp and paper—I'd start a secondary industry related to what is there. I have no qualms, absolutely none.

Mr. Gilbertson: Why aren't you over here then.

Mr. Martel: You Tories would.

Mr. Carruthers: Why don't you set up your own business?

Mr. Martel: We didn't have $10 million to fight the last election.

Mr. Reid: I think you're finally—

Mr. MacDonald: You wait until you get the Manitoba results and you'll see what people do when they see a good thing.

Mr. Martel: At least I've all kinds of teachers.

Mr. MacDonald: You wait until the results come out there.

Mr. Carruthers: We saw a good example.

Mr. Martel: I want to tell you that is the problem. If you don't have industry, Mr. Minister, up there—

Mr. MacDonald: It was the Tories who botched that up.

Mr. Martel: And if you can't retrain people—which your people wanted to do; and as I say, for the few jobs that are available they do an excellent job—then what is your alternative? Is it to continue to pay 15 or 18 per cent partial or temporary or total disability and have people end up on the welfare rolls? Do you think we should subsidize the industry that way, Mr. Minister? I don't.

And I am saying that you have a choice. You either put these companies, all of them, in schedule 2—the minister knows what I am talking about. In fact, they then take the responsibility for total retraining. I don't care if it costs dear old Inco three years, or four years of rehabilitation to get a man to upgrade his education, to then retrain him for some type of light work that he could do; it doesn't matter to me. Because in the final analysis, Mr. Minister, either they pay for it or the public purse takes up the task in many, many of the back injuries that occur in northern Ontario.

Every member over there should be supporting me instead of interjecting with stupid comments. They should in fact be supporting me, because they have the same problems in their areas; they can't get men rehabilitated because there are no jobs.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: That's strange. There happens to be a Tory member up in that area called Sault Ste. Marie, and their union just—

Mr. Stokes: Listen, I have news for the member for Algoma, I was in Hornepayne in your riding with you a week ago Saturday and I picked up Workmen's Compensation cases that you couldn't settle.

An hon. member: Let that be a lesson!

Mr. Martel: Isn't it interesting that the representation I have had from the big local in the Soo—from the Soo, not my riding—was on this very point, that they have too many people on the local welfare roll who are there as a result of an industrial accident?

Mr. Minister, we can't hide from that any longer. I expect you to answer as to whether the public is responsible, through welfare, to support a man who was hurt industrially, or whether the onus is on the company where the man was employed? Surely we subsidize industry enough in this country that we don't have to subsidize with inadequate amounts, because welfare certainly is an inadequate amount.

But even then the Province of Ontario and the municipality of Sudbury or the municipality of Sault Ste. Marie should not be picking up the tab to support men who are injured working in those companies there. It is getting increasingly worse and the minister is aware of it—or if the minister isn't, certainly those people at the board are—because they have been getting an increasing number of briefs on this specific topic, that people who were hurt in an industrial accident shouldn't be on the welfare roll.

I just want to briefly wrap it up, Mr. Minister. You have a choice. You can pay what this says: "A proportionate amount in accordance with the impairment," and the impairment in those cases of the back injury is total. They are not able to earn a living. I don't care if you measure it 32 per cent.

I am always amazed at how you come at 32 and not 33 or you get 35 and not 36, but their earning capacity is zero. For you to say he has only got a 35 per cent disability is a lot of nonsense. He can't go out and earn a living. His capacity to earn has been wiped out and he should be paid at that rate in accordance with what this states.

Secondly, with respect to dear old Inco, there has got to be, I hope, a move by this ministry to put them on schedule 2 or lay a heavy on them. And by that I mean you tell them: "Well, gentlemen, we have sent in inspectors and there are all kinds of light duty jobs available providing you want them—they have been there for years; you simply decided to wipe them out in the last two months—or we will put you on schedule 2 where you pay for the total retraining."

Thirdly, I don't think that this minister or this province should be the ones to pick up the tab for people who are hurt in industrial accidents through the welfare offices or through the family benefits branch of the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

Something must be done and it should be done while we are debating this bill, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Ferrier: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to reiterate a few of the comments of my colleague from Sudbury East and say that the enactment of this provision in the Workmen's Compensation Act, if we pass this amendment, is passing one of the most iniquitous and unfair provisions in the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Because this is the clause that enables the board to cut back on a man's benefits to 50 per cent or 25 per cent. What happens so often in an area such as the member for Sudbury East and I represent is that there is no modified work for a man when he begins to get a little bit better. So a doctor has to check a little provision on a medical form and the guy down in the claims department says: "Oh, that form's checked, so in accordance with this provision in the Act, we will cut him down to 50 per cent."

It's supposed to be an incentive to get him back to work. The man goes back to the lumber camp, to the mines or to heavy industry, a man very often with very little education but who has used the strength of his body to perform heavy work and perform it well. And they say: "We haven't got it here for you. You go back home and when you get well enough, we'll take you." So the man has to go for a considerable period of time on half benefit. He still has to meet his expenses, to feed his family and all the rest of it. They say: "Oh, you can go and file an unemployment insurance claim." He goes and does that perhaps, but is still disabled from the accident.

Mr. Young: And then they cut him off compensation!

Mr. Ferrier: Even though in a technical medical sense, I suppose, he's made some improvement, it still doesn't mean that he can go back and do the job that he is trained to do or some other job. He doesn't have the seniority. There are many things that militate against him. If they live in an area where there are working people, I am sure every member of this House has more and more people coming to them with this sense of grievance, that they are being cheated. And I think they are.

I think that this is, as I said, the most iniquitous and unfair provision that is in this Workmen's Compensation Act. To ask us to re-enact it, as we are going to have to do, I just find utterly abhorrent. If I didn't get up and say some of these things and endorse what the member for Sudbury East said, I couldn't live with my conscience or with my people in my riding.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I don't want to prolong this. Quite frankly, I didn't expect that we would have a full-scale debate on the Workmen's Compensation Board. I must agree with my colleagues on the left and far left that the provision for light work is absolutely nonsensical in today's age. It doesn't work, particularly in those areas where one mine or one mill or one industry is the only industry where work is available.

The management of that mine or mill or industry knows that the workman has been injured and that he is liable to further injury because of the weakened condition of his health from the first injury. They do not want to take him back. Often they do not have light duty around the place of work for him to take. Surely it is incumbent upon the minister to do something about this very sad state of affairs where you have the workman who cannot even apply for a small pension and where he cannot find work. He's the man in the middle; he's the man who really suffers. I would support the comments and the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Yorkview.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, along this line, I want to bring to the minister's attention a specific situation in which I find myself time after time where, under the provisions of this Act—we are talking about the section right now—men who are in heavy construction, who have been brought into this country to do that kind of work, are suffering grievously at the hands of this province.

I think of the Italian workman particularly in my area, and we have thousands of them there. He has little education and his knowledge of the English language is minimal, because he is working with his own people day by day and they talk in their own language.

He has been trained for nothing except the heavy work which he's doing in construction. Something happens to his back or to his arm or to his head and he has all parts of the body affected. He gets compensation for a period of time. Then the doctor says he is able to do this light, modified suitable work. So they cut him down to the 50 per cent.

As my colleague has pointed out, he goes back to look for that kind of work. Where in the name of common sense can a person find that kind of work, without the language, without training, except grade 3 or 4, without any particular skills except in construction, which is heavy bone labour?

This is the travesty in the whole situation. So he tries, but he can't find it, and he and his family get along on the 50 per cent. The mortgage payments come due because he has bought a house. These people are thrifty and they want to get ahead and so when they can buy a home they do.

But then after a while, the doctor says, in the next examination: "You're almost better—75 per cent better—so we cut you down to 25 per cent. Go and find that light work."

He still can't find it. It isn't there. The company doesn't have it for him. He's still handicapped by the insurmountable difficulties that are inherent in his background and his lack of training.

All right. We tell him to go to the unemployment insurance office. And this is the travesty, when an official of the Compensation Board will say to him: "Go and register for unemployment insurance." So he goes, and then when he once registers, the compensation people will say: "You now have admitted that you're ready for full time work, so off you go." Now, this kind of thing is inexcusable.

Mr. Martel: He waits for a year for a partial pension.

Mr. Young: And if he doesn't do that he goes on the welfare roll, and, as the hon. member for Sudbury East has pointed out, we then are subsidizing the employer to that extent.

Now Mr. Chairman, the minister must know these things. He must know there is no such thing as light modified work for the heavy construction worker. He's not qualified and yet he's told that his income is going to be cut to 50 to 33 per cent to 25 per cent, whatever it may be, because he is in that proportion able to work.

I remember one instance when we won a case before the appeal tribunal because the board said: "You're 75 per cent disabled." So we simply took the case. I took about three minutes and I spoke to the board and I said: "Who is going to hire a man who is 75 per cent disabled when you have the kind of unemployment we have in this country?" The board saw the sense of it and they awarded him 100 per cent.

I think since that time they have done this on more than one occasion. But there was the absolute absurdity of saying to a man: "You're 75 per cent disabled. We'll only pay you 75 per cent of your compensation."

This—I struggle for words because this awful dealing in fractions is the kind of thing which is destroying the faith of many of these people in the system which we are trying to administer in this province. It's high time we got rid of the fractions and we began to say that as long as a man is disabled for the kind of work he is equipped to do, and until rehabilitation finds him that kind of work, and he is able to back on that work, then I think we should forget the fractions and go ahead and pay him his money.

Mr. Ferrier: Right on; excellent speech!

Mr. Chairman: The hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Chairman, I guess on this point we are all pretty well in agreement. We know fully well it's not easy to get a light job for a workman who has been 25 or 50 per cent impaired or disabled. I see it every day in my own area with the high rate of unemployment where we have bodies who are well and willing to work. You can imagine those who have a disability of 25, 50 or 75 per cent cannot find work.

It's not an easy problem for any Minister of Labour—for that matter for any government, because the same criticism has been levelled at different departments in other provinces. I am sure in Manitoba, when the NDP was not in power, they made the same points time and again. The same thing in British Columbia. But today they are in power and they're not doing one iota better than what we're doing here in Ontario. There's your answer.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Why don't you lead?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: We lead because we're—we still lead, yes. We have the best deal.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: You can't get off the hook that easy, Mr. Minister. There's just no way.

You haven't answered anything. You've just got up and you've wrung your hands and said: "We agree; it's a terrible problem. We know the problem's there, but we're not going to do anything about it."

An hon. member: It's true.

Mr. Martel: "We're not going to do anything about it." That's what you've done. It just doesn't jell. I want some answers. I want to know if the Province of Ontario should, through the Ministry of Community and Social Services and through the welfare, have to support a man who was injured in an industrial accident? Is that what the minister is saying? I want to know. We will take them one at a time.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: They do get support, at times; when they can't find work actually. Some of the community services, the Ministry of Community and Social Services, and in some cases, I suppose, general welfare or city welfare do help these people.

I have said it many times today, you know, we are talking about compensation; we are not talking about welfare. It is not based on the need; it is a question of right to the injured worker.

Mr. Martel: Right to the injured workman! That is right, a right to the injured workman.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, according to the degree of impairment.

Mr. Martel: Right, to the degree of impairment. But the municipalities and the province are paying the shot, Mr. Chairman, and those companies wherein the workman was injured are not. Do they not have a responsibility to those workers, because in fact those workers were the ones, and are still the ones, who are making the profits for the companies?

Tell me why the province should be the one responsible for picking up the tab when these men can't go to work? Why should it not be the corporations for whom these men were earning the profits? You know, your priorities are slightly mixed up. Why don't we make them responsible instead of the general taxpayers of the province being responsible? That is who is doing it now. You must concur with that if you take the stance you have now taken.

I presume the minister agrees it is okay to go on welfare then and the companies should be subsidized in yet another manner? The minister doesn't nod; he doesn't dissent. He doesn't like being pinned down.

I think the minister is aware of the problem. I think he is sympathetic but like most politicians he has to look over his shoulder and that is always uncomfortable.

You know, he blames what Manitoba is doing, but this is the richest province in Canada. The Tories are notorious. You brag that you put in 52 per cent of the bill; that you foot 52 per cent of the bill for taxes to run this country. I have heard it over and over again, from Treasurer after Treasurer—and we have gone through them at the rate of a dime a dozen in the last couple of years. Yet when it comes time to do something for the people—

You are not going to do anything then? The minister, for example, is not going, at least, to say to the companies: "You are responsible; we are going to put you on schedule 2"?

Would the minister consider putting some of these companies on schedule 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act so that they are totally responsible for retraining, and so that in fact these people can live and ultimately get back in a position to support their families? Why should that be a provincial responsibility? Would the minister consider schedule 2 for the companies that do this?

Mr. Chairman: Are you ready for the question then?

Mr. Martel: No, I am waiting for a reply. I want to know if the minister would consider putting some of these companies on schedule 2 and thus make them ultimately responsible for the total rehabilitation of people who have been injured and cannot go back to regular work?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Chairman, I think the difference between the hon. member for Sudbury East and the member for Stormont is that I have had the experience of seeing both sides. In the city which I represent, of course, we had the unfortunate incident of a large industry which closed down because it was not profitable. For five and six years in a row it showed a deficit; it was in the red and eventually the word came from the headquarters, which were in Europe, that it had to close down. We lost 1,200 jobs within a few weeks and we have never recovered from it.

Mr. Gilbertson: That is the other side of the coin.

Mr. Martel: You can do something about that.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: We are trying hard, and eventually I think we will; and, I would hope, before too many months. But we are doing it gradually. This is what happens to a town.

I am not as familiar perhaps with Sudbury as I am with eastern Ontario, but I am informed that Inco, for instance, pays 95 per cent of all the compensation funds on nickel production on this assessment, in other words, it means—I wish I could read my notes but I can't—the company pays all its rehabilitation charges whether they are on schedule 2 or schedule 1.

Mr. Martel: My understanding is they are not on schedule 1.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: That is the information I have received, but I will look into it. I wouldn't want any corporation to get away with something which we feel is not fair to the labour of this province; not at all. On the other hand, we don't want to put them out of business.

Mr. Martel: Your colleague is a prime example of letting them get away. The minister is aware that they are at present going to get rid of 400 to 450 men, is he not? They have admitted this to the Workmen's Compensation Board.

Let me clarify it. Their intention is to dump 450 men within the next little while. They don't even have to go to the Minister of Labour to ask to do it.

Mr. Gilbertson: The member is not helping the situation.

Mr. Martel: That is the interesting part. They don't even have to ask you because they force the man to quit! They offer him full-time regular work, in fact the same work he performed prior to his injury.

I will ask the minister: Does the minister really believe that a man who has had a very severe back injury—it might be fused—can go back underground on a jack-leg and do the same type of work he was doing prior to his injury? Does he have the same ability, the same strength to perform that type of work? Yet this is the only work, Mr. Minister, that they are offering him today.

A man was sent to my office last week by a doctor. He had a crushing injury to his arm; the tendons have grown into bone. He was a great big strapping man, bigger than Leo the Lollipop. He must weigh 200 lbs; a big strapping man except that his whole right arm is ruined. He can't lift up a jack-leg with his right arm; he just can't.

They have already told him: "You had better start to look." He has been on a conveyor belt for two years doing a first-rate job. They have told him: "You've got to go back underground." So his doctor sent him to me if I could do something, because there is no way that man can lift that type of machinery. They won't let him stay on the conveyor belt; they just said: "You go back to full duty."

Well, there is no way. What are we going to do with him? We put him on the welfare roll. He is a man with a family; a big strapping man; proud; hard-working; willing to work—more than willing to work. He is absolutely beside himself at the prospect of ending up on welfare. What do we do with that type of individual? Should he become a ward of FBA? Should he be on general welfare? He doesn't want to be.

Mr. Gilbertson: He will get a job if he is that type of person.

Mr. Martel: Where do you dig those guys up? Where do you dig them up? Is he for real?

Mr. Carruthers: Yes, he is. Really he is.

Mr. Martel: I am not convinced.

But what do we do, Mr. Chairman, with a man like that? Should he become the responsibility of the province if he can't find work? That is what is going to happen.

You know, I hear you Tories, in the latest budget, screaming we have to have budgetary restraints and cutbacks but you are willing to subsidize industry in yet another fashion by paying the welfare, if necessary, for those 450 men because there are no jobs.

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland): There also happens to be retraining programmes; retrain them.

Mr. Martel: You know, for the member for—

Mr. Morningstar: Welland!

Mr. Martel: Welland! I want to tell the member for Welland, if I might, Mr. Chairman, with your indulgence—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: —that I hear him bellowing like that—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Well, he just doesn't know what he is talking about in this instance, because what the Compensation Board people tell me—and Mr. MacDonald is under the Speaker's gallery and he could verify it very quickly—is that there are no jobs to retrain people for in northern Ontario. What I get from the board is that you could retrain a man for a job in southern Ontario, but because of the difference in money, the cost to establish a home in Toronto, it is impossible.

We are not talking about Welland where there is secondary industry. We are talking about an economy that is solely reliant on primary industry. Maybe you haven't noticed that yet.

Mr. Morningstar: One of the most highly industrialized parts of the province.

Mr. Martel: Maybe you haven't been out of Welland long enough. Maybe you should come to the north once. It would do you good, because you wouldn't sit there yapping.

Mr. Chairman: Order please!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Well, they burn my butt.

Mr. Stokes: If it wasn't for the resources you get from northern Ontario—

Mr. Martel: Welland wouldn't be there. You would have a big canal.

Mr. Morningstar: No.

Mr. Martel: I come back to my point, Mr. Minister. We can't retrain them; there are no jobs there. Now, do they fall on the welfare roll? Or what? Do you not have any oomph?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Because for years there have been all kinds of light duty jobs available at Inco and Falconbridge, as your staff well knows. And they won't even count this, because they want the men out. It's a simple operation, they want them out.

Mr. Carruthers: Is the Workmen's Compensation Board aware of this?

Mr. Martel: The Workmen's Compensation Board is aware of it.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: They certainly are. They lack any human compassion.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): What's the point you are trying to make?

Mr. Martel: The point I am trying to make? There are several points I am trying to make for the minister.

Mr. Bounsall: Go through it again for him. Right from the start.

Mr. Martel: The clause of the bill says: "And for temporary partial disability, a proportionate amount in accordance with the impairment of earning capacity." And if a man can't work, should he be entitled to 100 per cent? Do you think he should?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No; the point you are trying to make.

Mr. Martel: The point I am making is that I don't think the province should pay welfare.

An hon. member: It has all been said before.

Mr. Carruthers: We have been over it 16 times.

Mr. Chairman: Order please!

Mr. Martel: I am saying that the—

An hon. member: It's been said before.

Mr. Martel: It might be repetitive, but all the minister has done is to rub his hands and say it is a problem and Manitoba is not doing anything about it, and then he sat down. But he didn't talk about a solution, did he; in any way, shape or form?

What I am trying to elicit from the minister is some solution, not just a wringing of the hands, and saying it is all bad in Manitoba. This is the richest province. I want to know what he is going to do about his growing problem. Maybe he will reply then.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Well, Mr. Chairman, the member knows fully well, if he is looking for jobs for people who have to find light jobs, that you're not going to find the jobs if they are not there. I can tell him that we do have co-operation from many other employers.

Mr. Martel: Oh, right!

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, in the automobile industries, for instance, we have this kind of co-operation where employers will give them a light job. It may be a special case around Sudbury.

But there is one thing though that he forgot to mention. Every cent that the Workmen's Compensation Board pays for the rehabilitation of Inco workers is charged to and paid by Inco, if they are on schedule 1 or schedule 2.

But how can you ask the Minister of Labour to say: "You've got to provide light jobs in Sudbury." I can't even do that in my own city.

Mr. Martel: Well, it is my information, Mr. Minister, in talking with people from the Workmen's Compensation Board, that Inco is not paying the full rehabilitation.

Mr. Chairman: Order please, the question was answered.

Mr. Martel: I am talking about people, Mr. Chairman—I am talking about people in authority down at the board. They tell me that Inco is not paying the full shot for rehabilitation.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Well, that is their memo here.

Mr. Martel: I am sorry, one of them came to have lunch with me within the last two weeks.

Mr. Carruthers: You had lunch with him.

Mr. Martel: My colleague from Sudbury and I met with an official of that department, and we had lunch.

An hon. member: Who bought?

Mr. Martel: He did. He is on a tab.

Mr. Gilbertson: Big-hearted Inco again.

Mr. G. Nixon (Dovercourt): Free-loading again!

Mr. Martel: He tells me that Inco, in fact, is not paying the full tab for rehabilitation. I would like to know who is right, the minister or Mr. MacDonald. Maybe Mr. MacDonald could advise us as to whether or not Inco pays the full shot for rehabilitation. My understanding is it doesn't. The minister says they do and people in his rehab department say they don't.

Mr. Carruthers: What did the member have for lunch?

Mr. Martel: I had a beer.

Mr. G. Nixon: Is that all?

Mr. Martel: That's all. I am a light eater.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, this situation does exist also in southwestern Ontario. It is well known that if an injured workman is put off on a basis of percentage disability, he just has trouble getting employment.

It is a fact that once it is known that he has had a compensation case, his application does not get consideration whatsoever. What we have to do is to find some way to put added pressure, more incentive, or whichever word you want to use, on industry to stop the blacklisting of a person who has been established on a compensation claim and give him some recognition.

The minister has referred to other provinces, and taken credit for the fact that he feels that Ontario has one of the best Workmen's Compensation programmes in North America. You can say that may be true, but it always seems that we just catch up and then we are left behind. Sometime or other, Ontario, as one of the most industrialized and one of the richest provinces or states in North America, should at least sometimes take the lead. I think this is something that should give them the right to take the lead.

Has the minister obtained a copy of the task force report from Judge Alistair Muir of Moose Jaw, Sask., set up in November, 1971, by Labour Minister Gordon Snyder of Saskatchewan, who tabled the report in April of this year? Has the minister had a copy of that report? He is going to see before this year is out Ontario may be so far behind in enlightened legislation in regard to injured workmen that he won't be able to give us the same story when he comes back next year.

On this subject we are talking about now, one of the key recommendations of the report involves a completely new compensation system with increased benefits. It involves the payment of two types of benefits, a flat rate related to the type of injury or extensive disability, and an income maintenance allowance to ensure that an injured worker who returns to a lesser paying job, or no job at all, still receives 75 per cent of his former salary. That's the subject we are talking about now.

If we make the industries in this province pay 75 per cent of his compensation until he finds a job, they'll start to rehire them or they will come to some conclusion, if you make them pay the shot.

The reason they won't take them back is you don't make them pay the shot. One can assume why. When a guy who is off on a temporarily disability he gets 75 per cent of his wages and is then said to be 20 per cent disabled. He is thrown into the market and he can't get a job. If he could get a job, under our Act they will pick up the difference between his wages and 75 per cent of it. But he just can't get a job, so he gets nothing. He has then to end up on welfare, as has been said many times.

I have done some research to find out how many are getting welfare as well as their small pittance of a pension, and there is quite a number of them. This is what has to be done. You are going to have to look to industry. You are going to have to start and co-operate in both the retraining and rehab programmes and in finding them work.

Under the rehab programmes, you know as well as I do, that your rehab people won't consider one for retraining if he hasn't got something like grade 12, unless there are relative qualifications in some job that they can fit him into, because industry just won't take him unless he has grade 12 and most of them don't. Therefore your rehab doesn't look at them. They will go and see them and build up their hopes and ask them what they would like to be, but they will just keep saying to them you won't qualify.

The whole nub of the thing comes down to the fact that we have got to say to the industry that we are going to keep on paying these people 75 per cent of their entitlement until they get a job. It might mean a little more of an imposition on this department in terms of policing; but it has to be done, because there is too much suffering in terms of income and on a psychological basis as far as an injured workman is concerned. I am sure that if this kind of a recommendation is put into effect in Saskatchewan based on that report—and I think it will be, along with several others, which I won't read now and take up time because they are not relative to this particular section—but that is the way we have to make industry pay—

Mr. Chairman: Order please! The member has used up all the time there is right now.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): I would move that the committee rise and report, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if I might ask, are we ready for this question first? Can we place the question on this particular amendment?

Those in favour of Mr. Bounsall's motion will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay." In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Shall we stack this one too? Agreed.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, when you interrupted my comments you said we had now come to the end of the time, that it was time to adjourn. I took that to mean I couldn't speak any longer because we were going to adjourn, but then you put the vote. Okay, I will agree with it, and I won't argue, but I want to assure you I will raise this question at some length under the next proper order under compensation.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the committee rise and report.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House reports one bill with a certain amendment and progress on another and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, before I move the adjournment of the House I would like to say that tomorrow we will proceed to the conclusion of these two bills, Bills 126 and 127, to be followed by item 11 and item 12. Then, I trust, it will be followed by items 3, 4, 5 and 8.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Before that motion to adjourn is put, items 11 and 12 are marked on the order paper as "not printed."

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Before the motion is put, may I ask the House leader if we get through this are we going to go on with the Ministry of Agriculture and Food either tomorrow afternoon or tomorrow evening, specifically tomorrow evening?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I would expect not, and I would expect that on Friday morning we would deal with the budget debate.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 7, 1973

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our visitors today in the east gallery are students from Johnson Central School of Desbarats and McNab Public School of Amprior; in the west gallery there is a group of ladies from Middlesex North and students from Centennial Senior Public School of Brampton. At 3 o'clock we will be joined in the east gallery by students from Bellemore Public School of Binbrook, and in the west gallery, students from Huttonville Public School of Huttonville, hosting students from Stittsville Public School of Stittsville.

Statements by the ministry.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Premier): Mr. Speaker, before making a statement I would like to inform the House that a day or so ago on behalf of the people and government of the province I sent a telegram to Her Royal Highness Princess Anne extending to her our warmest good wishes on her engagement. I am sure that other hon. members in this House would want to share in that telegram—

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Let's make it unanimous.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): Unanimous consent.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —recognizing as we do, the very strong relationship between this province and our systems here and, of course, the United Kingdom and the monarchy.

Mr. Speaker, I have a statement and I would ask the members opposite to exercise their usual degree of patience. It is not a short statement, but it is one that I believe to be highly significant.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): The Premier is resigning, is he?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not today.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): We all look forward to the day.

ONTARIO ENERGY POLICY

Hon. Mr. Davis: I should like to comment, Mr. Speaker, on the urgent need for a national energy policy. But first there are some considerations affecting the administration of energy in this province with which I would like to deal.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to introduce five bills to the Legislature and to table three documents. The five bills are as follows: An Act to amend the Power Commission Act; An Act to amend the Ontario Energy Board Act; the Ministry of Energy Act, 1973; An Act to repeal the Power Control Act; An Act to amend the Power Commission Insurance Amendment Act, 1973.

The documents which I am tabling are as follows: Ontario Hydro's proposed generation development programme 1977-1982; secondly, the Task Force Hydro report No. 4 entitled, "Hydro in Ontario: Financial Policy and Rates"; thirdly, a report directed to me bearing upon energy policy needs in Ontario and prepared by my parliamentary assistant, the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough).

Mr. Speaker, the Acts to repeal the Power Control Act and to amend the Power Commission Insurance Amendment Act, 1973, are housekeeping measures only and require no further comment at this time.

Three of the Acts and all of the documents do require brief comment, however.

First, the amendments to the Power Commission Act designated Ontario Hydro as a corporation rather than a commission in recognition of the argument advanced by Task Force Hydro that the corporate designation and the concept of a board of directors is appropriate to Ontario Hydro's re-defined role and its new relationship to the government.

Under these amendments Ontario Hydro will, very properly, continue to be accountable to the Legislature. It will continue to be charged with delivering power at cost and with serving the best interests of all the people of this province. The corporate structure, however, will emphasize Hydro's operational independence and strengthen its ability to be progressive and to conduct its affairs in accordance with the best principles of enlightened commercial enterprise.

At the same time this Act, in conjunction with others being introduced today, will permit the government to develop an overall policy for energy within which Ontario Hydro would operate. No longer is it appropriate for policy for electrical energy to be made without reference to policy on other forms of energy.

I should underline that Hydro's new corporate structure will not impair the fundamental relationship which it has always enjoyed with the municipally owned distribution utilities.

Some weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, I announced that the government would work with those concerned to assess the appropriateness of the boundaries of local electrical commissions in order to provide the best service within a given area. Further, I stated that in areas where regional government has been or is to be established, each local circumstance would be evaluated to determine the appropriate tier of regional government to which a local electrical commission should relate.

I am pleased to be able to announce today that the membership and terms of reference for the executive committee for the restructuring of public utilities have been established and that the committee will begin its work shortly. In brief, this committee will be responsible for developing principles and guidelines within which the restructuring will take place across the province. I anticipate the committee will complete its work by the fall of this year at which time detailed technical studies and restructuring at the local level can get under way.

I should emphasize, Mr. Speaker, the importance of this project and the commitment the government has made for local involvement in the individual studies which will commence once the overall guidelines have been established. I should also say that where similar studies are now in progress it is our hope that these can be integrated in to this province-wide study.

Mr. Speaker, the government has accepted the concept of rate review for electricity rates as recommended by Task Force Hydro in its report on Hydro in Ontario: Financial Policy and Rates. I am tabling that report today and commend it to the attention of hon. members. This report deals with an enormously complex topic; it suggests a new approach to the establishment of electricity rates which would involve public participation while enabling Hydro to maintain financial stability.

The Energy Board Act will be amended to extend the responsibilities of the Ontario Energy Board to include a review of Ontario Hydro rates. At the same time the size of the board will be enlarged to enable it to deal effectively with its new responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, we can be justifiably proud of Ontario Hydro's excellent performance as a public utility. Its record is equalled by few utilities in North America and around the world, and envied by many. That we have been well served by Ontario Hydro and the municipal electrical commissions should not be overlooked or taken for granted. Its record is the result of people dedicated to serving the public and they have served it well.

We must not be complacent, however, and we must be prepared to make adjustments. It is with this in mind that the amendments to the Power Commission Act and the Energy Board Act are being introduced today.

The government is dedicated to ensuring adequate supplies of electricity at cost to the people of Ontario. To achieve that goal requires careful planning. Mr. Speaker, I am tabling today an example of the kind of planning required, namely a copy of Ontario Hydro's generation development programme for the period 1977-1982.

While it is the government's intention that such programmes be reviewed in future by the Ontario Energy Board, in conjunction with applications for rate changes, the necessary machinery is not yet in place and will not be for some months. As a consequence, the government has decided not to hold up vital decisions which must be made now if we are to ensure continuity of supply in the future, by waiting for the necessary review machinery.

The government approves in principle this programme, subject to the usual individual project approval procedures, so that Ontario Hydro can proceed with detailed planning. In addition the programme will be referred to the Ontario Energy Board for review and as a basis for evaluating Ontario Hydro rates.

Mr. Speaker, I have tabled, for your consideration, a report on energy prepared by the member for Chatham-Kent, my parliamentary assistant. This report is the product of an intensive study and shows a keen awareness and understanding of the issues facing us today in the field of energy. It is my hope and expectation that this report will be reviewed and debated by members of the Legislature when these bills are brought before the House.

When I asked the member to take on this task, I requested that he recommend an administrative and policy structure which would best serve the people of Ontario relative to the supply, security and price of energy.

As you will recollect, the advisory committee on energy proposed that a Ministry of Energy should be formed. For reasons which the member has enunciated in his report, and has elaborated in conversations with me, he felt that at this time an energy secretariat should be established reporting to the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Lawrence).

I esteem and respect his views. I am, however, persuaded that the concerns that relate to energy and the critical importance of energy to the life of this province would best be served by the establishment of a new ministry.

Mr. Sargent: It can't be any worse than the one we've got.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member's report proposes action which, while directed to an energy secretariat, can be applied equally to a ministry. It is my view that these proposals form the basis for a new Ontario energy policy.

The provincial government has shown foresight in the matter of energy. Long before the problems of energy and price had intensified, this government had correctly read the trends and had put its technical and professional people to work.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Congratulations.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But in spite of the foresight and preparedness of the government of Ontario, I would be less than frank if I failed to warn hon. members that I am deeply concerned as to the security of supply of energy and at a reasonable price. This concern stems from a policy vacuum in Ottawa and the inappropriateness for these times of what is called our national energy policy.

In my view a national energy policy is an energy policy that best serves the people of Canada—the national interest and not some other nation.

On March 9 of this year, the member for Chatham-Kent made a speech in Sarnia in which he proposed that a three-price system for natural gas should be considered—a price for the producing province, a higher price for other provinces of Canada and a higher price for the export market.

The federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources promptly announced that the government of Canada would not become involved in natural gas pricing. He suggested that price "would be settled by negotiation between the producers and the consumers."

I would ask this question, Mr. Speaker: Whether this statement was really intended to serve the national interest? If it was, it did not long survive the pressures of reality. On May 17, in the House of Commons, the same federal minister announced that a two-price system for oil and oil products, designed to prevent Canadian consumers from bearing the cost of the US energy shortage, was being given close scrutiny by the federal government.

I find myself, Mr. Speaker, increasingly wondering what nationhood and national policy means to the present government of Canada. I think it is reasonable to conclude that one of the prime objectives of a federal union such as that of Canada is to achieve a whole—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): What is the Premier's French policy? Is he with Diefenbaker or Stanfield?

Mr. Roy: The Premier was so concerned that he put on a seven per cent tax.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Why does the Premier always blame those terrible guys in Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not saying they are terrible. I think it is a very important issue. Very important.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): Why don't the members be quiet?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it is reasonable to conclude—

Mr. Sargent: The Premier's on a real toboggan slide and he is blaming Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: Order

Hon. Mr. Davis: —that one of the prime objectives of a federal union such as that of Canada is to achieve a whole that is greater than the sum of its parts. One of the things that it offers the constituent provinces is access to a large, national, free-trade area.

Indeed this is made explicit by section 121 of the British North America Act which states in part:

All articles of growth, produce or manufacture of any one of the provinces shall . . . be admitted free into each of the other provinces.

Certainly this section of the constitution must have a relevance to differential pricing of natural resources as between the producing and consuming provinces within the federal state. Irrespective of what the legal interpretation may prove to be, the intent, in my view, is crystal clear.

And as for the legal interpretation, I quote with approval the statement in the report of the member for Chatham-Kent that reads as follows:

In a federal state such as Canada, it should not be necessary to explicitly state that the interests of the component parts must be subordinated to the interests of the whole. If there is a difference of opinion as to the national interest, implying a difference of interpretation as to the terms of the constitution of the nation, the seeking of a judgement as to the constitutionality of an action is to support the national interest.

I note with approval also the member for Chatham-Kent's proposal that Ontario should take such steps as are necessary to test the constitutionality of actions relative to the terms of trade in energy that have been taken or are proposed by the government of Alberta and that are not in the national interest.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Well, well.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I hasten to add that this action could be a direct activity by this province or it could be success in pressing the government of Canada to recognize its clear responsibility in the area of energy policy.

Clearly, it is not enough for the Prime Minister of Canada to state, as he is reported to have done a few weeks ago, that the price of natural gas is a problem which Ontario and Alberta must settle between themselves. Is this national leadership? Does this show an understanding or concern for the national interest? I think not.

Mr. Roy: What about the seven per cent tax?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The responsibility of the government of Canada is perfectly clear.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Is the Premier aspiring to some office?

Mr. Lewis: He is rounding up delegate votes with this speech; that's what he is doing. He is testing people. Lougheed has got a contest on his hands.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not in Alberta.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): The Premier is bringing the member for Chatham-Kent in and he is moving out.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier is not becoming energy minister; he is only the Premier.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Alberta and Ontario are members of this federal union. Alberta has gas and petroleum and Ontario historically has been a major buyer. That Alberta can enhance its provincial income by sharply increasing the price to Ontario is as obvious as the fact that the improved economic circumstances in Alberta will be achieved through the direct deterioration of economic circumstances in this province. But this involves more than Alberta and Ontario, because these deteriorations and offsetting improvements cannot fail to have an impact on the national federation.

The desire of Alberta to build an industrial base that will continue to sustain its economy and employ its people after the hydrocarbon resources have been fully exploited is, from our standpoint, completely understandable. That there must be increases in price that relate to increases in costs is, in no sense, a legal or moral contravention of the intent of Confederation. We do not suggest that it is and that is not what we are talking about.

Canada has large available and potential energy sources. The United States has a crisis in terms of presently available energy supplies. The pressure of demand within that country has had two measurable and obvious effects: It has resulted in a strong upward pressure on prices; it has encouraged the international oil companies to range widely in search of petroleum in remote and costly areas, including Canada's Arctic regions. Alberta, understandably, feels it should benefit from this imported crisis or, at a minimum, not receive a lower price than will be paid to the government of Canada for resources in the Territories.

Production costs, however, Mr. Speaker, have not risen in proportion to the proposed price increase. In insisting on building the anticipated prices of a decade from now into the prices of today, Alberta is driving up the cost of gas and petroleum to all Canadian consumers. The small fraction of the proposed increase goes to the people of Alberta and the big fraction passes as a windfall profit to the international petroleum companies.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Surely, Mr. Speaker, there is an Alice-in-Wonderland quality in all of this!

Mr. Lewis: There certainly is!

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Through the Looking Glass.

Mr. Lewis: Take a look at your resources tax through Alice in Wonderland.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Martel: Just $16 million in Ontario last year.

Hon. Mr. Davis: How does this fit with the national—

Mr. Lewis: It verges on Ripley!

Hon. Mr. Davis: How does this fit with the national industrial strategy, assuming we have one? And is it integral to whatever may emerge eventually as our national energy policy in Canada, that the international oil companies should be permitted to write the music that we are obliged to play?

Mr. Martel: The pot calling the kettle black.

Hon. Mr. Davis: As a case in point, as recently as March—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It has more juice than the Premier's usual speeches.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member likes this better, does he?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Yes.

Mr. Reid: The same old nonsense, though.

Hon. Mr. Davis: See, the leader likes it better. He agrees with it. As a case in point—

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): This is going to be known as the Walrus and the Carpenter speech. The Premier is the walrus and the member for Chatham-Kent is the carpenter.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say this, that I have always regarded carpentry as a very honest and creative profession, and I would say this for my parliamentary assistant, he is extremely creative as well as being extremely able.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: As a case in point, as recently as March of this year, the chairman of the National Energy Board advised the natural resources committee of the House of Commons in Ottawa that Canadian natural gas was being sold to consumers in the United States at a price that was significantly below the price being paid by American consumers for alternative sources of energy. After selling natural gas at bargain prices to American consumers, the apparent proposal is to recoup from Ontario consumers.

Mr. Speaker, the price system clearly should not be permitted to undermine the solid industrial base of Ontario and Quebec, if only because both represent an industrial presence which enriches all of Canada. At the same time, the understandable aspirations of Alberta should not be frustrated. But to satisfy those aspirations calls for not an inter-provincial solution but a national solution. Ontario, like Alberta, is awaiting national leadership.

Mr. Martel: It has been a long time.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If it is not forthcoming, the governments of Ontario and Alberta, in the public interest, must try to contribute some coherence to industrial and energy planning in Canada. If that means our two provinces must test the constitution in front of the courts we cannot avoid it.

I do not wish that there should be any misunderstanding as to what I am saying.

Mr. Lewis: There's not.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am announcing very firmly our determination that there should be a reference to the courts and a decision as to the legal intent of the constitution on this matter. We are doing so in the interests of this nation, and we are doing so to fill the lack of leadership at the national level.

We fully acknowledge that—

Mr. Sargent: Better put your name in the ring.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, the member for Downsview will support this, I am sure. So will the member for Sarnia.

Mr. Singer: I have been trying to get a policy from the Premier for a long time. Is the Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Kerr) going to issue the writ?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't know.

We acknowledge that Alberta, and all other provinces in Canada, share the same claim we are asserting as Canadians to the natural resources of Canada. Ontario has rich resources—uranium, nickel, copper, iron ore. We insist that resources in Ontario are Canadian resources, with all that this connotes. Only secondly should they be available to the markets of the world.

Mr. Martel: If the government would only stop giving them away.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): They are not controlled by Canadians.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In terms of prices for these resources, we are well content to support the national interest through supporting the best interests of our sister provinces in Canada in the disposition, at a reasonable price, of the resources that chance to fall within Ontario's borders.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): The Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier) will remember that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I remember it well, and I want to say this to the hon. member, this statement required a great deal of very careful thought. I hope he understands the implications of what is being said.

Mr. Stokes: I am just telling the Minister of Natural Resources.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The readiness of this province, Mr. Speaker, to support the broad interests of nationhood are not a sudden inspiration born of the problems of energy supply. We have supported the policy of making equalization payments to the less economically favoured regions of Canada for decades past.

We readily accepted the cost to Ontario users of the national oil policy of 1961, which was designed to ensure there would be the rich Ontario market for the products of the oilfields of Alberta. We supported the building of a pipeline to connect the Alberta gas fields to consumers in central Canada at a time when cheaper gas was available from the United States.

When we brought forward legislation designed to reduce the export of concentrates and minerals in a relatively unprocessed state, we required that the additional processing should be done in this country. The mining companies are fully able to satisfy the requirements of our legislation by processing in any province of Canada ore that has been produced in Ontario.

Mr. Singer: Here comes Peter now with his army.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Once again our pre-occupation is with the national interest. Canada, as a nation, has a vested interest in secure supplies of energy at a reasonable price. We must achieve both goals and not do it at the expense of the producing regions. We must do it without confrontation or tension.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is producing a lot of tension today.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have said before, and I now repeat, that we should have a national conference and the representatives of all of the people of Canada should jointly address themselves to these problems. Nothing that has happened since I made that proposal has encouraged me to alter my view.

In recent days reports have been prominent in the newspapers of the inability of American automobile owners to gain needed supplies of gasoline. The United States is deeply concerned as to security of supply of energy. All the projections visualize a steep rise in prices for petroleum and natural gas.

The seriousness of a real crisis in energy—whether this relates to supply or price—is difficult, Mr. Speaker, to exaggerate. Energy is crucial to our industries and to the employment of our people. It is a vital necessity for the physical comfort and well-being and, indeed, the physical survival of the people of this country.

Canada is in the remarkably fortunate position that it has large reserves of fossil fuels. Supplies are concentrated in certain regions.

Obviously the owners of this energy must receive an appropriate return for the sale of this non-renewable resource. Supplies are regional, but the demand, and I believe the interest, is national.

The users of that resource must have access to this energy at a price that is reasonable in terms of all concerned and that is not unduly influenced by the style of life or management of energy resources in other nations of the world. To permit the impact of problems from abroad to determine supply and price in Canada is to permit the management of our own economy and our own lifestyle to be transferred to other hands beyond the borders of this country.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come, come. What about the mining sector? What about secondary manufacturing?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No one can reasonably expect the design of an effective national policy to be easy. World prices and projected future prices do influence current prices in Canada for domestic resources. Alberta, as I have observed, must not be placed in a disadvantageous position relative to the return it gains from its indigenous and non-renewable resources. But Canada must not be placed in a position that results in the serious disruption of its industries. Energy is absolutely fundamental to the life of the nation. The problem I emphasize, Mr. Speaker, is national. The policy must be national.

While the first responsibility of this government and this Legislature is to think of the people of Ontario, I am now urging that all of us think of the welfare of Canada. To think regionally or parochially is inappropriate in this context. To think of the short-term expedient is to prejudice the long-term welfare of Canada.

This problem must be soberly addressed by Canadians of goodwill in all parts of this country, by all parties of Canada and at all levels of government. Any expedient, Mr. Speaker, that falls short of such a full national commitment will be inadequate.

Thank you.

EXPANSION OF PARK FACILITIES IN BRUCE AREA

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Natural Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce a decision of the government to increase public park facilities in the Bruce county area along the Lake Huron shore.

For the past several years, increasing public pressure on the facilities of the 550-acre Inverhuron Park has made it clear that additional park space would be required to serve the needs of the public by expanding overnight camping facilities, as well as those required for day use.

As I previously indicated to this House, officials of my ministry have held discussions with representatives of Ontario Hydro with a view to embarking upon a joint programme both to meet these goals and, as well, to provide Hydro with the necessary green belt area it needs to surround the enlarged nuclear hydro facilities announced today.

An agreement has been reached whereby Ontario Hydro will join with my ministry in acquiring 1,800 acres of land at MacGregor Point, approximately 10 miles north of Inverhuron Park, near the community of Port Elgin.

The new park is expected to be fully operational by 1975. Until then, Inverhuron Park will remain open to the public as an overnight camping area.

After 1975, the swimming and picnic areas and open park space now occupied by campers will remain available to the public free of charge.

My ministry will continue to maintain the facility although the land will be owned by Ontario Hydro.

The new park will contain more than three times the acreage of the existing Inverhuron Park which will permit my ministry to develop a larger and more elaborate park facility than has been available to the public in Bruce county.

At the present time, approximately 500 acres required for the MacGregor Point site are already owned by my ministry. The remaining lands to be acquired will be purchased in the near future.

Those presently occupying cottage lots in the MacGregor Point area who wish to sell their lots to the government may do so immediately. Others, who wish to continue their occupancy, will be permitted to do so under an arrangement to be established between the cottage owners and the government.

AMENDMENTS TO LIQUOR LAWS

Hon. J. T. Clement (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): Mr. Speaker, on Nov. 24 last year I announced to the House that my ministry was undertaking a fundamental review of Ontario's liquor legislation.

At that time the members of this House were invited to participate in the review, as well as citizens' groups, beverage alcohol producers, licensees and other interested parties.

A review of the liquor policy is still continuing. However, I would like to announce to the House today my intention to introduce amendments to the Liquor Licence and Liquor Control Acts to deal with some of the more pressing problems that we have encountered to date.

The amendments we are proposing have not been designed to increase consumption of alcoholic beverages but rather to eliminate some of the inequities that exist under the current legislation.

At present the ordinary citizen who is not a member of a private club often does not have the same access to licensed premises as the private club member. To remove this inequity, one of the amendments that will be announced today will permit the licensing of public recreational facilities such as golf, curling and skiing clubs in all areas of the province as well as private clubs—

Mr. Shulman: Does the minister think that won't increase consumption?

Hon. Mr. Clement: —which already have licensing privileges. Other amendments to the Liquor Licence Act will permit the licensing of canteens in universities, convalescent homes, police messes, old age homes and similar institutions throughout Ontario.

Mr. Shulman: The government will need $100 million for the increase in alcoholism.

Hon. Mr. Clement: The proposed amendment to the Liquor Control Act will permit the Liquor Control Board to issue voluntary identification cards for young adults. Having lowered the drinking age to 18, I think it is also our responsibility to assist in making that age limit enforceable.

Briefs submitted to us have demonstrated that identifying individuals who have attained the age of 18 years has become a serious problem to the operators of licensed premises.

Licensees can lose their livelihood if they fail to identify properly customers who are not of legal drinking age. As a consequence, licensees have sometimes refused to serve those who have a right to service under the existing legislation because identification was either not available or believed to be false.

In response to submissions from both parties involved in these difficulties, we have agreed to set up a system of voluntary identification cards which will be made available at a large number of Ontario liquor stores.

As our review of liquor legislation continues, I hope to be able to introduce further amendments to our liquor legislation and complete our deliberations as soon as possible.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

SHORELINE PROPERTY ASSISTANCE ACT

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Government Services): Mr. Speaker, I know many of the hon. members have been inquiring regarding the printed copies of the Act covering shoreline property assistance. These have now been forwarded to the municipalities along with a memorandum from the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs. I have made arrangements today, Mr. Speaker, to have the pages place a copy of the Act and regulations on each member's desk.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions. The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

ONTARIO ENERGY POLICY

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I regret the Premier is not available to answer questions on his lengthy statement.

Mr. Roy: Energy is too important for the Premier.

An hon. member: Ask the member for Chatham-Kent.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Perhaps you could indicate to me, sir, which of the ministers might be best equipped to comment on it? I would presume it would be the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development, but I also have the very strong feeling that only the parliamentary assistant had anything to do with the establishment of policy and the writing of the finer points in the speech.

Perhaps you could help me, Mr. Speaker, in indicating who the question should be directed to?

Mr. Roy: Energy is too important for the Provincial Secretary.

An hon. member: What did he say?

Mr. Speaker: I must assure the hon. member I am not certain. I think he must choose the—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Then we'll just take a shot at the barn door, and—

Mr. Sargent: Pick a number!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: —I'll direct the question to the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development.

Mr. Roy: He doesn't want it; he doesn't want anything to do with it.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Can he indicate what the timetable will be before the government will decide that, in fact, the national policy vacuum is not being corrected in the view of this government, and will take action to enter into a legal test of the right of the Province of Alberta to set the cost of natural gas energy?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I presume, Mr. Speaker, that the timetable will depend entirely upon the response of the federal government and the Province of Alberta to the policy statement just made this afternoon.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: Can the minister indicate what sort of a response would be expected which would cause Ontario to hesitate in entering into the suit that the Premier has threatened in this statement? Would it be necessary for the government of Canada to say, "Yes, we are prepared to set prices for all Canadians for the payment of natural gas taken from our own resources"?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: As I recall the statement, the Premier categorically reasserted his request for a national conference on the subject. I don't know that they are necessarily exclusive, but my understanding of that was that if a national policy could be arrived at, the position of Ontario would not require litigation at this point.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: That means that if a conference is called, then the Premier will not direct his legal officers to proceed with the suit on behalf of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I can't say that, Mr. Speaker, because the calling of a conference is not the same as the establishment of a national policy.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Again, supplementary: Are we to assume then that this statement is just some sort of political sabre-rattling, or is the government prepared to go forward with a suit unless specific action is taken by the government of Canada, and if so, what is the specific action?

Mr. Sargent: Right. Right.

Mr. Roy: Why is the Premier not here to answer questions?

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): He'll be back; he'll be back.

Mr. Sargent: Get him back in here!

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I think the statement is pretty clear, and that is the assertion by this government that if the government of Canada does not provide the leadership and the policy required, then we will litigate.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, could the secretary tell us why we are deprived of the presence of the Premier when he has delivered what he, at least, believes is a very serious and important policy statement, and why he favours this House with only 23 minutes of his attendance today, which is in keeping with his terrible attendance record over the last month and one-half? In fact, for this week—

An hon. member: Hip hip for the Legislature!

Mr. Singer: —he was in for 33 minutes on Monday, he wasn't in at all on Tuesday—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Singer: —and he was in for no time on Wednesday.

Mr. Sargent: You don't want to hear it, eh?

Mr. Singer: Would the secretary tell us why the Premier treats the Legislature with disdain?

Mr. Speaker: I think this is not a proper question to direct to the secretary.

Mr. Singer: Well, who can give that answer.

Mr. Speaker: I think it's not a proper question for this question period.

Mr. Roy: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, which I trust won't be taken out of the question period time—

Mr. Speaker: Any points of order during the question period constitute part of the question period.

Mr. Lewis: Ah, here comes the Premier; then we don't have to pursue this point.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if I might direct the questions to the only man over there who apparently—

Mr. Singer: We'll start over again.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: —knows for sure what he was talking about, and perhaps we'll get some clarification.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: What action by the government of Canada is necessary that would make the Premier decide that it was not necessary for Ontario to proceed with legal action that would attempt to forestall the Province of Alberta from controlling the price of natural gas coming from its own resources? Would it be enough that a conference be called or is it necessary that the government of Canada take over the fixing of these prices for Canadian utilization?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I don't think it would be a question necessarily of the government of Canada; I would think it would be a national policy that would put the national interest in proper perspective and put it first.

I can't suggest to the government of Canada how it might best develop and administer a national policy as it relates to energy. I think, of course, one mechanism would be through the National Energy Board. If there were a national policy, I think the National Energy Board could quite effectively deal with it.

But I don't think that at this stage Ontario is suggesting to the federal government how it might be done. I think it is suggesting—I hope it was fairly clear in the statement—that some form of national policy is absolutely essential. The structure or the mechanics, in my view, Mr. Speaker, are matters that can be sorted out.

What we need at this moment is a recognition by the federal government that to say that Alberta and Ontario—with a resource as important to us and the rest of Canada as natural gas and oil—will negotiate as between producer and consumer within a federated country like Canada, I say with respect, Mr. Speaker, is not appropriate.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: How can the Premier, having put forward policies in the two years of his premiership that have allowed the continued exportation of our natural resources for manufacture in the United States, accuse the government of Canada, as he did on page 11 of his statement, of having a national energy policy which is designed not in our national interest, but in the interest of some other nation, which must mean, obviously the United States? Surely that is an irresponsible statement?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, with respect, it is not irresponsible at all. I made it very clear in my statement—

Mr. Bullbrook: It is hypocritical.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is not hypocritical. I am saying—

Mr. Lewis: It is Alice in Wonderland, that is what it is.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say, Mr. Speaker, let's take uranium as an energy source that we have in this province—

Mr. Foulds: The Premier has already given up control to the federal government.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: If it hadn't been for Trudeau it would have been controlled by the United States now.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, with great respect, no. I am saying that if there is a natural resource—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Ask Steve Roman about that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If there is a natural resource that we have available within this province that can be utilized by one of our sister provinces, our sister province should have priority prior to exportation. I think that is part of a very logical approach to it and it is not inconsistent. If one of our sister provinces can utilize, say iron ore from north-western Ontario, we have no objection to this. Not only do we not have any objection, we would support with enthusiasm iron ore being refined, or whatever one does with iron ore, in one of our sister provinces.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What we are saying is that where there is a natural resource—and we are using energy as obviously one of the very crucial ones—where there is a need in this country, the national interests and the need within this country must be served before the international interests. We don't believe this is hypocritical at all as it relates to our own policy, not one bit.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The Premier is not the only politician who ever thought of this.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: While the Premier is negotiating with Alberta and while he is negotiating with Ottawa, and while he is launching a lawsuit, what is he going to do about preventing the export of further energy resources from Ontario; what is he going to do about calling in the head offices of the oil companies located here to talk about the price system; what is he going to do to prevent rationing within the next two months; what, in other words, is he going to do about dealing with the energy crisis in Ontario while it is upon us, rather than issuing grandiose pronouncements?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, trying to deal with one question at a time, I think it was made abundantly clear three or four days ago—and I would say, Mr. Speaker, this relates to a national energy policy—we do not have the legal or constitutional capacity to deal with the problem that has been raised by the hon. member and he fully knows it.

Mr. Lewis: The government certainly does. It can do many things about it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We do not! And I would say, Mr. Speaker, that once again the question of exportation say of gasoline, is something that comes within the federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Lewis: The government can control prices in this province and not make it profitable.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the question of rationing, availability—

Mr. Lewis: But then it is no longer profitable.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —has to be related to the national jurisdiction.

Mr. Lewis: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is true.

Mr. Lewis: It will disappear while the Premier is negotiating. He solves none of the present problems.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Ottawa East; supplementary?

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Premier who the new energy minister is going to be; secondly, will it be the member for Chatham-Kent; thirdly, will he be reporting to the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development or is energy too important for him?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I make this observation, because I know the hon. member is very sincere in the questions that he asks, always. I would say this, that the member for Chatham-Kent could handle this very difficult responsibility without any question whatsoever.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He has the capacity to do it. If the hon. member will assess very carefully the structure of government which he completely supports he will understand that no minister reports to another minister.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Minister of Energy obviously would operate within the policy field and the policy field committee chaired by the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development. If the member for Ottawa East would try to understand the structure of government, which I admit is complicated—

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): As long as the Premier is over there.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —he will understand that no minister reports to another minister. I hope that answers his question in some detail.

Mr. Roy: How can the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development be in charge when he doesn't know anything about the Premier's statement?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Riverdale with a supplementary.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question, do I take the Premier's reference to the uranium resources of the Province of Ontario as an intention on his part to reclaim from the federal government jurisdiction over the uranium resources in this province, which was given up many years ago?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He can hardly bring himself to report to the Premier.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, Mr. Speaker, obviously that would be contradictory to what I have said here this afternoon. I'm saying, if we had a resource that was within our jurisdiction related to energy or some other natural resource, and if we had a surplus and if there was a need in one of our sister provinces, their need should be served before some other nation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview was up previously on a supplementary.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Premier could tell us to what extent he feels he is now committed to launching a constitutional question before the courts? Is there any deadline? Have instructions been given either to the legal officers of the Crown or to someone else to commence such proceedings at a specific date, or what is the status?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member for Downsview any specific dates. I can only say that the question of a reference or the testing of constitutionality of the situation is being actively pursued. When I have further information I shall make it available to him just as soon as possible, assuming it is in the public interest to do so.

Mr. Roy: Maybe the Premier could get a legal opinion.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Justice Laskin has been waiting for this kind of case for years.

Mr. Shulman: Will the Premier explain his statement of a few moments ago, in which he said he did not have the power to stop our gas and oil being exported? How does he relate that to the power which he took upon himself some two years ago, or his government took upon itself, when it stopped our raw materials from being shipped to Norway and the United States for refining?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I cannot trot out the constitution nor should I really venture into the area of giving legal opinions.

An hon. member: The Premier is a lawyer, isn't he?

Mr. Lewis: What this statement lacks is any plan for Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am informed that we do not have the constitutional ability to say to a retailer or a distributor of refined gasoline that he cannot sell in a jurisdiction outside Ontario.

Mr. Shulman: But the government did exactly the same thing with nickel ore.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, if this is not to be window dressing and to have more to it than that escarpment mess the Premier presented to the House, in view of the fact that he has said the government is going to take the gutsy approach to go to court on these issues, is the Premier prepared, yes or no, to protect our people here and to put a ceiling on prices of energies like gas and oil until the courts make a decision? Are we going to be protected in the meantime?

Mr. Lewis: There is nothing for Ontario in the meantime,

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will try not to take too long in answering this question. For us to put a ceiling on gas, oil or what have you as a single provincial jurisdiction, I think it must be obvious even to the hon. member, would be completely impractical.

Mr. Sargent: Why?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Foulds: Shame! The government put a price on beer and it put a price on liquor.

Hon. Mr. Davis: To have a ceiling on gas and oil, when the supply comes from outside our own province, can't be done here unless it is done in other provinces in Canada.

Mr. Roy: How can you raise taxes?

Mr. Lewis: The government is not doing it because of its friends; that's why.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is not why at all.

Mr. Lewis: Because William Kelly sits in on a meeting with Imperial Oil, that is why the government is not doing it. It can put a unit price system in effect across Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The hon. member is on one of his flights of fancy.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): They've done it in BC.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He is really missing the point altogether.

Mr. Lewis: Not at all. The Premier has been missing it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is, I'm sure, obvious even to him, whether it's energy supply or anything else, that to have a system of price or wage controls—and you can't really consider with respect, one without the other—

Mr. Lewis: The government can put a unit price on gasoline in this province.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Just a minute, you can't consider one without the other.

Mr. Cassidy: The government did it for beer, so why not gas?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It cannot be done in a practical way unless it is done nationally. I would say this for the Prime Minister of Canada, that I believe he accepts this point of view. I also believe it is fair to state, to interpret him—

Mr. Lewis: They are not going to give up in Ontario because we put limits on their prices.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—and to interpret the Minister of Finance, in answer to the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, that they feel that there is not, at this time—and this was what was stated at the federal-provincial conference—need for price and wage controls. This is their national assessment of the problem.

I indicated at the conference, and I will repeat it here, that if the time comes when the federal government believes there is, in fact, a necessity, Ontario went on the record as saying we will not test the constitutional right of the federal government to move in this direction. There is, I gather, some grey area here which some provinces may contest.

I made it clear to the Prime Minister of Canada that if the federal government felt that in the national interest, at some point in time, some programme of this kind must be introduced, Ontario would not raise any constitutional objection.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I believe there have been quite sufficient supplementaries on this particular topic. The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Lewis: This is very important.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, with the statement of the Premier's being an important one and a lengthy one, I would ask you, sir, to consider further supplementaries so that we can get as much information as we possibly can now that the Premier is here.

Mr. Ruston: He is not here very often.

Mr. Roy: We'd like to hear him.

Mr. Singer: He's setting a new record today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I felt that since we have taken up almost half of the entire question period on this topic perhaps there had been a sufficient number of supplementaries. However, I don't want to restrict unduly the hon. members. If the hon. Leader of the Opposition feels, as well as the leader of the New Democratic Party, that there should be a few more supplementaries, I will not prevent them.

The hon. member for Windsor West, I think, is next.

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the Premier saying that it is his view or that it is his commitment not to interfere in this jurisdictional area with the federal government? And that with respect to the products which are refined from crude oil in this province he will do nothing about their distribution or their price? I specifically refer to only the crude which is refined in refineries in this province.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I thought I made it abundantly clear to the hon. members that as it relates to the exportation of refined oil in the form of gasoline, this is not within our jurisdiction to control. As it relates to the question of price I would think that constitutionally, Mr. Speaker, we would probably have the legal right not only with gasoline but other commodities, other manufactured goods—

Mr. Lewis: Indeed, the government has.

Mr. Foulds: Booze.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—as well as we would on other aspects of our economy, including wages.

I have said in this House, Mr. Speaker, that I do not believe that at this time we have reached a point where there needs to be imposition of price and wage controls. I conveyed this point of view to the federal government. We don't often share a point of view but I think it is fair to state that this was its point of view as well.

Mr. Bullbrook: I have a supplementary which I hope is in order and has something to do with the statement the Premier made. By way of supplementary, having regard to the tenor of this statement, may we presume that the Premier conveyed in his meeting with Premier Lougheed, his feeling that the two-price system was against the national interest? Secondly, could the Premier tell us whether or not he invited the Province of Alberta to consider joining with the Province of Ontario in a friendly application to the Supreme Court of Canada in connection with the constitutionality of the two-price system rather than this type of direct, almost fractionating approach that the Premier takes?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think if the hon. member reads my statement carefully, I say that if the federal government does not do certain things, I expect that Alberta and Ontario will endeavour to resolve it, including the question of the constitutionality. I cannot speak for the Province of Alberta. I would hope that it could be done in an understanding spirit if there is to be a case. I can't guarantee the member for Sarnia that the Premier of Alberta, naturally interested in his own responsibilities in that province, will necessarily accept with enthusiasm what has been said. I can't guarantee that.

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of supplementary: Most respectfully, are we to presume from the response to my supplementary that the Premier, in meeting with the Premier of Alberta, has not even yet discussed the question of a joint application in connection with the constitutionality? In light of the vigour of this statement, did he convey to the Premier of Alberta that it was the position of the government of Ontario that the two-price policy was against the national interest? To those two questions I would like a response.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will send a copy of the speech I made in Calgary, which was well reported there and which was given to the Premier of Alberta before I made it. It refers to some of these matters.

On the question of the determination—which is one that we have made really quite recently as to our determination that we will, if necessary, attempt in the national interest to test the constitutionality of this—the Premier of Alberta and I discussed many aspects of this. There was never a decision on our part at that time to go this route if necessary.

Mr. Bullbrook: But the Premier made a decision to go it alone, though.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It may be necessary to go it alone; I cannot presume to speak for the Premier of Alberta. He has made some very strong statements representing his own interest, and I can't quarrel with that. I am stating our position.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Roy: The Premier is blaming the federal government.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Premier what he intends to do now, recognizing the tremendous problems that have arisen in the United States in regard to the availability of gasoline—

Mr. Lewis: Right, right.

Mr. Deans:—and the problems that are obviously on the doorstep of the Province of Ontario with regard to price escalation and availability of the product? What is going to be done here and now before this session ends in July—

Mr. Lewis: Right.

Mr. Deans:—in order to safeguard the people of the Province of Ontario against the very thing which is happening in the US right now?

Mr. Lewis: Right. Never mind the tangled legal web.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We have brought to the attention of the appropriate minister in Ottawa our very real concern with respect to the exportation of gasoline to the United States.

Mr. Foulds: The Premier has almost too much—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I say, Mr. Speaker, that this has to be a problem for the federal government.

Mr. Lewis: No, it does not.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would be hopeful that they would recognize it and take steps to see that the situation is resolved.

Mr. Cassidy: The Premier really is incredible. Sometimes he doesn't lift a finger—

Hon. Mr. Davis: We will continue to press them to do so.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier is a total copout for Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But to say—with great respect, I know the leader of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Cassidy: That is right—did the Premier call up his friends at Imperial Oil?

Hon. Mr. Davis:—doesn't agree with proceeding in constitutional or legal ways.

Mr. Lewis: By all means, but do something here in the meantime.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am saying that the Ontario government cannot, in terms of jurisdiction, prevent export.

Mr. Cassidy: The government has legal powers of persuasion.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-Forest Hill.

Mr. Lewis: The government has powers; it has supply powers, it has taxation powers. It could do something here and now.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for York-Forest Hill.

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): Is there any reason the Premier's statement appeared to be devoid of any statement of policy on the matter of new exploration and on the matter of exploitation of alternative sources of energy, other than fossil fuel?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think if the hon. member will read one of the documents, the task force report, and the document with the projections from Ontario Hydro, he will sense in that a pretty substantial commitment in direction on the part of Ontario Hydro with respect to the use of nuclear energy. I think he will find that a good portion of the suggested programme that we have approved in principle for planning relates to the further development of nuclear energy.

I can't say to the hon. member that there are many alternative forms of energy. There is fossil fuel; there is uranium and, of course, water itself. When one gets beyond that there aren't that many other forms of energy that have yet been discovered. Ontario Hydro is directing a good part of its future generating commitment to the use of nuclear fuels.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. Leader of the Opposition a further supplementary?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier which is not a supplementary in the sense that it has to do with the court case but it does have reference to a comment that he made in his statement, if you will permit it, sir.

Since he is referring to the establishment of another committee to examine into the local administration of Hydro affairs, how does he feel that this committee is going to give a recommendation which is, in any sense, different from those which have come from at least two groups and task forces already, and perhaps even three specific recommendations that the government has had in this connection? I refer to Task Force Hydro; to the select committee on the Municipal Act and related Acts; and, I believe, there was a further reference in the report of the Energy Commission.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the recommendations—and I am going partially by memory—of the original report recommended rather extensive regionalization of the local utilities. I have, after careful consideration, determined that that recommendation should be reassessed, and reassessed by people who have had some greater involvement, perhaps, in the administration of local utilities.

Quite frankly—and I am speaking personally now; I don't want to prejudice the work of the committee—I am reluctant or at least I am not persuaded, if I can put it this way, that we should reduce the number of utilities overnight in Ontario—the number of operating utilities—to the extent that was suggested in the initial report.

There is also some concern expressed as to the level of government, if there is a region, to which the utilities should report. Mr. Speaker, I am once again expressing a personal point of view when I say, with respect, I don't think it has to be the same in every regional government. Task Force Hydro and others assessing it, as I recall it, made their recommendations based on a general observation, whereas I am suggesting to this committee that they go to the regional municipality of Niagara, sit down with the responsible people there and make a determination as to whether it should report to the first or second tier. Similarly, they should go to the great county of Peel and do the same, to Halton, and so on.

In other words, each regional government will be assessed by this committee individually and the policies or the administering procedures could vary one from another. I think, Mr. Speaker, this is very much in keeping with some of the observations made by the Leader of the Opposition as to local involvement and the desire to involve the local people. We think that this is the proper way to do it and that is the rationale for the committee.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: Would not the Premier agree that, in fact, there is a division of opinion within his ministry; that his chief adviser on energy wants the local electrical commissions reduced tremendously in number, and that the Premier, very properly, would like to reject that advice in the same way as he rejected the advice that a new ministry was not necessary? Why does he not just have the courage of his convictions and say we are going to maintain the Ontario Municipal Electric Association as a viable, usable community administrative branch?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we fully intend to do just that. I think it is also fair to state, and this is a view shared by some members of the OMEA, that there are situations in the province where there could be greater efficiencies by the combination of some numbers of existing municipal electrical systems. I think it is also fair to state, to repeat once again, Mr. Speaker, as it relates to the regional governments, that an individual assessment of each regional government and the reporting relationship or the administrative structure is very valid indeed. I am quite prepared to accept the advice of my parliamentary assistant or anyone else.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Or reject it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Then, in the ultimate, the responsibility becomes that of the government and me. I am saying in this instance I think there is merit in having this committee make this assessment. It is as simple as that.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Yes, this is the fourth report.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary, also dealing with this statement as it relates to Hydro. The Premier can wipe one last bead of sweat from his brow.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Two.

Mr. Lewis: Does the Premier not think that there is a serious danger inherent in that part of the statement, which says that the bill the government will introduce will emphasize Hydro's operational independence in accordance with the best principles of enlightened commercial enterprise, in light of the hearings of the committee on Hydro and what they have shown about what Hydro does with its operational independence?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would say that as it relates to the prime function of Ontario Hydro, which is the production of electrical energy, I am prepared to stand up in this House and say that over the years there have been few utilities in North America that have done a more creditable job with respect to the production of hydro power, thermal power or nuclear power than Ontario Hydro has, and at a cost that is realistic.

Mr. Lewis: A little flourish for the finale.

Mr. Stokes: Supplementary: In view of the Premier's statement that Hydro should become independent and free to operate in a free enterprise system, and with his assurance that it will report to and be responsible to the Legislature, what kind of mechanism is the government going to set up in order to accomplish that?

Mr. Lewis: The member for Chatham-Kent!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there are two or three mechanisms. I am glad the hon. member asked me this question, because I think it is really quite important and has perhaps been missed in some of the more emotional parts of the statement. There is the determination by the government that Hydro will, in fact, have its rates subjected to review by a rate review board. This is a very significant departure in the Province of Ontario and I'm glad somebody across the House recognizes it. The rate review board, Mr. Speaker, is not a reporting relationship, of course, but it is a review body—

Mr. Foulds: Why not have a review board for gasoline prices?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —that will determine or assist in the determination by Hydro of its rates. The reporting relationship will be, as I see it at this moment—and this could be tomorrow, but probably not—that the Hydro corporation will report through the Ministry of Energy to the members of the Legislature. I think this is a very normal procedure.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. Leader of the Opposition have further questions?

Mr. Roy: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: No, there have been enough supplementaries. Does the hon. Leader of the Opposition have further questions?

The hon. member for Scarborough West.

ANTI-POVERTY COALITION COMMITTEE BRIEF

Mr. Lewis: Question of the Minister of Community and Social Services: How did he respond to the brief from the anti-poverty coalition today in general terms, and specifically to that question within the brief for a guaranteed annual income of $6,800 per family in this province?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Community and Social Services): Mr. Speaker, we had a very good meeting today with the committee of the anti-poverty coalition.

Mr. Bounsall: The minister is pretty satisfied.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I wish to commend them for their brief; they submitted a very informative, a very worthwhile brief. Many of their objectives in their brief—

Mr. Stokes: Very valid brief.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: —are similar to our own in respect to the alleviation of poverty. I tabled in this Legislature two months ago the six principles, and many of those are similar.

Mr. Martel: When is the government going to start that?

Mr. Lewis: When is it going to implement the requests?

An hon. member: Why don't the members shut up over there?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Also we are in agreement that there should be a major review of the revamping of our social security system in this province as well as throughout Canada. The conference was held in April in Ottawa where this very question was discussed. As a result, there is a working committee, an ongoing committee, and we will meet again in September to discuss this very matter.

On the subject of an annual guaranteed income, I think the member will appreciate, that this is a very grey area; we are working with the federal government on this. We've had many meetings, and we are presently—

Mr. Lewis: Thank God for the federal government, it bails this government out of almost everything these days.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Oh, they are not bailing us out.

At the present time we are working with them on the model; and we are also working with our sister provinces who have a guaranteed annual income experiment in Manitoba. So we are working together for the benefit of all.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Scarborough West have further questions?

The hon. member for St. George.

METRO NURSING STUDENTS

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Colleges and Universities. Would the minister advise me today in this House exactly what provision is to be made for the 1,500 nursing students in this city and the faculty with reference to the community colleges; why have they been discriminated against, since every other nursing student and faculty across this province were advised as of Jan. 12 what their position was to be?

An hon. member: Smile once in a while.

Hon. J. McNie (Minister of Colleges and Universities): Mr. Speaker, far from being discriminated against, we recognized that Toronto's large number of nursing schools deserved a very close scrutiny. We retained management consultants, who just in the past 10 days submitted a report which is being considered by an ad hoc committee representative of the various interest groups, including the nurses and the hospitals and others. We're entertaining that report right at this moment. The deadlines are not as demanding in the city of Toronto as they are in some of the other jurisdictions. We recognize it is going to take longer to make whatever adjustments are necessary.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary: Does the minister not realize that those involved have a great deal of worry and concern and that they are not being advised? And could I ask, as a part of this supplementary, why has St. Lawrence College, with its three campuses, made these teachers from other parts of the province instructors, rather than masters? Why are they being discriminated against?

Hon. Mr. McNie: Answering the first part of the member's question, there is no reason there should be this great uncertainty.

Mrs. Campbell: If the minister doesn't know, how do they know?

Hon. Mr. McNie: The schools have been advised that they will be carrying on substantially as in the past for the next year, insofar as their curriculum and the programmes are concerned.

With regard to the member's second question, I will have to get her an answer on that one. I am not familiar with it.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, one supplementary: How are they going to be funded? What colleges are they going to be applying through and why shouldn't they know it now, to make preparation for that particular course?

Mr. Sargent: Let's have the answer! Come on! Doesn't the minister know?

Mrs. Campbell: No, he doesn't know.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

CONTINUATION OF INNOVATIVE SOCIAL SERVICES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. Is the government willing to make a commitment to innovative social services, that is those that were launched under the federal LIP grants? If so, will there be decisions and funding in order to continue those innovative social services before the federal money runs out?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the criteria for LIP were mainly to provide employment during the winter months and to meet social needs. We had a meeting in my office about a week ago with representatives of Metro Toronto on this very question and we have agreed to meet with them again.

I would like to tell the hon. member that LIP was initiated and funded by the federal government and I feel that the federal government has the responsibility in this area. We have many very worthwhile programmes within our own ministry to which we feel we have commitments and they deserve a higher priority.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister not acknowledge that there have been gaps in Ontario's social services which have been identified and filled by projects that were launched under LIP? If so, will he not continue some of them by providing this commitment?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Certainly, I think that we all agree there are gaps in our social security system. Again, if I may refer to the federal conference and to this working paper on the social security system in Canada, that's why we are working together with the federal government in trying to revamp the whole system and to make it a better one.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. Martel: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East with a supplementary.

Mr. Martel: Why is there a continued refusal by this government to utilize the funds through CAP to sponsor some of these programmes when the government would be reimbursed by Ottawa to the tune of 50 per cent of any of the expenditures it might undertake?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, CAP is often referred to; the Canada Assistance Plan. There is no magic in the Canada Assistance Plan. It is on a 50-50 sharing basis. The federal government puts up 50 per cent and the provinces put up the balance. At the same time I would like to repeat that we only have so much money and therefore we have to allocate those funds on a priority basis.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): We are not going to give it to Rochdale.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce is next.

EXPANSION OF PARK FACILITIES IN BRUCE AREA

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. The minister in his statement implied, did he not, that the reason for Ontario Hydro taking over Inverhuron Park was because of the need for additional land? Would the minister not agree that it was on account of pressures being brought to bear because of the negotiations with Ontario Hydro and the safety committee of Atomic Energy of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I would relate to my statement of earlier today. I connected it to a report which was tabled by the Premier and I am sure that after members have a chance to digest it in detail, they will see in there that the recommendations of Ontario Hydro's plans are to expand that particular plant in that area.

Members will recall that we did make a public statement, I think it was last fall, concerning the requirements of the Atomic Energy safety committee, at which time they requested that we construct certain safety shelters and provide an access road to the south, which we have done. As far as we are concerned, there are no dangers from the plant at the present time. All the precautions have been taken. But the primary purpose is for the planned expansion for that particular plant.

Mr. Gaunt: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Did the minister consider the possibility of acquiring additional land adjoining Inverhuron Provincial Park rather than moving away from that site and purchasing additional land beyond that point?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we did this. We looked in that general area and the most suitable area for the development of a park that would be triple in size was in the MacGregor Point area.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

OISE PROJECTS

Mr. Foulds: I have a question of the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if he has found an answer, yet, to a question I asked a couple of weeks ago about booklets suggesting in-basket simulation put out by OISE? I raise the question at this time because I would like to know how many school board trustees and how many area superintendents are now conducting in-basket simulation exercises?

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I recall the question well. I started to familiarize myself with this new in-thing called in-basket simulation, but because of the other pressing problems in education at the present time I haven't completed my course in this particular area, so I'm not really ready to answer the hon. member on it.

Mr. Bounsall: The minister found it so enjoyable he is afraid to report.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I understand that in certain educational circles it's a very in-thing to conduct in-basket simulation for the development of leadership qualities, and so forth. It is going on and I'd hate to be the one to stop such an innovative process.

Mr. Foulds: A supplementary of a more serious nature, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister approve of the public expenditure on these, I think, frivolous booklets?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Of course, Mr. Speaker, that is a judgement as to whether they're frivolous or not.

Mr. Cassidy: That is what the minister is paid to make.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'm not sure that the people who developed the booklet and the people who think there is something in this whole system to develop leadership qualities, and so forth, would call it frivolous. Some others may call it frivolous. I'm not prepared to say whether it is or isn't.

Mr. Foulds: What do they cost?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce is next.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier. Is he around the corner there?

Mr. Speaker: The Premier is not in his seat. The hon. member for York Centre.

Mr. Sargent: I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources, then.

An hon. member: Here is the Premier.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: We now have 60 seconds remaining.

Mr. Sargent: I'm glad I didn't go to your dinner, then.

An hon. member: The slowest walk in the west.

Mr. Sargent: I'm interested in the Premier's desire to use a private jet at $600 an hour.

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Sargent: Will he tell me why, when he owes $30,000 at jet rates for four trips to Miami, he put into the Treasury only about $8,000? What is his rationale in thinking that he should get an 80 per cent knockoff on the deal? Why doesn't he pay full price?

An hon. member: Good shot.

Mr. Sargent: I'd like to know the answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. You have about 30 seconds left to ask the question, then.

Mr. Sargent: Who is this man that he doesn't have to answer a question?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The time for questions has expired.

PARKWAY BELT

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think yesterday or the day before, a number of technical and detailed questions were asked by the leader of the NDP. I have answers to these now, which are four pages in length. I thought I would table these replies, sir, unless you prefer to handle it differently. (See appendix page 2821.)

May I, at the same time, inform the House that when the three bills—that is, the Planning and Development Act, the Niagara Escarpment Act and the Parkway Belt Act—receive second reading I would suggest to the House that they go to the standing committee on natural resources so that certain of the technical and detailed matters can be discussed with members of the staff by those members of the Legislature who wish to pursue that in detail.

Mr. Sargent: Who is going to tell the Treasurer, then?

Mr. Lewis: They're neither technical nor detailed.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Mr. Lewis: They are essential to the bills.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

ONTARIO ENERGY BOARD ACT

Hon. Mr. Davis moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Ontario Energy Board Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

MINISTRY OF ENERGY ACT

Hon. Mr. Davis moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to establish the Ministry of Energy.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

POWER COMMISSION ACT

Hon. Mr. Davis moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to amend the Power Commission Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

POWER CONTROL ACT

Hon. Mr. Davis moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to repeal the Power Control Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

POWER COMMISSION INSURANCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Davis moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Power Commission Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF PEEL ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to establish the Regional Municipality of Peel.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, this bill, which is the first of a number of similar bills which I will introduce in the next few days, provides for the establishment of the regional municipality of Peel.

The terms of the bill follow substantially our original proposals for a two-tier regional municipality with three local municipalities, the city of Mississauga, the town of Brampton and the township of Albion.

Provision is made in the bill for a process to alter these names to meet local preferences.

There have been some minor changes from the original boundaries to meet local needs and accommodate the right of way of a parkway belt west, which was delineated on Monday.

It is possible some further amendments will be considered as the bill proceeds through the legislative process. We are confident the new regional municipality will meet the needs of its residents and provide them with effective local government to deal with the problems which rapid growth and increased development will bring in the coming years.

This bill will be taken through the legislative process by my parliamentary assistant, the member for York East (Mr. Meen).

RESIDENTIAL PROPERTY TAX REDUCTION ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Residential Property Tax Reduction Act, 1972.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the amendment to the Residential Property Tax Reduction Act repeals the Act as of Jan. 1, 1974, as the programme which provides property tax assistance to old-age pensioners receiving a federal guaranteed income supplement has been replaced by a system of tax credits. Any pensioners who have not made a claim related to 1972, under the existing Act, will be allowed to obtain payments during 1973.

REGIONAL MUNICIPAL GRANTS ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Regional Municipal Grants Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the Regional Municipal Grants Act is being amended to reflect the increased unconditional per capita payment to a regional municipality that has a regional police force, announced in the 1973 budget. The per capita payment has been increased to $5 from $3.25.

The amendment also provides for an increase from $1.75 to $3 per capita to an area municipality providing policing in a regional government where there is no regional police force, such as the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton. The special assistance provided to restructured areas under the Act to minimize changes in the incidence of taxation and to promote the development of services on a regional basis, has been extended to new regional governments and to any other restructuring of local government that may take place.

MUNICIPAL UNCONDITIONAL GRANTS ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Municipal Unconditional Grants Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Cassidy: Mark the day; moved June 7.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the Municipal Unconditional Grants Act is being amended to reflect the increased per capita payments to municipalities providing a police force, announced in the 1973 budget. This Act will provide a payment of $3 per capita rather than the former payment of $1.75 per capita.

The Act is also being amended to provide assistance to municipalities over a five-year period when a major source of revenue ceases to be available and an immediate undue burden would thus be caused for the taxpayers. For example, this amendment will provide assistance to those municipalities that prior to 1973 could tax tenant-occupied properties on Indian lands. This assistance would allow the municipality to phase down the provision of services without an immediate loss of revenue.

ONTARIO EDUCATION CAPITAL AID CORP. ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Ontario Education Capital Aid Corp. Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

ONTARIO UNIVERSITIES CAPITAL AID CORP. ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Ontario Universities Capital Aid Corp. Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, a brief comment on these two last bills, the Ontario Education Capital Aid Corp. Amendment Act, 1973, and the Ontario Universities Capital Aid Corp. Amendment Act, 1973.

Previously debentures issued by municipalities for public library purposes were purchased by the Ontario Education Capital Aid Corp. Since the Minister of Colleges and Universities will be determining the amount of capital expenditure of a municipality for public library purposes, the debentures to be issued for such purposes will now be purchased by the Ontario Universities Capital Aid Corp. Accordingly, the amendments contained in the bills transfer the authority to purchase municipal debentures issued for (school—sic) library purposes from the Ontario Education Capital Aid Corp. to the Ontario Universities Capital Aid Corp.

The remaining amendments are consequential upon the reorganization of the Ministry of Colleges and Universities.

Mr. Speaker: Before I call for further introduction of bills at this particular time, a matter has been drawn to my attention which I think is of interest and importance to the members of the Legislature. In order that it is not overlooked, I should like to inform the hon. members that the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Morrow) was elected to the Legislature a quarter of a century ago today.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, may I just take a moment to correct one word? I said in my explanation "to purchase municipal debentures issued for school purposes," and that should read "for library purposes" if Hansard would correct it.

ONTARIO TRANSPORTATION DEVELOPMENT CORP. ACT

Hon. Mr. Carton moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to establish the Ontario Transportation Development Corp.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the Legislature on May 11, it is the intention of the government to provide the necessary research and development capability to fulfil its policy and programmes with respect to urban transit. The aim of this bill is to create a corporation that will establish a continuing research and development capacity in Canada of the highest technological order and ensure the domestic production of these facilities for Canadian municipalities.

The role of the company will be to co-ordinate and promote the development of new advanced technology of all types relating to the public transit field, and to provide for the successful integration of these innovative developments with the design and production of much-needed conventional transit facilities.

PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION AND HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Carton moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to amend the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, subject to one section which deals with a change in policy with respect to the subsidies to counties for road purposes, the rest are, in the main, housekeeping sections.

LIQUOR LICENCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Clement moves first reading of the bill intituled, An Act to amend the Liquor Licence Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

LIQUOR CONTROL ACT

Hon. Mr. Clement moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Liquor Control Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, you will recall I made a ministerial statement touching on both these bills at the opening of the House.

OPHTHALMIC DISPENSERS ACT

Mr. Roy moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Ophthalmic Dispensers Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to a statement made on May 18, this bill provides for the election of the board, of whom five are to be opticians and two are to be members of the public. Presently there is, under the Act, a board of ophthalmic dispensers.

The bill also limits the number of members from one company who may be on the board at any one time.

At the present time, Mr. Speaker, the board of ophthalmic dispensers is composed of members who are either directly or indirectly controlled by Imperial Optical. Since the board is responsible for the training and licensing of opticians this is a potentially dangerous situation and it is not in the best interests of the opticians and the members of the public.

May I say in closing, Mr. Speaker, to the House leader, that we would like to see this bill passed before the House recesses.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading upon motion:

Bill 113, An Act to amend the Ministry of Education Act.

Clerk of the House: The third order, House in committee of the whole; Mr. R. D. Rowe in the chair,

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT

House in committee on Bill 126, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Mr. Chairman: We had five proposed amendments which were stacked and we were about to start discussion on section 2.

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, I gather from the way the session ended yesterday that we are sort of through section 2(a). I have just a few remarks—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): No, we're not.

Mr. Bounsall: We're not through? If there's someone who has further remarks on section 2(a) I will give way to them.

Well, if we're still on section 2(a), I have some remarks there as well.

Mr. Chairman: We really just placed the motion which had to do with item 2(a)(i) and (ii), I guess it was.

Mr. Bounsall: Just with 2(a)(i)? So we're still on that—we still can talk about that section?

Mr. Martel: Yes!

Mr. Bounsall: The hon. member for Sudbury East was talking about the last paragraph in that. It's under this section—temporary total disability—that I have a few comments.

First, of a particular nature, there is another group of persons, not a large group, but still a group quite separate and quite recognizable, who have not received any help for their total disability.

On due consideration, Mr. Chairman, of the case which I have before me, I find this is a case of not temporary total disability or permanent total disability, it's rather a case of total partial disability. So, I would take this section to speak about this total partial disability case, which is not covered under the increase for temporary total disability.

Those people affected and who have not been aided at all under partial total disability by this Act are a small group, but who in any account need to be helped drastically. They are all those who've qualified as minors. That is, in the early days of the Act when they were 21 and under they suffered a disability which, with respect to that disability was 100 per cent, and they were partially disabled to 100 per cent of a particular disability; but they have received no aid and succour under this increase.

I'm referring particularly to those people in the province who are totally blind as a result of an industrial accident. In many cases these were industrial accidents suffered when they were minors and their original pensions were established on the basis of 66½ per cent of what they were earning.

In 1956 or 1957 there was a change in this when it was recognized that this group of persons, being minors at that time, were usually employed only in summer jobs. There was a whole host of them at age 17 who were blinded.

I can refer specifically to a Mr. Doug McCallum, an administrator for the CNIB in Windsor, and to Mr. Homer LeBlanc, the president of the Blind and Sighted Merchants in Ontario, both having suffered this affliction at age 17 as a result of industrial injuries.

In 1956 or 1957 it was recognized in connection with the low salary jobs they had held at the age of 17, both involving accidents resulting in blindness, that the low wages and salaries received were not equitable. In 1956 or 1957 the minor clause established a weekly earning rate that was more in line with what they might be able to earn in the marketplace if they hadn't had part-time student jobs and so on at the age these people had now attained. They were certainly in every case higher, and a set amount. Back around 1963, Mr. Speaker, this amount was increased. It was the last increase this group of minors covered by this minor clause have had and it now sits at $195 a month.

There have been two other increases in pensions with respect to Workmen's Compensation Board recipients since 1963, other than this Act which we see before us. None of those other adjustments have applied to this minor category—pensioners who were injured when they were minors. The salaries they are making are not nearly equivalent to other workers who had established a salary level in the marketplace. That has not been adjusted, as far as I can determine, since 1963.

This surely can't be a very large group in this province. Surely it would not be breaking the bank of industry and corporations in this province to see that this group, at this time, when this amendment is being brought in, were looked after and taken care of. This is another grave sin of omission that this Act imposes upon the injured workman in this Province of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. minister.

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): Yes Mr. Chairman. Perhaps before replying to the hon. member for Windsor West I have answers here to two questions that were asked of me yesterday afternoon by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa). in connection with the children's benefits, I believe, between 16 and 19. Of the 4,370 dependent children receiving pension benefits under section 36 of the Act, there are 1,275 who are more than 16 years of age. Experience has shown that most dependent children continue at school at least to the completion of grade 12.

Having regard for this, under the provision of section 36(4) of the Act, it has been the practice of the board to capitalize children's pensions to age 19½, the average age at which children discontinue their education. I think that was the question of the hon. member and I wasn't too sure about it. I didn't know what was being done.

There was another question too. It came from the hon. member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) in connection with clubs. He was referring particularly to golf clubs. Under clubs, as of today as a matter of fact, we have 562 clubs under the Workmen's Compensation Board Act by application, of which 238 were golf clubs. They had to make application for that.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): How many of these are under the Act?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: There are 238 golf clubs covered.

Mr. Young: Are under the Act?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes.

Mr. Young: They are in now?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Right!

With reference to the problem as posed by the member for Windsor West. He has stated two specific cases. I know of one, Mr. LeBlanc, I believe. I have already met with him on a couple of occasions. I think since then, because of other arrangements through CNIB I believe, his salary has been increased. He seems to be, perhaps, more satisfied. I haven't heard from him for some time. But I know at the time the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Brunelle) and I gave him an appointment to see what could be done.

On the question of minimum: Of course, it says in the Act that anyone who is under the minimum of $250, irrespective, will be getting up to $250. Insofar as any changes at the present time are concerned the Act doesn't state it and we haven't got the funds provided for it.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 2 stand?

Mr. Bounsall: Can I question the minister on several of his statements? Did I understand you to say that it is now the practice of the board to consider that a logical age to which to extend the benefits for children of workmen who were killed is now 19½ years? You automatically consider 19½ years to be reasonable age to which the extension of benefits will apply?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: For those dependent children receiving pension benefits at this time under section 36—and we have 1,275 of them—board practice is to capitalize for payments up to 19½ years of age, which correlates with finishing their high school at grade 12.

Mr. Bounsall: Further to this, I would just remind the minister that the matter over which he had seen Mr. Homer LeBlanc before—and I was with him for at least one meeting—was a labour problem with respect to how CNIB people were being handled in their endeavours to work in the province and not on their Workmen's Compensation Board pensions.

There was a question I also asked you yesterday about the leaving age of 16 that appears in this bill and in the Act. You quoted then, as you have continued to clarify here today, the fact that it is extended beyond age 16 when children are in attendance at school, and that the average age of those over 16 who are being supported works out to 19½, as I understand it.

The other question that I had yesterday, because I was concerned that this be automatic and that the board does not need to have discretionary powers at all was were there any cases for support beyond age 16 which were not granted when those children were in full-time attendance at either a post-secondary institution of learning or were completing their secondary school education? I would be pleased to hear the minister's answer to that.

On another point, I certainly grasp that in this section 2, under part 2, we are talking about a temporary total disability; and under part (b) permanent total disability. We have figures in this Act, with which I don't agree as you know, by which someone such as a blind person who would be, I think, classified as permanently partially disabled, appears not to have been mentioned at all.

Are you saying that everybody on permanent partial disability—yes, by small subsection (ii) I see that you are. You are saying that, in terms of blind people, in point of fact they will have a proportional amount of increase in accordance with their impairment, based on the $250 a month relative to the $175 that is current?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Chairman, with reference to the first part of the question, of course, I have nothing to do with the day-to-day operation of the board. I would presume that some applications for dependent children must have been turned down, unless they continue their schooling, because we had 1,275 who have qualified. I am only presuming; I imagine the board must have turned some of them down if they weren't going to school, if they didn't have any intention of furthering their education. But I will get the figures for you on this.

The other question was referring to permanent partial disability. They do receive partial benefits in accordance with the remaining degree of impairment; based on the degree of their impairment.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion on this section? The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: The minister, on that section we were discussing yesterday, indicated there could be a different interpretation on that section of the bill. The sentence says: "For temporary partial disability in proportion to the amount in accordance with the impairment of earning capacity."

If the man is not able to return to work—there is no work available, this deals with the "suitable employment" nonsense—then as I interpret this he is then able to claim 100 per cent.

Maybe I am being a bit naive. I am almost positive that is what the minister is going to answer. But if one interprets that literally, then in fact you have got the worker getting 100 per cent, because he has been unable to earn any type of salary.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: This question was discussed yesterday of course; I mean coming from the same thing.

The board will give him an amount proportionate to his impairment of earning capacity. As has been mentioned to me in so many letters they can't get light jobs, which is all they can do. The injured workman cannot go back to his former job and would do a light job, but these do not exist in the area. I realize it's quite a problem in Sudbury probably, but no more so than in the city of Cornwall and in some other parts of Ontario.

You say that the Compensation Board should pay full compensation. There again, everything that you ask for we have to provide the funds for, and it's not as simple as you think. You only see the one side—the side which gives the benefits. But the minister is responsible for two sides. He has to make sure that the funds are there, and that they can be collected. The fund has to be actuarially sound, as you know. That's the other problem the Minister of Labour has.

Mr. Martel: The Minister of Labour would have to agree, however, that the province then picks up the tab. Through general welfare legislation and the family benefits' legislation, the province then becomes responsible for picking up the tab. And why should it be the province?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: We heard the answer from the Minister of Community and Social Services today. If—and I don't know when, he didn't say—but if the government agrees on a guaranteed annual income, perhaps this could fit into that programme. You never know.

Mr. Martel: The minister might consider introducing, then, legislation similar to what was introduced in New Zealand of late. He indicates, in the Board report which I was looking through last night, that the New Zealand people looked to the Ontario programme to some degree. My understanding is that they went much further than anything Ontario has. In fact they pay 80 per cent of loss for sickness and accident, regardless of whether you are on the job, off the job, injured in transit to work—for any reason at all they pay 80 per cent.

Mr. Minister, you say I only see one side. But I also see the other side—that you put the onus on the province to pick up the money, through taxing the residents. But isn't that part of the price of doing business for these companies? Why should it be the province's responsibility to pay disabled fathers' allowances, pensions and so on for a workman injured on a job?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Like the energy tax?

Mr. Martel: Well, you might charge it to any type of tax you want. But the province is the one that's picking up the tab at the present time. My objections to that are (a) the guy doesn't belong on the welfare role; and (b) why should the province be picking up the tab for a man who is injured while involved in an industrial accident and working for a firm? Why should it be the province? Let's look at it from that point of view. Why should the general taxpayer be the one forced to pay extra taxes in order to be able to support the programme that now reaches $500 million for his colleague the Minister of Social and Community Services? Don't you think there is something wrong there?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: The whole principle of compensation, as you well know, is based on the degree of impairment. You've referred to New Zealand legislation. I cannot question that—I haven't read it. But I know they copied the Compensation Act of Ontario to a large extent, because I understand some of our people are in close contact with them.

Mr. Martel: Like they wiped out all of them.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: But until I see it I can't argue. The basis of compensation is, of course, on the degree of impairment, at least in any legislation I've seen so far.

Mr. Martel: Then, Mr. Minister, to avoid the problems that the workers have, could not an agreement of some description be reached between you, as the minister responsible for compensation, and your colleague, the minister responsible for Community and Social Services? Could there not be something worked out whereby if the man cannot obtain work he continues to get his money from the Compensation Board and you bill it back to Community and Social Services?

Because why should the man be degraded in having to apply for welfare? That's what you are doing to them. Many do not want to be part of the welfare scheme.

Why can't you have it in reverse? What he has got to do now is go down to the welfare office, sign a wage assignment and he then draws a welfare allowance. This is completely degrading to him. Could not the mechanism at least be set up, just in reverse, so that he gets his cheque directly from compensation, without making him go through that most humiliating experience of applying to welfare?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: I know that a conference is going on between the federal and provincial governments, and I would be glad to take it up with my colleague here. I can't say whether this is being contemplated at the present time. But I would be glad to make the suggestion to see if it can be worked out, and if not why not.

Mr. Chairman: Any comments? Yes. On the same section?

Mr. Bounsall: Are we still on subsection (a)?

Mr. Chairman: Maybe we are finished with it. Are we?

Mr. Bounsall: I have no further comments on (a), they are on (b).

Mr. Chairman: Which section next, then? All right. The member for Windsor West; on section 3, is it?

Mr. Bounsall: Section 2(b).

Mr. Chairman: Section 2(b), all right.

Mr. Bounsall: Here, again, Mr. Chairman, I could put in an amendment. It would be in line with all the other amendments that we have already put, and which I explained thoroughly yesterday. Our figure for permanent total disability would be $425 a month rather than the $250, as I put it yesterday. I don't believe this was included in the amendments.

An hon. member: Did you get them?

Mr. Bounsall: No, this change from $250 to $425 did not find its way into them. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that I will make that formal amendment for this particular sub-clause only. However, I would very briefly repeat why we think it should be $425 here, as we have stated elsewhere by formal amendment.

That amount is arrived at by taking a decent minimum wage of $2.50 an hour, times 40 hours a week, times 100 per cent of it and not 75 per cent of it, to reach this $425 figure. Of course it would have an escalator phrase attached to it by which it would be adjusted semi-annually, based upon per cent increase in salaries and wages in the Province of Ontario.

In terms of permanent partial disability, it is subsection (ii) that completely covers the case of the blind people that I was mentioning. Under this section, it presumes to say that they would get an appropriate increase. I am wondering, therefore—and would the minister please reply—does this proportional increase cover those that are covered under the minors' clause? If it doesn't, it should for those who receive a set, fixed amount, predetermined in some way.

I don't know how it was predetermined, but there was recognition that the salaries they were making as a minor did not reflect their true position. It was arbitrarily established, back in 1956 or 1957, and arbitrarily changed in 1963. Will this proportional amount referred to for permanent partial disability affect the minors and those under the minors' clause in the Act, which would cover the names of the two specific people that I mentioned here earlier?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am informed by the manager of the board that it does affect them.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments, questions or amendments on any later section of this bill, then?

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Yes.

Mr. Bounsall: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: Which section?

Mr. Bounsall: 4(1).

Mr. Chairman: And the member for Rainy River?

Mr. Reid: No, go ahead. I want to speak on it.

Mr. Bounsall: Yes, I have an amendment to section 4(1). The wording of the amendment sounds a little awkward, but I had to restrict myself to the way in which this section was written. In point of fact, I had a completely different one, Mr. Chairman, that didn't do really what I wanted to do, but I would get up and make it and then talk about what I would like to do. By looking at it very carefully, I was able to do what I would have liked to do with this section.

Mr. D. R. Timbrell (Don Mills): What was that you said about awkward wording?

Mr. Bounsall moves that section 4(1) be amended by replacing the words—" $9,000" in the amendment of 1971, and inserting in lieu thereof "$10,000",—with the words—"but not so as in any case to exceed the rate of $9,000 per annum", and inserting in lieu thereof, "with no maximum or upper ceiling imposed."

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Chairman, having to phrase it in terms of how the amendment Act read, makes it awkward and does not make much sense as you have it in your hands, but it causes the original Act to then read:

Average earnings shall be computed in such a manner as is best calculated to give the rate per week or month at which the workman was remunerated [And here is where the amendment now starts.] with no maximum or upper ceiling imposed.

So the effect of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is to not have any $9,000 as an upper ceiling on which the pension benefits are then calculated—of which it would be 75 per cent under the present Act—or have that changed only to $10,000, but to have no ceiling whatsoever at all on the average salary on which pension benefits can then be calculated.

What this means, this having a ceiling, increased from $9,000 to $10,000 in this case but nonetheless a ceiling, is that it penalizes workers who are in well-paid, and in some cases high-risk jobs, but in other cases, highly-skilled jobs in high-skill industries.

I cannot see why we have an Act in the Province of Ontario that wants to discriminate against workmen employed in high-risk jobs, when the whole half thrust of the operation of this Act and this board is to see that risk jobs are eliminated; or to discriminate against those workers in our society who have obtained some skills, some thoroughly high skills. Why should we discriminate against them by establishing a maximum on which their pensions can be calculated?

Here you have a man or woman who obtains a particular skill, a particular training, a particular expertise for their work place; but we make sure that if that person is injured we are really going to penalize him. We are going to say: "Your maximum benefit can be 75 per cent of what you earn." And we are not going to say only that, we are going to say it can be based only on a maximum, if this amendment stands of $10,000.

I would like to know, in this case, just how many workmen in the Province of Ontario have a salary over $10,000 on which their pension earnings could be based? Just how many people are we talking about? Here again I think you will find, as with so many cases and situations in this Act that we talked about, we are not talking about that many people and we are not talking about that many dollars. I would suggest to you that here again we have been discriminatory in the worst possible sense to keep any sort of ceiling on this particular average earnings that will be allowed for a calculation of pension.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Chairman, obviously no responsible Minister of Labour could accept this amendment, because for one thing my hon. friend doesn't know how much money is involved. I can tell him we are talking about millions of dollars; and not only because of the number who are now exceeding the $10,000 salary a year, and there are many of them. Well you take in the trade union movement. You should know that electricians, getting $10.25 an hour, if they have a fairly good year, they'd be over $10,000, many of them.

It is not because we wouldn't want to or we wouldn't like to; it's still the highest maximum of any province in Canada. The reason is always the same thing, it's a question of funding, it's a question of finding the money.

Now another point that I should perhaps make at this time is that in the future white collar workers, for instance people working in banks or in offices, will some day be covered by compensation. There is still a number of classes of people who are not covered, and they will be. It could be some day that you may have, well senior officials you know of companies, with fairly high salaries. It all has quite a bearing on the funding. That's why I cannot accept this amendment at this time.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Rainy River. Did you have a comment on this?

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): I'd like to speak on this section.

Mr. Chairman: On this particular one?

Mr. Ferrier: Just to reiterate some of the things that my colleague said, there is an increasing number of workers who are, in fact, making over $10,000 a year. I feel that in arbitrarily setting it at just $10,000, that you are making it very difficult for them, once they are injured, to meet their commitments.

The minister keeps saying: "How much is it going to cost?" Surely this is a legitimate expense of operating a business or industry in this province? I think the argument you are making is allowing a number of industries to evade their responsibility to the workmen who are hurt on their premises and at their jobs.

I would think that a source would be some of the retained earnings that some of these industries in this province have been putting away, and they have been substantial. If you look at the corporate profits of almost every industry in this province, in the last few months it's been a pretty healthy hike from what it was in the previous quarter or the previous year.

I don't think that argument is quite good enough. I think that we should be looking after those who have happened to get their wages up a little higher—there are people in a number of industries, the railway industry, for instance. I think we should be moving higher than that $10,000, and even if you wouldn't accept the amendment that my colleague suggests, I don't think that $10,000 is nearly enough. I think it should be considerably higher.

Mr. Reid: Maybe just a word of what has been said makes a fair amount of sense, surely, to the minister. We are trying to compensate someone for loss of earnings and wages. Surely it should be in line with what they had been earning and that standard of living that they have achieved because of their education, skills or talent or whatever.

Mr. Chairman: Ready for the question then?

Those in favour of Mr. Bounsall's motion will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Shall we stack this along with the others, then? All right.

Any further comments, questions or amendments in any later section of the bill?

Mr. Bounsall: Section 4(2), Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: How about the member for Rainy River?

Mr. Reid: I am waiting for section 5.

Mr. Chairman: All right, the member for Windsor West.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to section 4(2).

Mr. Bounsall moves that section 4(2) be amended by striking out "only" in the first line, and inserting "all present, past and future" before "accidents" in the second line.

Mr. Chairman: Any comments?

Mr. Bounsall: Yes, Mr. Chairman. What this amendment obviously does is say that for all those people in the past who had salaries over $9,000, we will now recompute their pension on a basis of what's obviously going to pass in this bill, much to our—

Mr. J. Duksza (Parkdale): Dismay.

Mr. Bounsall: Dismay! Thank you.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Chagrin.

Mr. Bounsall: Chagrin! Any other adjectives anyone would like me to add?

Mr. Reid: Disappointment!

Mr. Bounsall: Disappointment!

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Frustration!

Mr. Bounsall: Frustration!

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Bedevilment!

Mr. Bounsall: Bedevilment!

Mr. Gisborn: Government madness!

Mr. Bounsall: At any rate, those persons should be able to get a payment based upon the $10,000 that is obviously going to pass. They should not have to be limited now to $9,000.

If the ministry is simply going to have this section apply to those who after July 1 make $10,000, rather than all of those that made up to $10,000 previously, then we don't have much of a change. This change here is only miniscule.

We have asked the minister by amendment to consider taking off the ceiling entirely. He has not taken off the ceiling, he has advanced it by a simple $1,000. In addition, he refuses to help and extend that increase of $1,000 to all those who have been injured in the past and are under these ceilings. He will not extend it to all those injured workmen who were in high risk jobs, had high skill jobs, or who, in their place of employment were working a great degree of overtime—overtime in many cases forced upon them because of the overtime permits signed with great regularity by this ministry. This is the effect and force of this amendment. Again, the minister's reply no doubt will be: "We just can't afford it." We will have some remarks generally at the end as to what this ministry should be able to afford; what this government should be doing in the way of a decent workmen's compensation plan for the workers of this province.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any further comments. Those in favour of Mr. Bounsall's motion will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Mr. Gisborn: How can you say that?

Mr. Chairman: I don't see five. It is not stacked then. I declare the motion lost.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Reid: I have a few comments—

An hon. member: There were four standing up.

Mr. Chairman: I only saw four.

Mr. Bounsall: There were five of us at the beginning and at various times.

Mr. Reid: There were only four up.

Mr. Chairman: There were only four up.

Mr. Reid: It is all the same anyway. I have a feeling we are not going to win that one either.

Mr. Chairman: On section 5.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a few words on section 5. Before I speak specifically about what I want to say, I want to congratulate the minister on his impassioned defence of this bill yesterday. It is the first time in some time that we have got any kind of rise out of the minister who is usually very calm, cool and collected. One would almost think he has been studying the mannerisms of the Premier (Mr. Davis)—to speak in a monotone, not blink an eye, not get excited and not get passionate.

I want to say to the minister that I think that part of his response was influenced by the fact that he thought his personal integrity was being impugned. I can assure him that certainly we in this party were not impugning his integrity. I want to congratulate him in any case on a rather spirited defence in his rebuttal, even though I don't agree with the substance of what he said.

However, there was one point—and the failing of all of us, Mr. Chairman, is that sometimes we go too far. Had the minister quit, he would have had all of my sympathy. But he stood in his place, almost begging for some kind of congratulatory remarks from us on this side, in regard to the fight that he put up to have the Workmen's Compensation Act or these amendments not included under the Statutory Powers Procedure Act of 1971. The minister thought that he had done a great and excellent job in getting this particular provision put in this bill. Surely, the members opposite should realize what a great fight he had to get this provision, section 5 of the bill, put in.

We wonder on this side, against whom did he fight?

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): His cabinet colleagues.

Mr. Reid: Surely the minister would agree that it would have been a travesty of the bill, a complete negation of what has gone on since the Workmen's Compensation Board came into effect, to have this provision relating to the Statutory Powers Procedure Act incorporated into the bill.

Mr. Stokes: The board wouldn't fight.

Mr. Reid: It would abnegate all reason for the Workmen's Compensation Board proceeding as it does. Would the minister not agree with that? We are trying to get away from the courts, away from that particular kind of adversary system.

One has to ask oneself, Mr. Chairman, whom did the minister fight against to have this included in the bill? There are only two possibilities that I can think of. Maybe three.

Let's start with one rung. That is his advisers, his civil servant staff. Did they not want this is the bill? That seems unlikely because they would be more aware of what's involved than anyone else.

Would it be the manufacturers, the industrialists, the owners of the corporations, the managers of the mines and the factories? Would it have been they who would have liked to have seen these statutes come under the Statutory Powers Procedure Act? Would it have been they? Perhaps; perhaps it was.

The third alternative, of course, is his own cabinet colleagues.

Why would the cabinet ministers fight the minister, or why would the minister have to fight to maintain something that we've had pretty well since 1915? A system that has worked, not always perfectly but reasonably well when we take into consideration the human factor, a system that hasn't been all that bad. Why would the minister all of a sudden even think, or the cabinet allow, the whole system to be changed drastically by requiring it to come under the Statutory Powers Procedure Act?

The question that arises then is, what is the attitude of the minister's colleagues? I assume, first of all, that the minister did bring this before cabinet. I suppose that's how they rank you over there in that cabinet, Mr. Chairman. If you're in the top three or five or whatever it is, the hit parade there, you don't have to bring your bills before cabinet for general discussion before they are introduced.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): Like John White.

Mr. Reid: Such as John White or Darcy McKeough.

Mr. Roy: Certainly not Bert Lawrence.

Mr. Reid: On the other hand, the second tier, or lower level ministers, have to have everything vetted by the Premier, Mr. Kelly and other people who work out of the Premier's office.

Mr. Martel: Bill Kelly. Particularly Bill Kelly.

Mr. Stokes: I doubt that; I doubt that.

Mr. Reid: In any case, I would like to hear a fuller explanation from the minister as to who he did have to fight against to get this provision, that I would have thought would have been an automatic inclusion in the bill. It never occurred to me, Mr. Chairman, when I read the bill that it wouldn't be there. It would be just automatic. There would be no question that this would have to be in the bill, otherwise you would have to revamp the entire workmen's compensation system.

To hear the minister and others tell it, it's the greatest system in the world, and I'm not prepared to debate that it is not. But surely if it is relatively good then we shouldn't have had any problem with maintaining the way it is and improving the system as best we can, not by changing it radically, by excluding this provision and making the statute come under the influence of the Statutory Powers Procedures Act?

So I would ask the minister if he would be kind enough to inform us over here who he did fight with to get this included, and what was the basis of the argument on the other side that it should, in fact, be excluded from this bill?

Mr. Roy: You did a bit of shadow boxing, Fern. It was just a bit of shadow boxing.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: No, I'll be very honest with my hon. friend, perhaps I did overstate my case. No, I think I mentioned it, if he had listened carefully—

Mr. Reid: I always do.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: When I referred to newspapers, for instance. You have read a number of editorials, I'm sure, blaming the Minister of Labour for trying to exempt—

Mr. Stokes: They won't blame you for over-generosity!

Hon. Mr. Guindon: No, but we're doing the best job that's ever been done in any jurisdiction of Canada. That's not bad, that's not bad!

Mr. Roy: Which paper was that?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Even so, some were condemning or blaming the minister for exempting the Workmen's Compensation Board from the Statutory Powers Procedure Act. As you know, the time was up in April, and I think that's what I had in mind and I referred to it in my speech.

Oh there could be other advisers as well, and I certainly am not referring to my close advisers, but other people who could not see it. That's all there is to it. You don't have to worry about my rapport with my colleagues.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): That's for sure.

Mr. Reid: I'm sorry, I did hear the minister refer to the newspapers, although I thought it was in connection with something else. But would the minister not agree that if we didn't have section 5 in here it would completely radicalize or change completely the Workmen's Compensation Act? The system just wouldn't work.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Well, some other opinions that I have heard were that they felt it wasn't necessary to exempt it. But I wanted to make sure, that's why I put it in.

Mr. Reid: Congratulations, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Thank you.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I am trying to become informed as to exactly what this section's intent and purpose is.

I was of the understanding that section 72 protected the board from review by the courts. Is the insertion of your new section to further strengthen that right? Has there been some reason, some cases of precedent that have scared the minister? I'm in favour of the intent and principle completely, but I thought we had that protection previous to this being placed in here.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, I think, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member touched a real point. That is the big question. I did obtain legal opinions from various areas, not being a lawyer myself; from outside firms and everything. Mind you, as usual, I couldn't get a consensus, so as I wanted to make sure I put it in here.

Mr. Stokes: That is an advantage.

Mr. Bounsall: On this section, Mr. Chairman.

I did a little reading after the minister's first reply in which he sounded so tender and fragile over the lack of accolades that flowed to him for putting this section in. As I read through this bill, when I first got it I read each section and if it didn't make sense to me I looked to see if there was a note. I must say that this is my normal way of reading bills.

I found I had no need for the notes in this bill until I got to section 5. I didn't know what the hell it meant so I looked over to the left and that's very helpful — it's only section that isn't explained in the bill; it says it's self-explanatory! It really did cause me to give a sort of a wry smile when I saw that. So, I must admit, I had to do some further checking.

I did some checking with, of course, the one person in our caucus who is most qualified for me to check with, the hon. member for Lakeshore. Of course, he was able to pull out all the thoughts that he had ever had upon the Statutory Powers Procedure Act in 1971 and it was a very enlightening experience to have gone through.

An hon. member: You found you had a hearing problem!

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Reid: Did he have any thoughts about this bill?

Mr. Roy: It's a very small bill.

Mr. Bounsall: He didn't talk about this bill. He told me all about the Statutory Powers Procedure Act and all the reasons why we needed to have it and the nightmares and the dreams that McRuer had in his royal commission inquiry into civil rights that caused the various things to be written there that caused this Act to proceed.

I'm certainly glad that the minister didn't put a written explanation in this, and that I had to go to my colleague from Lakeshore to receive the kind of explanation which only he can give.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That would be very helpful.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): You still didn't know what it meant.

Mr. Bounsall: But speaking to the point, I gather from the member for Lakeshore and with the various other thoughts that I've had since then, that the Statutory Powers Procedure Act is an Act governing procedures—procedures which themselves govern the exercise of statutory power that's granted to tribunals like the Workmen's Compensation Board by legislation, wherein the rights, and the duties and the privileges of persons are to be decided at, or as a result of, or following a hearing.

It was quite clear to me that the reason that you'd like to remove this from the Workmen's Compensation Board jurisdiction and further strengthen it—and, in fact why you do have section 72 in the Workmen's Compensation Act already—is due to the demonstrated fact that before we had the board—and I suppose even for awhile after we had the board—cases went to the courts and the courts had no expertise and no feeling at all for factors involved in an injured workman's disability and that the Workmen's Compensation Board tribunal does have the expertise, the competence, the background, the feeling and the sensitivity to make decisions involving industrial accidents, the extent of disability, and so on.

When you talk to them down there you get this impression about their feeling and sensitivity for injured workmen in this province. The only thing that hampers them in giving the workmen a better break is the legislation in this province.

Now that part of it is very fine. This whole Statutory Powers Procedure Act arose out of the McRuer recommendations from the royal commission inquiry into civil rights.

Mr. Roy: We know all about that.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: No we don't.

Mr. Bounsall: What bothers me a little bit, and I would like to hear the minister's reply to this, what about the safeguards that Act builds in? What about all the things in that Act which safeguard the rights of the individual? What about those safeguards contained therein regarding the disposition of proceedings without a hearing, that the hearings be public, the right to have a counsel, the right for witnesses to have counsel, the right of counsel to examine witnesses, the right of issuance of summonses to attend hearings, the right about what is admissible and inadmissible as evidence, and the right to have a complete record and transcript of all procedures and hearings, including notices and final decisions?

That is all contained in the Statutory Powers Procedure Act. I can well see that you don't want these cases before the court, because of the feeling and sensitivity of the tribunal members, when they are there.

But what about all these other guarantees which the Statutory Powers Procedure Act gives to individuals in this province that appear, simple-mindedly to me to all go out the window?

Are they all contained in the Workmen's Compensation Act. Where are all these rights and safeguards that should pertain to any individual appearing before the board in connection with his disability?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member put it quite well. The expertise and the competence of the board he knows and we all know, but this is a decision that we had to make. That was one of the reasons for exempting the Workmen's Compensation Act from the Statutory Powers Procedure Act.

There is another reason. The fact that you would have had a great number of appeals to the court, I would presume. And knowing further that the workmen themselves can least afford to hire lawyers and to appear in court, for one thing; and secondly, knowing also that some of these cases might take two years before you get an award.

Mr. Lawlor: You don't want the appeal provision; but there are other things which might be kept.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Well, sorry! It would have taken two years. What we are doing here is we are protecting the worker against, perhaps large corporations or employers who wouldn't mind dragging the cases, for two years, through the courts.

As far as the civil rights are concerned, well that's a decision we had to make. We either come under the Statutory Powers Procedure Act or we don't; and by experience I don't think that we can.

With their four levels of appeals, I think the board has shown that rights of individuals have been protected over the years. That was the main reason, I think, we opted for including this section.

You know, we have half a million claims every year. Imagine just five per cent of the claims going to court and you already have 2,500.

I know of other jurisdictions, in the United States, for example, which have asked us to go over there and explain to them the operation of our Workmen's Compensation Act. In fact they want to follow what has been done in Ontario, because they have a backlog of cases in the courts and they don't know how long it will take to deal with them.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 5 then stand as part of the bill? The member for Lake-shore.

Mr. Lawlor: I have not got the legislation in front of me, but we never anticipated, nor did we want, the appeal provision of the Statutory Powers Procedure Act to be invoked. But surely it's not a case of all or nothing at all? It's quite possible to say that section thus, thus and thus of the Statutory Powers Procedure Act with respect to cross-examining, with respect to hearings, with respect to the fundamental civil liberties be incorporated in here; and that other sections, such as appeal sections and maybe some others too, be excluded, because you do want to keep those hearings much unlike a courtroom; you don't want too much of an adversary atmosphere, but you want a great deal of informality, of elbow room to move around.

Still, even in this area—I am not just speaking as a lawyer, I don't think, I hope not—McRuer went to an infinite amount of trouble with respect to boards and commissions of all kinds throughout the province, saying that there are certain nubs in matters such as the right of the hearing and to be informed, and to have it set down in a way that was clear.

I know it's all done within the ambit of the rules of the books, but they haven't got that binding effect and that forcefulness that would be there if your statute said section so-and-so and so from the Statutory Powers Procedure Act will be incorporated into our legislation. That is really what we were suggesting, and I wonder really if you still might just take that under consideration, as giving at least nodding acquaintance to the monumental work, five great volumes, which still affect your board like any other agency, as I understand it.

As a matter of fact, isn't it in the cards, or is this the move now—I understood there were about 36 to 41 different statutes that still have to be brought under the McRuer umbrella; that they were complicated and required special attention, the Municipal Board being one of them, the Liquor Licence and the other boards being in it, and I thought your board was in that last volume too, where numerous recommendations were made, designed precisely to safeguard basic liberties in this regard.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes; well I am sure the hon. member would know that in McRuer's report he had exempted the Workmen's Compensation Board for one year; the time was up in April. The Coroners Act too; however, the Coroners Act has been exempted forever, I think.

Mr. Lawlor: We have a new Coroners Act; it's very good.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: As for the Ontario Labour Relations Act, it was not suggested in McRuer that it should be exempted, and this will require government decision sometime. But the Workmen's Compensation Board, McRuer said, "For one year we'll exempt it from the Statutory Powers Procedure Act," with the intention more or less to bring it up after a year of experience.

But the main point that you were making, the protection of civil rights, I am very keen about this as well and I'll be glad to take a personal look at it.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 5 then stand as part of the bill?

Carried.

Any comments, questions or amendments on any later section of the bill? Which section?

Mr. Martel: Section 6, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Section 6.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Minister, the whole payment of silicosis claims has bothered me, particularly with respect to pensions. If I understand it correctly, at present a man who has silicosis, might leave that area of work of exposure to silicate dust, and could for another eight or 10 years carry on full employment, and ultimately be forced out of work by the silicosis. His pension then is established not at the time he leaves work, but at the time that he left the area of exposure to silicate dust, which means in effect, in the case I am talking about, the man's pension was established 13 years after he left the area of exposure. In fact, his pension was based on his wages in 1955 or 1956, and the rate of disability was established at 50 per cent in 1969.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): 85 cents an hour or something like that.

Mr. Martel: In fact, his pension was very small. He had continued to earn a good industrial wage until 1969 when he was ultimately forced out of work — there were complications, such as TB—but the rate was established at the time he left the area of exposure to silicate dust. That is why I introduced Bill 120, which now stands on the order paper.

I think it is ridiculous that it would happen in that fashion. I don't see any justification for that sort of manner for establishing the rate of pension to which the man would be entitled.

Either you give him the rate, Mr. Chairman, of his pension based on what he was earning at the time he left work, which would have been 1969, or you give him the rate of disability he had from the time he left the area of exposure; which in this case would have taken him back to 1955.

But you can't have it both ways. You can't let the man continue to work for 13 more years, establish his pension back in 1955 or 1956, give him a rating based on the 1955 salary, and then not give him retroactive compensation for a disability back in 1955. That is one area—related to an industrial disease brought about by exposure to silica dust.

The other one that bothers me—it should have been in this bill and it is not—the cancer cases from the sintering plant at Inco. Now, if a man gets an injury and he suffers a percentage disability, he gets a pension, even if he goes to back to work. It is my understanding that a man could have a lung removed for cancer, having worked in the sintering plant, he can go back to work but he doesn't get a pension.

Maybe I am wrong about that, but it seems to me I am not. It seems unfair that you would pay for a back injury, you would pay for a leg injury, and a man can lose a lung, so back to work, but he doesn't get a pension for the loss of that lung. There is no consistency in both these areas, Mr. Minister, and I would appreciate some consideration.

I realize it might be extremely difficult to bring in an amendment today, because of the complexity of both of these situations, but if I am right I would urge that the minister consider bringing in amendment such as my amendment, a very simple amendment in Bill 120, which would cover this case of the silica dust and the silicosis, and the introduction of another amendment for those who have suffered the loss of a lung from cancer and have returned to work. I would elicit the minister's response.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Chairman, of course, in the case of silicosis, it is not as clear cut as my hon. friend would make us believe. What this section really does is that before we made these agreements with other provinces and other authorities, a worker, leaving Ontario, for instance, going into Manitoba, and finding out after a couple of years that he was a victim of silicosis, which can be detected fairly easily today; if he had to be hospitalized, the province of Manitoba probably would not want to pay for him. Now we have agreements with every province in Canada where we will share the cost, depending on the number of years, as determined by medical evidence, of course. That, I think, is a great improvement.

Now in the case of cancer, well that is quite different. Because we have so many different causes of cancer it is hard to determine, and I am sure the hon. member, and certainly myself, would be in no position to say that cancer was caused because of this type of work or because of cigarettes or because of having broiled steaks or liquor. I wouldn't know the difference, so it has to be left with the doctors, the medical experts.

Mr. Martel: I think I want to correct both points, Mr. Minister. The Compensation Board has accepted payment for cancer as a result of work in the sintering plant at the International Nickel Co. operation.

There are, I believe, about 37 cases. Not all have been accepted, but in the last six or eight months the vast majority of them have now been accepted by the board as an industrial disease related to the sinter from the sintering plant which has subsequently been closed.

In fact, the Department of Health today is conducting four tests—two sputum tests and two lung tests. The first series started last week, I believe in Sudbury, on all employees of the sintering plant in Copper Cliff. They know it is causing it and the board has accepted this, Mr. Minister.

I'm not talking about cancer in the terms you want to talk about it. I'm saying that we are talking about cancer caused in the sintering plant and for which compensation is now being paid. I'm saying that some of the men, as I understand it, have returned to work—modified work—but that unlike other accidents, even though they've lost a lung they don't get a partial disability pension.

But if you've got a broken back, a broken leg, silicosis even, you get a partial disability pension. Why this exclusion? That's the first point.

I want to go back to the silicosis. I'm not talking about out-of-province, Mr. Minister. We know that many of the people who have silicosis today got it while working in the gold mines in the Timmins area and so on.

Mr. Ferrier: Timmins and Kirkland Lake.

Mr. Martel: The Timmins and Kirkland Lake area. They might have left their former place of work to come to Sudbury, and many of them started to work at either Falconbridge, Inco or some other occupation. Let's say that in their latter years at Timmins, or when they came to one of the mining operations in Sudbury to work for two or three years, they were exposed to dust, but not silicate dust. But it aggravated the lungs. When they started to test these men to determine what was wrong, it was considered they had silicosis. That might be the year 1960, let's say, Mr. Minister.

They took them out of the area of exposure to dust—in the Timmins area it would be silicate dust—and for 10 years he continues to work. At the end of 10 years the silicate dust has taken its toll; it's proven the man has silicosis. He can no longer work. He might be classified as 50 per cent disabled.

As I understand it, his pension is based not on his wages at the time he left work, which was 1970, but in fact his pension is assessed on his wages in 1960, when he was taken out of the area where there was silicate dust involved. Now that's completely unjust. Because he suffered that problem for 10 years; he continued to work. I've talked to them. Although they have great difficulty breathing and so on, they continue to work. A man has suffered maybe only 30 per cent, but it increased until it reached the point he couldn't work. The man has got no disability allowance during those years.

Now what I'm saying is you have to do it one of two ways, Mr. Minister. The man either starts to draw a partial disability allowance from 1960, which could be difficult to prove or assess the degree of disability. Or at the very least we establish his pension on the day he leaves work, based on that salary he is earning when he leaves work.

I hope I'm getting through to the minister the point I'm trying to make. It is just unjust to go back 10, 12 years to establish his pension on it. The man has been earning maybe then $2 an hour. He's worked up until 70 or 71, maybe at $3.50, $4 an hour—and you don't establish his pension on the $4 an hour, you go back to the $2. That's unjust and I'm asking the minister to consider a change.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, the member got through all right; I know what he means. Although the worker has been working from 60 to 70 at full salary, I imagine, the pension is based on the time it was discovered that he was suffering from silicosis. It could be 10 years behind. I would be glad to look at it. It really had never come to my attention before today.

Mr. Martel: Would the minister look at it?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes.

Mr. Ferrier: Further to this point — the unfairness of it is further complicated by the fact that if a man is detected as having silicosis and he decides that he is going to go into some other industry, he can draw his pension right away and he may be able to work in some other industry for years.

I had a man who was detected as having silicosis. He drew his full compensation pension and he worked as a bartender for years. Another man who, it was detected, had it, got out of the mines and went to work for Ontario Hydro.

These fellows are all right; they are drawing their pension right along but as long as a fellow stays in the same industry, he is the fellow who is penalized. He has to wait until he retires and then, as my colleague said, his pension is calculated at what he was earning away back when it was first detected.

I say to people, if they come into this kind of situation: "If you can get out of the industry you are in now and get into something else, you can get your pension; but if you stick in there you can't get it". It seems to me to be too great a concession to the mining companies. If the fellow has a disability from silicosis he should be compensated for the degree he has it during all those years he continued to work in the mining industry or, as my colleague says, at the rate of pay he is at when he leaves that industry. There is too much in favour of the industry right now and it militates against the workman.

I would like to ask another question in connection with the silicosis basis; what consideration is being given to broaden the concept of industrial lung conditions in the mining industry, and take in some other kind of complaint? You don't have to live in a mining area very long to know that many more people are impaired from lung conditions, on a percentage basis, far greater than you find in any other community.

It is my firm opinion that many of these things are caused or aggravated a great deal by exposure to silica dust and other kinds of dust to which they are subjected while working underground in this environment and the dampness and all the rest of it. I would hope that you would broaden this to include other categories of lung conditions rather than just limit it to silicosis which makes it on a very narrow basis.

As I said before, many of the miners have silicosis but once they get their x-rays it is judged that they do not have it sufficiently to be disabling in accordance with the Act. On a number of occasions I have noticed when they have died and pathological examinations have been held, sure enough these men had silicosis but they say it is moderate; it is only confined to certain areas. They say it is not of a significant enough nature to have caused disability while alive or is not the cause of death.

Right now for the gold miner, the person who is subjected to silica dust and has contracted some silicosis, it is not being considered as a very disabling condition. In fact, if you see the men and you see the problems that they have with other lung conditions, such as emphysema and bronchitis, in certain cases, and sometimes cancer develops — perhaps you can't relate cancer to this exposure I don't know — but there is TB and other things. I think that this whole area has got to be broadened. I know the Minister of Mines had a study that has finally had been completed, after about six years, by Dr. Patterson. Now, I hope that some action will be taken to more justly treat the gold miners who have contacted some degree of silicosis, or who have serious lung impairment from their employment. I say it's from their employment, and they believe that.

You'll never convince them and you'll never convince the miners up in my community and, I suspect the same in Kirkland Lake, that their chest conditions are not the direct result of their mining exposure. And I would like to see a little more just approach being taken toward the miners and a broadening of the whole scope of lung conditions allowed for gold miners in this province.

Mr. Chairman: Does the minister wish to reply? I will allow it. But I would remind the members, of course, that this discussion has nothing to do with section 6. Section 6 has to do with extending the—

Mr. Martel: Silicosis.

Mr. Chairman: Oh no, it hasn't. It's extending the scope of making interprovincial agreements, not the whole philosophy of silicosis rewards.

Mr. Gisborn: Okay, Mr. Chairman, I will try now and get to that. I would ask the minister to explain to us just exactly what the benefits are in this change. Offhand, it seems to me that they're not an improvement for the workmen. A first look at the change would suggest their benefits would be reduced. Would the minister explain, exactly, if the change is really intended to be an improvement on the liability of Ontario, or if it is the intention to reduce the responsibility of the Province of Ontario, per se the Workmen's Compensation Board, in regard to this disease?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: I think I can assure my hon. friend that Ontario certainly doesn't want to shirk its responsibility in this field. No, I think it is to help the workmen, and there is no question about that. There have been a number of cases where the different authorities or governments did not agree. One question, for instance, involved the matter of residence or the requirements dealing with exposure. How long have you lived in Ontario and who is most responsible? And I think in this field we are going as far as we can. We want to make sure that our workmen get their fair share. I'm sure that's the purpose of this legislation here.

Now, just briefly, to the hon. member for Cochrane South. I'll be glad, as I promised his colleague the hon. member for Sudbury East, to look into the matter of silicosis, and particularly the matter of people staying in the industry. And as you have put it so well, if they go out of the industry they are much better off. That's one area I would like to look into.

Industrial lung conditions in the mining industry is another area I would particularly like to be more familiar with as time goes on.

Mr. Haggerty: It should have been included in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: But I can imagine, and I am only speaking as a layman, the difficulty at times for even the medical profession to state for sure what has been the cause. Especially in cases where you have a workmen who, perhaps, are heavy smokers or drinkers. It would be difficult, I imagine.

Mr. Martel: These cancer cases are recognized now by the board and the board is paying compensation to them, now.

Mr. Haggerty: In certain cases.

Mr. Martel: In the sintering plant they are paying compensation now for cancer and the only point I make—

Mr. Chairman: Order please!

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, but I am talking on the point that the hon. member for Cochrane South was making.

Mr. Martel: Pardon me.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Of course, we meet cases like this in the mining industry. I have here—I must admit that I can't read too well, or the writing is not too good—it says here that the disease, or the sickness, has to be peculiar to or characteristic of an industry. That's the definition. It has to be connected with the industry.

Mr. Martel: It is.

Mr. Ferrier: I think it is.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 6—

Mr. Martel: Can I just get a clarification?

Mr. Chairman: If it's on the section, rather than on the broad field of silicosis treatment because that's really not what this section has to deal with.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I'd simply like—

Mr. Chairman: Is your comment on this?

Mr. Haggerty: Yes, I just want a point of clarification on this matter of section 6. How far back does this apply to persons who have silicosis? Would this go back 10 years? Could these persons come in and apply for a claim now?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: There is no limitation in this bill, that I can see.

Mr. Haggerty: There's no limitation. That's the understanding. What about a person who had silicosis—say 10 years ago—and has had an application to the Workmen's Compensation Board and has been denied because they've worked in the Province of Quebec? As soon as agreement is finalized between the provinces then will this take effect? Is this the understanding?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Well no. I don't think you can make it effective 10 years ago. I think as of when the bill comes into force.

Mr. Haggerty: Yes, but I have a couple of claims that have been pending the decision of this government to bring in legislation to the effect that you do have a reciprocal agreement between two provinces. Now, I have a file—two files in fact—sitting down in my cabinet right now that are waiting for this to come in. Now, can I initiate a claim on their behalf and be hopeful that it will be successful this time?

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Before I can answer your question I'll inquire and let you know tomorrow. I can't tell you for sure right now.

Mr. Haggerty: By that time it will be too late. The bill will be passed.

Mr. L. Maeck (Parry Sound): It is going to pass anyway.

Mr. Martel: Unless we can stall it.

Mr. Gisborn: I still don't understand the change that is being made, and the improvement. The present Act, if I'm right, provides for the board to make a reciprocal agreement with other provinces or territories of Canada if they have an applicant claiming to have been exposed to silica dust and has contacted silicosis, whether or not he had any exposure at all in Ontario. Is that the interpretation of the present section?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, it's the sharing of costs. I imagine that's when two jurisdictions are responsible, to a certain extent, and it's to find out exactly what proportion of the cost will be charged to Ontario as compared to the other jurisdiction.

Mr. Gisborn: But I thought that the present Act provides for that. Your amendment only adds something for the workmen who have had exposure employment in Ontario and who may not qualify for benefits in any other province, or territory of Canada because of residence or exposure requirements. Does that mean that he must have had some contact in Ontario before this board would receive responsibility through a contact in another province where he was not entitled to coverage?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes. The way it was explained to me, and I understand it, is that supposing you have a workman who worked in Ontario until, say two years ago, and doesn't even know that he's a victim of silicosis or suffers from it. Then he goes to another province and finds out that he is affected by silicosis and the doctor has medical evidence to show that it started in Ontario and for so many years; then we apportion the costs.

Mr. Gisborn: Then am I correct in assuming that the change here is to give protection to the other provinces to claim on Ontario their share of the responsibility? You've already provided for your responsibilities in an agreement with the other provinces in your present Act. Is it the case that the change now gives you the right to share a cost where the application for coverage is made in another province?

Is that the change? I'm trying to understand what the change is for, where you just put in there, "under exposure in the Province of Ontario." Have you had a complaint from other provinces that they have no way to receive a sharing agreement with you, if it happens the application is made in their provinces?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Oh yes; it works both ways you know—it's a two-way street. Other provinces have the same thing against us.

Mr. Gisborn: I'm trying to find out what the change really means. The present Act, sub section 11 of section 118, gives you the right to make an agreement with another province and share a responsibility that arises there. Is your change in section 6 to give you the right to share in their responsibility?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Chairman, I don't have the whole Act here, but I think in the old one there was a two-year exposure clause which is not stated here. I think that's the change.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 6 then stand as part of the bill?

Mr. Ferrier: Could I just ask one further question?

Is the eligibility for silicosis pension in every province the same. That is, does it have to be two years' exposure in each of the provinces? Suppose a man works for a year and one half in Timmins and then he went to the Northwest Territories and worked for a couple of years, or worked maybe a year there. Would the combined exposure in both jurisdictions be sufficient to establish entitlement for a silicosis pension? If he got the extra half a year, say in the Northwest Territories and he had a year and one half here, does this mean that a claim could be allowed, whereas previously it wouldn't be allowed?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, as you say, I think perhaps the awards or pensions may differ from one jurisdiction to another. This will allow Ontario to pay its share for the number of months or years that he hasn't been working in an industry in this province, where it is shown by medical evidence that he had symptoms or was the victim of silicosis.

It's a grey area. I'll try to get all the details for you, which I don't have at the present time. But I am told that it's an improvement on what we had before.

Mr. Ferrier: I would appreciate it, Mr. Minister, if you would get the details. Does this mean if a man worked five years in Ontario and then he goes to a gold mine, say in Quebec, and works there for five years, that the responsibility for the pension is 50-50, or on the proportion to the years that he worked in each province?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, that's what it is.

Mr. Ferrier: If you'd pass that on, I'd appreciate it.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I don't want to procrastinate on this question. Could the minister have his officials sometime in the future write an interpretation of the change in these two sections and send it to us, so that we have a clear idea of just how the present section operated and how the new Act will operate and what the intention of the change is. Will you do that?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, I could. We intend to present our estimates on the impending Act very soon. This may not be at the time of the estimates because I'll be in the House, but I'll be glad to arrange for those concerned to meet our senior officials at the board and have them explain exactly what is taking place.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 6 stand as part of the bill then?

Carried.

Section 7 carried.

Section 8.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Chairman, on section 8; I am rather tempted to put forth a formal amendment on section 8 that would cause this section to read: "This Act may be cited as the Workmen's Compensation Amendment Act that Bitterly Disappoints Injured Workmen in Ontario."

One of my colleagues to my right suggested—

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): I will second that.

Mr. Bounsall:—that I should use the word "screws" rather than "bitterly disappoints", but I didn't think that was quite parliamentary language, so "bitterly disappoints" will be the amendment I would make, if I am forced to make it in order to make a few short comments at this time on this bill, now that we are by and large through with the clause by clause debate.

Mr. Chairman and Mr. Minister, this bill to me is one gigantic sin of omission.

Mr. Chairman: Order please.

We are getting back, I would suggest, to the principle of the bill which was on second reading, which has been carried. Now if you are taking as a precedent the discussion that took place at the end of another bill, that was by special agreement with the minister because — I forget the exact circumstances now — that there were some figures and there was an explanation asked for and he said would explain it at that time because there was not other time. To discuss the principle of the bill again is out of order.

Mr. Bounsall: Could I inquire from you, Mr. Chairman, which other bill that was, that special arrangement—

Mr. Chairman: It was one of the tax bills. I forget which one.

Mr. Martel: That infamous bill.

Mr. Chairman: There was a set of figures—the Retail Sales Tax Act I am informed—which was unclear and the minister said he would discuss it then; but that was a special arrangement at that particular time. This business of discussing the principle of the bill on final clause is not standard procedure; in fact it is out of order.

Shall section 8 stand as a part of the bill?
Carried.

Now we have five or six; let me see, it is six amendment votes that were stacked. Will you call in the members please!

Order please! Order.

We have six motions which were stacked to be dealt with at this time. I will read the first one: Mr. Bounsall moves that section 1(1)(c), 1(1)(b), 1(2)(a), 1(2)(b), be amended by replacing an invalid husband with the word "widower" and "$250" with "$425" adjusted semi-annually in accordance with the percentage increase in salaries, of wages in Ontario."

By the way, before I place it, the other motions are all very similar;—could we lump them all together—make them as one—are we agreed? All right.

The committee divided for a stacked vote on the following six amendments: Mr. Bounsall's amendment to section 1(1)(c), 1(1)(d), 1(2)(a) and 1(2)(b); Mr. Bounsall's amendment to section 1(1)(d) and 1(1)(e); Mr. Bounsall's amendment to section 1(2)(b) and 1(2)(c); Mr. Reid's amendment to section 1 adding a new subsection (4); Mr. Bounsall's amendment to section 2(a)(i) and 2(a)(ii); Mr. Bounsall's amendment to section 4(1); all of which were negated on the following vote:

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 33, the "nays" are 54.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the amendments lost.

Bill 126 reported.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves that the committee rise and report.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report one bill without amendments and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION SAFETY ACT

Hon. Mr. Guindon moves second reading of Bill 127, the Construction Safety Act, 1973.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Rainy River.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): It was a good speech.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Thanks.

Mr. Singer: That's one of the member's best speeches.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I'll be brief. I start by saying that we in this party will support this bill. There's a number of things in it, of course, as there always is, that we don't entirely agree with or that we would like to see changed.

However, in regard to the principle of the bill we find that we can accept it. The changes are outlined on the inside cover. I won't go through them as I think they are pretty well self-explanatory. There are, however, a number of questions I would like to put to the minister about matters that I'm not particularly clear on and perhaps he could clear them up.

There are two or three things missing from the bill in the first place. One is that we would like to see pre-medicals for the people that are working on underground construction sites. We'd like to see a very tight pre-medical so that the people who are working under these conditions will have been very thoroughly checked for any weaknesses that they might already have but would be affected deleteriously by working in these kinds of places, particularly the underground workers and subway workers and that sort of thing.

Another thing that I think that has been deleted that I think should be in this bill—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member must realize that he can't debate items that are not in the bill.

Mr. Singer: He's talking about the principle.

Mr. Reid: I'm talking about the deficiencies of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may not talk about those things. He may debate the matters in the bill.

Mr. Reid: I won't debate them, Mr. Speaker, but with your permission, after I speak about the principle of the bill, perhaps I could pose a number of questions that would answer my questions and solve that particular problem.

The bill is to allow municipalities over 100,000 people to have their own inspectors. The corollary is that the Ministry of Labour will have provincial inspectors for such construction sites across the Province of Ontario. We in this party have pushed for this some years. I think we are all aware of the tragedies that have happened in various municipalities where the inspection was not quite as rigid or in some cases there wasn't adequate inspection or no inspection at all, and that caused some very serious and tragic accidents.

We have said to the Minister of Labour and his predecessors on occasions before that the inspection of these sites should be under the Ministry of Labour, with provincial standards, and should apply in all parts of the province.

That principle of the bill, Mr. Speaker, we agree with entirely. We wonder what the delay was in bringing in the bill. I believe this was the bill that was brought in last year and then not passed, and either withdrawn or it died on the order paper. But in any case, we are happy to see that it is here now.

I wonder if the minister could explain why, on page 9 of the bill, section 11 subsection 6, it says: "Where an inspector gives an order under this section he may fix a copy thereof to the project or any part thereof."

There are a lot of "mays" in this bill. I think, under the circumstances, particularly for the protection of the working people and anybody else who might be doing an on-site inspection, these particular clauses should be mandatory and that the bill should say "must."

I also wonder if the minister could indicate to me—and I speak out of not too much knowledge in this matter—why the Petroleum Resources Act, or matters dealing with petroleum wells and so on, have been exempted. My friend from Welland South has pointed out to me that this bill will not apply, particularly, I believe, to offshore—

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Offshore drilling.

Mr. Reid: Offshore drilling in the various Great Lakes around the southern part of the province, and wherever else drilling might take place. Perhaps the minister could indicate why that exemption is made in this bill.

As well, Mr. Speaker, we will be amending the bill, I believe, in one respect. We feel that the handling of explosives is a very touchy subject—is that a pun? But it could be potentially an explosive situation—thank you. That is not covered under this bill. We feel that these matters should be, and we will be amending the bill in that respect.

Other than that, Mr. Speaker, we support the principle of the bill. We shall vote in favour of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this entirely new Act, the Construction Safety Act, 1973, I might say this isn't an amendment to an already existing act, but an entirely new Act. I would suggest that the discussion on this should be pretty free and wide ranging, as it is when we debate the principle of an entirely new Act that comes before us.

It is true that it is a combination of the Construction Safety Act combined with the majority of the safety sections of the Trench Excavators Protection Act and the Ministry of Labour Act, where you have the provisions relating to underground workers. It is a combination of all of these three.

What stands out in my mind as a rather glaring exception is the mine safety section of the Mining Act, which I feel should be included here. The whole mine safety section would be just as appropriate to include here, as the Mining Act should be under the Ministry of Labour.

This is probably the only reason why this has not been included. It's time, with the government reorganization over there, that they got the Mining Act under the proper ministry and the safety inspection of mines under the proper ministry and into this entire safety Act. That is really what this Act, as I read it, purports to do.

There are certainly some positive advantages of this large, now combined, Act, Mr. Speaker. By far and away one of the most interesting portions of it is the way in which provincial inspection of safety is going to be funded after the first year of operation of this Act. The cost of enforcement and inspection will come through a five per cent assessment on the Workmen's Compensation assessment of companies, and this I find to be rather a laudable move.

What it means is that through neither individual municipal taxpayers nor through general provincial taxation—through neither of these sources will the public of Ontario be paying for construction safety inspection, trench excavation safety inspection nor underground worker safety inspection. In that sense it is very laudatory.

Homeowners in all the cities and towns across Ontario will not have to carry this extra burden of taxation, which they now have to pay for county and city construction safety inspectors through their municipalities and counties.

Another thing, of course, turning to the other positive aspect of the bill, is that it will ensure two things. One, that there will be an adequate, we hope, and we'll have some further comments on this in a moment, and uniform safety inspection throughout the province.

We have been bedevilled by this in the past in fast growing areas, with a particular municipality providing the safety inspection. Particularly in Metropolitan Toronto, where you've got great anomalies occurring within the boroughs. In North York, I believe it was, in 1970 there was five times as much construction work as in any other borough in Toronto. Yet North York didn't have as many safety inspectors as there were in some other boroughs in Toronto, which simply means that construction safety inspection was not occurring.

I can therefore see safety inspectors in this province being placed under provincial jurisdiction. There certainly should be uniform inspection, that is uniform in the sense that there should be the same number of visits per construction site. Visits could occur with as great a degree of frequency or as quickly, in some municipalities, as is now occurring when they hire their own employees to do this particular job.

But certainly one can anticipate and hope that the positive aspect of this bill, that of providing uniformity in safety inspection, will in many areas, therefore, and particularly in fast-growing areas, provide inspection which heretofore was very sloppy and lacking.

The other positive spin-off associated with this point, is that in many parts of this province there is good safety inspection. The minister would be the last person to deny that that is the case. Many inspectors in many municipalities are, in fact, doing a good, adequate and conscientious job.

By saying this, however, and by what I next say, I do not want to cast aspersions on all those safety inspectors, whether they combine holding another job with one as building inspector or not. I do not want to say that they are not doing an adequate job. And I do not want to say they are not trained for that job. There must be examples—and again the minister would not deny this—where you have people at the level of grave-diggers and dog-catchers who are acting as safety inspectors for their municipalities. Or you have a person whose many assignments include that of safety inspector for his municipality or his area.

So when you have people of this calibre, with lack of related background training doing safety inspection in our province, it is clear to me that trained personnel with safety inspector as their only assignment represents a step forward.

There are some parts of this bill, however, that do bother me a little, and I will make some comments at some length on them, Mr. Speaker. I'm just wondering if it is sufficiently close to the 6 o'clock p.m. adjournment hour and if we could leave at this point and carry on at 8 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Speaker: I assure the hon. member that he will have the floor when we resume.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, if I may, could I ask the hon. member to adjourn the debate, because I had actually announced in advance that I would call Bill No. 128 at 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): What bill is that?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: It is the planning and development bill. I suggested it would go on this evening.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, as I saw the list put forward by the hon. minister, the House leader, yesterday, there were a number of orders and the planning bill was tacked onto the end of it. With so much work to do, we would like that to be discussed no earlier than Monday, if convenient.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I'm not going to object to that, except that when I announced the order, as of the order paper, I suggested that we would start on this bill today. Now if the House doesn't want that, it is agreeable to me, and we will continue with the bill that's before us.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Thank you.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, I would adjourn the debate on this; this part is agreeable to me, if I could have some idea of when the continuation of Bill 127 might occur.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Yes, I would be prepared to inform the hon. member of that; but I am in the hands of the House at the moment, I'll do as they choose.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ontario Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: The government's running of the House business has always left something to be desired, if I may so. This is a major bill; it's obviously a pretty fundamental change in government policy. If it could be put off at least for another day or two; it's a picayune kind of delay, however, that would be helpful, given the fact that it is only two days since we have had any idea of the government's intention, and had a chance of looking at the bill. And I would suggest to the House Leader—

Mr. Speaker: This is no point of order.

Mr. Cassidy: Well Mr. Speaker, could I suggest to the House leader that at least the construction safety bill be completed, and then—if that's the way the government intends to do it—that we go on with the Planning and Development Act?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: There would be no objections.

Mr. Cassidy: There have been rumours that this might come up this evening. There has been no confirmation except possibly assurances that the minister has made to the Treasurer (Mr. White). They certainly haven't been made to this side of the House to my knowledge.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I disagree with that statement, but I said that I would co-operate with the House and we will continue with Bill 127 this evening.

Mr. Speaker: It being 6 of the clock I do now leave the chair; we shall resume at 8.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

APPENDIX

The Treasurer and Minister of Inter-governmental Affairs tabled answers to certain oral questions, as follows:

OAKVILLE-MISSISSAUGA MINI-BELT: GENERATING STATION SITE

The question was asked as to the nature of plans for Hydro facilities in the Oakville-Mississauga mini-belt.

Both a transformer and generating station are now planned by Ontario Hydro for 1985 or later. At this stage, Ontario Hydro does not know what type of generating station will be needed, or what type of transformer facility will be required to link this station to the power grid. The proposed parkway belt plan simply acknowledges a future use in the mini-belt for such a facility as part of a policy of reserving land for such activities in the future.

The locations are not yet determined precisely, but the land reservation for the generating station is near Highway 2, and the transformer station reserve is immediately above the intersection of the mini-belt and the southerly east-west parkway belt.

LAND ACQUISITION COSTS: NIAGARA ESCARPMENT

The question of the estimate of $3 billion for acquisition of Niagara Escarpment lands, and the relationship of this to figures in the Gertler report has been raised.

The task force estimate of acquisition costs in excess of $3 billion was based on almost total acquisition of all lands in the Niagara Escarpment planning area, excluding only builtup urban communities. The lands to be acquired under such circumstances would cover very expensive lands such as almost all of the Niagara fruitlands, suburban areas around St. Catharines, Niagara Falls, Hamilton, and intensively used recreational lands in Grey county.

Based on market values high and low acquisition costs projections were made after consultation with the Ministry of Natural Resources and officials of conservation authorities active in land purchase programmes. These projections were:

- (a) low: assume an average cost of $1,500 per acre for 1.2 million acres: $1.8 billion
- (b) high: assume an average cost of $2,750 per acre for 1.2 million acres: $3.3 billion.

This is in contrast to the proposed acquisition programme in the Gertler report which concentrated on land purchase for park purposes in predominantly lower-value agricultural areas. Gertler was, quite rightly, able to use a much lower average figure for acquisition costs.

POSSIBLE LAND ACQUISITION COSTS: PARKWAY BELT

A figure of "from $150 to $200 million" is used in the policy statement on the parkway belt for the long-run cost of land purchases in the parkway belt west.

Based on cost figures derived in the period 1969 to 1972, the minimum figure is broken down as follows:

Transportation	$72 million
Utilities	33 million
Parks, recreation	42 million

Total$147 million

Because these purchases may be made over an extended period of time, $150 million was used as a minimum figure, and $200 million used in anticipation of probable future land price increases. Because the schedule of purchases is a matter to be determined by individual ministries, based on their own programme needs, this upper figure is no more than a rough indication.

NUMBER OF PROPOSED PARKS: PARKWAY BELT WEST

Fourteen new park and/or open space areas are proposed in the parkway belt west: German Mills Creek, East Don River, Humber River, Etobicoke Creek, Credit River—Meadowvale, Centennial Park extension, Credit River—South, Joshua Creek, Joshua Creek—waterfront, Oakville Creek, Fourteen Mile Creek, Bronte Creek, Grindstone, Niagara Escarpment.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 7, 1973

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

CONSTRUCTION SAFETY ACT (concluded)

Mr. Speaker: I'd like to inform the House that there will be some visitors with us this evening. At 8 o'clock we were to be joined in the west gallery by students from Toniata Public School of Brockville, and Pembroke Senior Public School of Pembroke.

The hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tonight before the supper break at 6 o'clock I mentioned what I thought were the positive advantages of the bill, quite apart from the obvious positive advantage that any combination of safety inspection into one Act with all identical regulations is a step forward.

The other two which I mentioned were the uniformity of inspection that is likely to occur—not only the numbers of inspections from area to area, but the quality of inspection in every regard that this bill certainly has the potential of achieving—and, in addition, the quality and training of the people doing the inspection. All of these things are very positive.

The second advantage I mentioned before this evening's supper break was the tax saving that will occur to municipalities and to the people of Ontario in general, with the costs of the safety inspection, and the salaries of the personnel, being borne by a five per cent change on the Workmen's Compensation Board customers, if you like — the companies from which they collect. By this way we don't as taxpayers in the province or in our municipalities, have to bear any direct burden of this cost.

I said that after supper I would mention the disadvantages to the bill. In retrospect I think that was a slightly wrong phrasing. I have a series of questions about the bill that come to mind for which I would be pleased to receive the answers.

One point of these is to look back at the history of this bill. It was introduced last June in the estimates of the Labour ministry. The minister will recall that I spoke to him about the necessity of introducing this Act as soon as possible and for the passage of this Act. He finally introduced it in June and it died on the order paper.

Of course the question arising is, why the particular delay in that? We all know—we're not kidding ourselves—why that delay occurred. There was a task force formed to investigate the whole area and it was formed because of the uproar and furore that arose from the Association of Mayors and Reeves in Ontario over the takeover of their safety inspectors. Some of them were only glorified dogcatchers and others—make no mistake—were very well qualified and very interested in their particular jobs and in the programmes which they were trying to achieve in safety inspection in their communities.

One of the points made by them and by a few other groups in the province with respect to this was that they feared the ever-increasing programme of centralization which is occurring around government in this province. In that respect I can agree with them. The municipalities have seen the centralization of justice and of assessment in this province. With respect to assessment there still is some particular dissatisfaction around the province.

In both those cases employees were forced into government service and under government control. Municipalities in the province are still, several of them, rather bitter about the provincial assessment programme that is now current in the province. They are concerned about this being another centralization move. In some cases, this concern is quite apart from and not at all associated with retaining their own safety inspectors.

As I follow the train of thought, it does cause a little bit of concern to me. This party of which I am part are not centrists at all. We do not like to see this centralization occurring. In many of the ministries we have seen the centralized power that is there being very carefully regionalized, and that's a move which we support. However, what bothers us about this sort of centralization, particularly in this topic, is that we wonder if it's going to be followed by the McKeough reprivatization.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): What was that again?

Mr. Bounsall: The McKeough reprivatization.

Mr. Singer: What does that mean?

Mr. Bounsall: The member will have to ask the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough) for his concept—

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): That is abundantly clear.

Mr. Bounsall: —the reprivatization that came up around a year ago in which all kinds of government—

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): That Singer fellow gets denser every evening.

Mr. Bounsall: —services were turned over to the private sector for their administration.

Mr. Singer: I don't know about the member for Chatham-Kent. I just want to know what the member for Windsor West is talking about.

Mr. Bounsall: In the field of community and social services there is a pilot project running in Halton county at the moment, to see if private industry and private concerns cannot do a better job than what government is doing and has done. We have thought that all that is being achieved is a decrease in the quality of the staff involved, and a profit being made by a group of people or companies of which there is no need.

We fear this reprivatization. I would very much like a direct answer on the record on this one—

Mr. Singer: I have never heard the member for Chatham-Kent talk about reprivatization.

Mr. Bounsall: —for one particular reason: the boiler and pressure vessel inspection branch used to be under the Minister of Labour (Mr. Guindon).

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): The member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) talks about it all the time.

Mr. Singer: The member for Chatham-Kent isn't one of my favourites, mind you.

Mr. Bounsall: I can't quite keep track of when the shifts occurred in the Labour portfolio with respect to these various branches shifting in and out, so I can't recall whether this was ever under this ministry's direct control. But it is now under the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

They are reprivatizing the boiler safety inspection branch. They are farming out the inspection of boilers and all the inspections of pressure vessels which that branch did to private insurance companies.

I've had communications with the minister on this topic in the interests of consumer protection as well as the sale of pressure vessels and boilers made in this province because of my concern for both of those. Is he not a little concerned about the lack of confidence that will develop when a non-government agency is doing the inspection?

I realize that this is a much bigger job—general construction, trench and underground safety inspection—and that it probably does not lend itself as easily to privatization; but it is a question that the public of Ontario needs to be reassured on. If that is, in fact, the case, then you have no thoughts of privatization in this area in the way in which the boiler and pressure vessel safety inspection has been privatized or is about to be privatized in this province.

I'd like to comment on another aspect of the introduction of the original bill here last June and what occurred at that time and the method of doing it at that time. The bill was 198 of last session. In June, the Ministry of Labour sent, I believe 921 letters out to every city, town, village and county in this province, informing the local municipal officials that it would take over the inspection and enforcement of the present construction safety laws immediately and stating that, in order for that to happen under present laws, each area must pass a bylaw—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): There is one minister in the House. Look at that!

Mr. Bounsall: —giving the province the authority to take over. Like many other things that the Legislature does—

Mr. Sargent: Come down here and take a seat.

Mr. Bounsall: —the municipal officials, even in some large areas, are not all that aware of the day-to-day happenings. So when it died on the order paper, many municipalities in this province continued to do precisely what that June letter, I believe it was, told them to do and readied themselves for provincial takeover. In many cases, I understand, and I appreciate the political audacity of this move, or the silence of this move which amounts to political audacity, the province continued to not inform them that no legislation had yet been passed to force this and continued to hire and provide provincial safety inspection.

Mr. Singer: Is the member in favour of the bill or against it?

Mr. Bounsall: The member for Downsview doesn't like any sort of reminiscences about this.

Mr. Singer: I just wondered because the member for Windsor West is not quite clear to me whether he is for or against it.

Mr. Lawlor: Figure it out.

Mr. Bounsall: Well, it'll become clear. That's his fault, not ours.

Mr. Singer: That is probable, but does the member like the bill or does he oppose it?

Mr. Lawlor: Keep him guessing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bounsall: I certainly wouldn't deprive, Mr. Speaker, the member for Downsview of the suspense that we obviously are keeping him in.

Mr. Singer: No, but is the member going to vote in favour of, or against the Act?

An hon. member: He doesn't know.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bounsall: It's one way to keep him in his seat for a while, anticipating the outcome of which way we are going to vote in this area.

Mr. Singer: Is the riddle worth the game?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bounsall: We will talk at length about this bill, Mr. Speaker, before we let any members of the House know in which way we are going to vote on second reading.

An hon. member: He really doesn't know what it's about.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An hon. member: Just listen.

Mr. Singer: Does the NDP have any policy?

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): You don't have any clear policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Bounsall: It was a very cute move. I sat back and appreciated it. I must admit I thought, as your counterpart, I shouldn't even go so far as to inform my own city officials that the legislation hasn't passed, just to see which way they might move in the circumstances—

Mr. Singer: Which way is the member going to go? Quite likely, we might know, but not yet.

Mr. Bounsall:—and, in a sense, enjoy the lack of understanding in this case that the municipalities in this province found themselves in at that time.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: The member is not going anywhere.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bounsall: There was one other part of it that rather amused me at the time. Back then before any legislation was passed—à la the Treasurer's (Mr. White's) type of attitude with respect to the sales tax, figuring he could bring it in and collect it before the legislation passed—the Ministry of Labour advertised for jobs in this area, and with the very fact of that advertising, carried on the non-statement that no legislation had passed, when it wasn't even very imminent—

Mr. Lawlor: What presumption, what gall.

Mr. Bounsall:—with a task force having been formed and everything else in this area.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Come on, does the member like it or not?

Mr. Bounsall: I rather appreciated that, Mr. Minister; it was rather good.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, would you bring this obstreperous rabble into order please?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: There are certain limitations to my capacity.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): No control over what happens in the House.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bounsall: Why do they always occur, Mr. Speaker, when I am on my feet?

Mr. J. H. Jessiman (Fort William): The one member who can swagger sitting down.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): He didn't have pie for supper, that's for sure.

Mr. Lewis: Who is that? Is he a member of this House? Where did he come from?

Mr. Bounsall: He's not sure; in fact he's not even sure where he is.

Mr. Lewis: I think there's an impostor in the House. It's absolutely tremendous.

Mr. Bounsall: Both the minister and I, Mr. Speaker, would like to have this bill over with as soon as we can in a less tense atmosphere than there was for the previous bill—well, maybe he and I are enjoying ourselves here, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Singer: Oh, the tension is great. Is the NDP going to be in favour of, or against, the bill?

Mr. Bounsall: We have nothing else to do for the rest of the evening and none of the minister's officials have to be home early tonight; so we can stay as long as we want.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): The member keeps us in suspense.

Mr. Bounsall: Oh, I have just started on the suspense bit here.

Mr. Roy: Has he?

Mr. Bounsall: I have just started; I'm not going to quit. I've just started my talk, I'm not going to quit for a long while. One other thing that concerns me, Mr. Speaker, and quite seriously in this sense, is the advertisements for these positions. The minister seems to be setting in his criteria of experience and background required for the provincial inspectors a rather difficult and high standard; a standard that not many of the current municipal people doing this job could meet—and a higher standard of qualification than the people in his ministry who are already in the job. And I'd like an explanation of that—

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): That's an improvement.

Mr. Bounsall:—as to why the minister felt it was necessary to do that. In addition, perhaps he is not following the provincial Treasurer's laid-down criterion for male and female employees in his particular ministry but he is indeed entertaining applications from women for these posts across the province. And we would be very disappointed on this side—and watching very closely—if there are not some women hired for these positions.

Mr. Singer: Are they going to vote against it?

Mr. Bounsall: My wife isn't looking for a job at the moment, but she might be. I have some daughters too, by the way.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bounsall: If anybody else has any daughters I'd be interested in meeting them.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): They will be old enough by the time this government moves.

Mr. Bounsall: The minister will be keeping his eye on those applications.

Mr. Roy: Is the member finished.

Mr. Bounsall: Just starting, just starting.

Mr. Singer: It is important if necessary; but not necessarily important.

Mr. Bounsall: As a result, Mr. Speaker, we find that the only major changes in this Act were what you would expect from the occurrences that took place last June with respect to its introduction and its withdrawal, in a sense bowing to the Association of Mayors and Reeves in its demands that the municipalities be allowed to continue their own safety inspections. The bill itself—

Mr. Singer: Is that good or bad?

Mr. Bounsall: The bill itself—

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): He's not sure.

Mr. Bounsall:—defines a municipality—

Mr. Singer: Are they a good group or a bad group?

Mr. Bounsall:—defines a municipality, a council of which "may, with the consent of the minister and subject to such terms and conditions as he may consider advisable, appoint one or more persons inspectors" under the Act. I hope the minister is tough on this. I have no objection—

Mr. Lawlor: Him tough?

An hon. member: He was tough yesterday.

Mr. Bounsall: I have no objection to municipalities in this province doing their safety inspections, if their employees have the expertise and meet some very tough requirements from the minister.

Mr. Singer: Then he will support it!

Mr. Bounsall: But I hope these conditions under section subsection (3)—and that he is going to consider advisedly as to which municipalities, and what terms under which they can do it—are in fact tough. I would like to have him comment on that particular section, in which he speaks about the terms and the conditions that he will consider advisable for a municipality to be able to appoint its own safety inspectors, that is, continue an arrangement somewhat similar, obviously, to the one which he now has.

Mr. Singer: Is the member going to support the bill or not? What is the answer?

Mr. Bounsall: In defining a municipality he defines it as a metropolitan or regional municipality—that's fair enough—as defined in the Regional Municipality or Metropolitan Municipality Acts.

Mr. Singer: Which Act was that?

Mr. Bounsall: Well, I'm following "the meaning of any Act to establish a metropolitan or regional municipality." The bill is No. 127, I might point out to the hon. member for Downsview, and he can follow it just as easily as I can.

Mr. Singer: No, he was quoting a specific Act which didn't make much sense.

Mr. Bounsall: The thing that occurs to me here is, why hasn't the minister in this section—and I'd like to hear his answer to this—included a district as defined by the Act here? The districts I refer to would be those of Algoma, with a population of 109,000, Cochrane, with a population of 82,000, Nipissing with a population of 70,000—pardon me, Timmins with a population of 82,000—Kenora is the one with the population of 34,000—

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Bounsall: —Nipissing with a population of 70,000—

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Sargent: I think the Chair would be interested to know, Mr. Speaker, that in the east gallery are the executives of the Toronto and District Liberal Association.

An hon. member: Good point. Good point of order.

Mr. Sargent: The best point tonight!

Mr. Gisbourn: I wonder if the hon. member for Downsview should make the point for him?

Mr. Bounsall: I wonder which interruptions are more profitable, Mr. Speaker, or more educational—

Mr. Stokes: He is saying the Deputy Leader of the Opposition is in the gallery.

Mr. Roy: We just want to give the member for Windsor West a break.

Mr. Bounsall: —those of the hon. member for Grey-Bruce on that one, or those continued ones from the hon. member for Downsview?

An hon. member: How many delegate votes does the member for Grey-Bruce hope to get out of that?

Mr. Roy: Is the member for Windsor West finished?

Mr. Singer: He was finished before he started.

Mr. Bounsall: The Liberal caucus seems to be in a great rush to get out of the House or on to something else tonight—on to the Planning Act or the agriculture estimates, whatever it may be.

Mr. Ruston: The agriculture estimates are very important. I'm glad to know that we figure they're very important.

Mr. Ruston: No, they don't figure they are, but we do.

Mr. Bounsall: I wonder why the minister didn't include districts in that as well as the regional and metropolitan municipalities? I would like the answer to that, because I think that those districts may well, as easily as a city or a region, have the organization or the compactness or the contact to qualify, as well, for a chance at seeing if—under what I hope are tough criteria—they can supply their own safety inspectors.

In the second part of that, the city is defined as having a population of not less than 100,000. I'm interested, Mr. Speaker, through you to the minister, why he chose the figure 100,000, apart from it being nicely rounded with a bunch of zeros in it. It occurs to me that there are other cities in this province, with various arrangements with their safety inspectors, that if that number was different, may well meet the expertise and the criteria required by the minister just as easily—in fact maybe more so. If he had reduced his figure to 50,000, it allows the following municipalities, all of whom are not in regions at the moment, to qualify for consideration in this regard—I mean the cities of Brantford at 61,000, Sarnia at 56,000, Peterborough at 56,000, Guelph at 59,000 and one community in the north, Sault Ste. Marie at 77,000.

It only includes five more communities by dropping that figure to 50,000 at the moment. I wonder what it is about those five cities which I have named that would cause the minister to say beforehand “these are five places which I don't think should have any consideration in applying for their own safety inspectors.”

A couple of them are rather interesting. Two of these cities have been in contact with me. Brantford, for example, is both very happy with its present situation and very unhappy with its upcoming situation. They have four people involved in safety inspection and building inspection and they see it as a dual job. They have the city put in sectors and a fair amount of inspection is being done.

They find that they would be in a situation of noticing irregularities in safety requirements in their normal course of building inspection. They cannot, on the spot, do something themselves, but must phone some other jurisdiction, which may well not even be in their city at all, to point out something which they could more conveniently and quickly and easily get at right away.

The city of Sarnia, which seems not to be kept all that informed on what's going on in legislation down here, three weeks ago had only one person of safety inspection. He was assigned to do that and nothing more. That one person was newly hired three weeks ago when the former safety inspector resigned. It kind of makes you wonder what sort of inside information he had to be able to take another job just three weeks ago. The city didn't know it or have much of a feel for it, and had to go out and hire a new man who they feel very confident of and has been on the job for only three weeks.

The city of Sarnia have considered the question very carefully and have decided that they would be willing to pay, out of their municipal taxation, for one safety inspector—for whatever is required. I am just wondering why in these instances these communities cannot be allowed to compete with the others in this province, Mr. Speaker.

If one drops the figure to 40,000 rather than 50,000 from 100,000, it takes in a few more municipalities. Again, in looking at them, you kind of wonder why they haven't been extended the opportunity to compete here. One of them is Cornwall, by the way, at 45,000, and I am wondering if that doesn't say something about why the minister would not set it at 40,000. Maybe he knows something about Cornwall and its safety inspection, over and above what the rest of us might do.

There is North Bay at 45,000 that would qualify for an application for their own safety inspectors. Those really are the only two that come in there, if you drop it down to 25,000, and I am not suggesting one go any less. I am just wondering why you set your 100,000 when inclusion of a smaller figure would pick up these additional communities.

If you dropped it to 25,000, you got St. Thomas, just right on the border line of making it. You have Belleville at 34,000, Chatham at 33,000, Woodstock right on the division line at 25,000, Barrie at 26,000. What is it about these five municipalities that causes the minister not to wish to entertain an application from them in this regard?

I can well see that the minister doesn't particularly want to be smothered continuously with applications from municipalities, but of these towns, these cities we have mentioned, as far as I know, none of them has a particular reputation.

The Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Witte) may well have a real feel for it—much more so than I do—that these 10 or 12 cities I have mentioned, which would be involved in lowering this figure to 25,000, are not responsible and cannot put in a responsible application and be honest about what they are doing with respect to safety inspection.

As far as I can see they are few in number. There would be another 10 or 12 added if he dropped it to 25,000. I can't see why that doesn't occur and I would like an explanation of it.

There are a couple of other things about the Act—apart from the non-inclusion of the safety provisions of the Mining Act into this whole bill, and the Mining Act in total under this ministry—that cause me to have a little bit of concern. One section is section 17(4) which says:

An employer shall not discharge or discipline or threaten to discharge or discipline any employee because the employee has sought the enforcement of this Act or the regulations or has acted in compliance with the Act or the regulations.

What concerns me about this section is that this is somewhat similar to a section which occurs in the Industrial Safety Act with respect to an employee not being liable to be discharged or threatened by refusing to work in an area which he feels is unsafe.

When, using the protection of that part of the Act, they refuse to so do, they are told, if it is in an organized area—if they have a union representing them—that there must be a specific clause in the contract reiterating that part of the Act and the contract super-the Act!

Mr. Singer: Really?

Mr. Bounsall: That's right. They are suspended and with no recourse.

The same thing occurs, as the minister well knows, in the hours of work provision in the Employment Standards Act. Unless it is specifically written into the contract that the overtime is voluntary in a place where they have a bargaining agent representing them; unless it is written in, "voluntary overtime," the contract supersedes the Act and the Act means nothing.

On this particular section is the minister saying—these people would be members, I suppose, of the CSAO or the public service, at least—that unless there is some sort of written agreement between their bargaining agent and the government which repeats this point here, that they are going to be in the same position as the people who find themselves caught under the Industrial Safety Act and the hours of work and overtime section of the Employment Standards Act? That is a question that demands a direct answer because it is very important.

Does this section 17(4) of this Act automatically supersede any contract that those employees may well be engaged in? If it doesn't, this section is completely unacceptable because it is meaningless. In fact, if this section of this Act is supposed to supersede what is in a contract the minister had better add a little phrase to that effect—which he can so easily do—"notwithstanding anything that is within any contract or any other written agreement between the employees and their employer."

Mr. Singer: Whoever they may be.

Mr. Bounsall: Whoever they may be. The member is quite right. The member for Downsview can make the wording.

Mr. Gisborn: That's his contribution for today.

Mr. Bounsall: One other thing, if I'm not scooping the minister on exactly how many—

Mr. Sargent: No, but the member is repeating himself.

Mr. Bounsall: —municipalities has he decided will not be able to qualify under his very strict conditions for hiring their own safety inspectors. How many safety inspectors does he anticipate hiring as a result of this Act coming into force?

Again, how many has he hired in the last 12 months—additional people in the area of provincial safety inspection?

Mr. Speaker, at this point, I do not want to keep the Liberals in suspense any longer as to what the New Democratic Party is going to do—

Mr. Roy: Tell us all.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bounsall: —with respect to this bill; I know that will be a disappointment to them that we are finally making our thoughts known on this.

Mr. Singer: Tell us finally.

Mr. Bounsall: And I will phrase it this way: In 1971, out of the 41 deaths that occurred in the construction industry, 22 were the direct result of violations of the Construction Safety Act. Therefore, in the hope that this Act, with its uniformity across the province, with its higher skill and training of the safety officers that are doing the inspections, the members of this party will support and vote for this Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Welland South.

Mr. Haggerty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to add a few comments to Bill 127 on the Construction Safety Act. Our labour critic has already stated that the Liberal Party will support the bill. Although it's a step in the right direction, I believe we all have certain reservations about the bill itself. I'm going through it, I find in many instances that the bill is permissive legislation.

It almost reminds me of the Mining Act some three or four years ago. I think that bill included some 600 or 700 clauses. I believe about 50 per cent of them were on a permissive base, so that a mining inspector can apply certain clauses and certain sections of the Act to a certain plant or a certain mine in the Province of Ontario for safety purposes.

Well, I feel that the minister doesn't quite go far enough with this when he allows this permissive legislation.

The Liberal critic has mentioned that I had brought to his attention the matter about the exclusion of the Petroleum Resources Act. I recall an incident just during the last three weeks. There are a number of drilling rigs out on Lake Erie and one of the divers went down to cap a well. He nearly lost his life and he did end up with bends, of course. In the Province of Ontario, there is very little medical equipment for that type of accident and he was rushed to a Buffalo hospital. I think it was the Coast Guard station, where they have a decompression chamber.

I think matters like this should be included in the Act. They are out there drilling on the lake and this is a form of construction.

I think perhaps I should question the interests of the Minister of Labour on another matter. Does the government really care about its industrial and construction manpower of this province? I am concerned about the original set up of the Construction Safety Act that dealt particularly with the counties in the Province of Ontario—and I think particularly Welland county and perhaps the Regional Municipality of Niagara.

I was a member of that area's council at that time and I objected to bringing the county in as the inspector of safety for the Province of Ontario. I thought that responsibility should lie with the Minister of Labour here under its jurisdiction. There were two reasons why I objected to it. One was the cost involved at the county level.

The other was that I thought—well, I am sure—that one man couldn't do justice to safety within that community.

Now I am questioning how many men the ministry is going to employ in that particular area. Of course, this would take in all construction including homes. The Trench Excavators' Protection Act will now be included in this Act. I wonder if, perhaps, we are not moving too much to centralization, particularly under the Trench Act in which the minister is removing the authority of inspection from the local municipality. In many instances, the municipality would have an engineer who would have knowledge of the type of safety matters required when digging a pit or a trench or sewer line or water line in a municipality.

I was wondering if the minister is not going to leave himself wide open to there being very little protection applied in this instance to the workers involved in this type of industry.

The other matter was that I thought perhaps the minister might have something in the bill which would include the working hours of men employed in the construction field. I'm sure that if the minister delves into the number of accidents which occur in the construction industry in the Province of Ontario—perhaps not only here in Ontario but in other countries—he will find the hours some of these men are pushed to work.

I'm talking about 70 or 80 hours a week. These men become overtired and become a little bit lax about their own safety and this is when accidents happen. I know of many instances in the construction field when these men are sometimes pushed for 16 hours a day, maybe six days a week. I think the minister should be bringing in some type of legislation to control the working hours these men are forced to work.

I question whether the minister will be hiring the present existing officers or inspectors in the regional municipality of Niagara. Will they become grown employees? I wish the minister would clarify that. Sometimes I question the reluctance of the government to give the employees any voice or decision over safe working conditions.

In many instances they encounter some personal threats by employers if they refuse to work under hazardous working conditions. I have found this myself working in the construction field. If perhaps one doesn't want to take the risk involved at, maybe, 100 ft or 150 ft in the air they may tell one that one's services are no longer required. I have seen employees being dismissed for such actions.

I was particularly interested in the clause dealing with section 19(2) and 17. I'd like to read these, Mr. Speaker. Section 17:

Every employer of a workman or every person with authority over a workman shall ensure that the workman works in a manner and with the protective devices, measures and procedures prescribed by this Act and the regulations.

Every employer shall appoint one or more competent persons to exercise direction and control over workmen employed by the employer, and one such person may be the employer.

A person appointed to exercise the direction and control over workmen shall advise the workmen under his direction and control of any potential hazard in connection with the work to be done by the workmen.

The other section 19(2) says:

A workman shall forthwith report to his foreman or supervisor any accident to himself and any contravention of the Act or regulations or the existence of any hazard of which the workman has knowledge.

I don't see how the minister can possibly enforce these particular two sections that I quoted from, Mr. Speaker. I think that if a workman told his employer what he thought should be done on safety matters, he would probably be dismissed.

It is interesting that some two years ago I moved a private bill in the House and I think it is an exceptionally good bill. It was, An Act to provide for the Establishment of Safety Committees. I think it's just as important, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to read it into the record. I think perhaps the minister would follow some of the principles I have outlined in this bill. It certainly would cut down the number of industrial accidents and construction accidents in the Province of Ontario.

Every industry shall establish a safety committee which shall have equal representation from both the employers and employees in the industry. Every safety committee upon the request of the minister shall advise him respecting the safety of workers in the industry which it represents; without restricting the generality of the foregoing, inquire into and advise him upon any laws respecting the safety of workers in the industry with a view to the improvement, clarification or extension of existing laws or the enactment of new laws; or inquire into and advise him upon any matter designed to co-ordinate the function of all bodies concerned with the safety of the workers.

Where an accident or injury occurs on the job site, the foreman or persons in charge of the job site shall forthwith notify their safety committee representing the particular industry that an accident or injury has occurred.

When the safety committee receives the report concerning an accident or injury on the job site, the committee shall report in writing to the minister that an accident or injury has occurred and outline any recommendations it may have as to the future prevention of a similar accident or injury.

To break it down into language the labourer or the working force can understand—they have representation on any safety committee in the Province of Ontario; they have a voice in safety matters that pertain to their livelihood and safety. I think so long as we don't have a similar bill in the statutes then you will not reduce the number of accidents in industry and construction trades in Ontario.

One other thing I would like to see in the bill is it be printed in different languages. Of course, when we deal with the construction trades we have a great number of Italian immigrants employed here in Ontario and they should be well informed of their rights. In many cases they are not informed of their rights and their jobs are threatened.

I don't know if our Liberal critic has any amendments to the bill. It is a step in the right direction and, as I said before, we on this side will support the bill.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the bill is worthy of support and it is very important to the Province of Ontario of course, in this type of industry.

If I recollect correctly the minister, in his explanatory statement introducing the bill, indicated that the bill should get quick passage because it had the support of all those involved. I take it he means that he has had discussions with—as well as the Construction Association because I am sure you have had lengthy discussions with them—but how much discussion have you had with the building trades unions, the Canadian Union of Public Employees and the municipalities, I don't know.

I presume from your statement that you had some consensus of support for the bill, but I don't think that kind of consensus of support says that the bill is a good bill—because we have divergent views from those groups. Those groups could all have a small piece in that bill that would satisfy them and then they lose track about the overall application of the bill.

We have to assume that some might have the dollar sign as the interest in the bill. Others maybe have other pecuniary interest in a certain section of the bill, so their consensus of the bill might not say that the bill is well drafted and will do the job that it is expected to do.

So I would ask the minister in his answer under second reading to tell us something about the type of discussion he has had.

I would like to know the principle involved in putting the present inspectors under the Public Service Act. This then makes them members of the CSAO. I would think the minister has studied the situation that prevails whereby many, if not all, of those present inspectors who, I assume, will have the opportunity to continue in that occupation, belong to another union. And, of course, there may be some hard feelings, conflicts in that field. If it wasn't absolutely necessary to put them under the Civil Service Association and the Public Service Act, why did it take place, why was it felt necessary?

I am going to be brief because I think other members have laid things out very clearly. The very real flaw in the bill, as has been mentioned briefly, is the protection of the worker in the sense of enforcing the Act. The member for Welland South dealt briefly with those who may not be as well-educated as others to understand the content of the bill and would not know what their rights are—whether they were performing within the confines of the safety regulations or not.

But this bill has the same flaw, as has been mentioned, as the Industrial Safety Act; that under the reprisal section, we point out that an employer shall not discharge or discipline, or threaten to discharge or discipline an employee because the employee sought the enforcement of this Act or the regulations, and has acted in compliance with this Act or the regulations.

I don't think in any case, to my knowledge, has a worker been fired because of his attempts to enforce the Act. What they are usually fired for, rather than that reason, is for insubordination. And that changes the whole concept of his discipline and his rights. We know that under the Industrial Safety Act we have cases where an employee has sought to enforce his rights by refusing to go on a job that he felt was not safe. When he is told to do it by his foreman and has refused the second or third time, he is then suspended and fired.

The union then tries to intervene. There is no protection from anyone else—only his union, unless he goes to civil court. But if his union takes his case up with lengthy, drawn-out arbitration the judge has to come down on the position that: "I have no right to decide whether the company is right or wrong because you are using the content of the government safety Act and there is nothing in your collective agreement about that and I can't deal with it." Therefore, they lose their case.

The same thing will prevail here, unless we tie something into these Acts where the industrial standards department or a special agency of the government enforces the Act. If an employee takes the stand that he is not going to work on a particular operation on a construction site, then there should be an inspector there who has the right to adjudicate that case. And if the employee has been disciplined or discharged prior to the investigation, then the inspector should be the one with the right from the department to get that man back his job if there has been a true violation of the Act. And there is only one way it can be handled.

That flaw is going to be the real lack of strong enforcement, because the person most involved with this Act is not the constructor, the Construction Association, or the municipality, or the inspector, but the guy who is actually working on that job. Unless he understands all of the safety provisions, the facilities, the kind of scaffolding, the kind of hoists, the kind of protection that is needed — unless he understands it thoroughly and knows that he has a right to carry on the operation without reprisals, then the Act will fail, because that is the loophole and the flaw.

I have asked the minister to take a very serious look at this part of it before it passes through committee; either promise, or give promise of consideration, to close that gap, because the one that is working for an industry that has no union is badly off. Even the one that has a union is badly off, because they can't offer the protection that is necessary in this field.

During the estimates of the Ministry of Labour, I hope, with my colleague from Windsor West to present evidence of the failure of the Construction Safety Act in this regard, and we want some attention paid to it. Under the Industrial Safety Act things can be corrected, because the job prevails from year to year. But on a construction job, before justice can be done for the employee, the job might be completed and that constructor gone to another town. Justice can't be found unless there is some way to recompense the employee for his demotion or for his penalty of suspension or his dismissal.

I would ask the minister to take those things into account. And in considering those things you have to look at all of the sections, starting at the duty of the manager, down to the sections on the penalties. We mustn't forget there are some pretty strong penalties involved in this Act, and I agree with them. If we are going to make it work, they must be strong enough to provide protection and not just a licence for violation.

I'll leave it at that and we hope that we can point out some of the weaknesses in other section.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to participate in this debate?

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, if I may just say one thing—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Roy: —in relation to the bill. I just glanced through the bill, Mr. Speaker, and I recall three or four years ago, a colleague of mine in the Crown attorney's office had a certain amount of difficulties in prosecutions under the Construction Safety Act in the Ottawa area.

The problem has been that apparently the Construction Safety Act of Ontario did not apply to any federal project. As members know, in the Ottawa area there are quite a few of those. I would appreciate it if the minister might advise if this Act, which is clearly limited in scope to provincial jurisdiction—to the boundaries of this province—applies to projects which are under federal jurisdiction in the Ottawa area. For instance, buildings like the new External Affairs building, and this type of thing.

I see the minister nodding; he must have worked out an agreement. There was a point in time where, between the federal and the provincial governments there appears to have been a gap as to who had jurisdiction. Unfortunately, we encountered in the Ottawa area some very serious accidents which nobody really wanted to take responsibility for. Possibly the minister's nodding of his head is answering my question—he has agreed with the federal government and he has jurisdiction? Is it the province that has jurisdiction or the federal government?

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): No, the province.

Mr. Roy: The province. Now—

Hon. Mr. Guindon: But the federal government pays for the inspection.

Mr. Roy: Yes, okay. I am glad to hear that, because I can recall that we were most concerned about the situation. It could be a very alarming situation when nobody really took responsibility in that field.

The second point is, I suppose, a bit more difficult. What happens—again in the Ottawa area—where you have construction going on, let's say, in an embassy, where that country owns the land or has territorial jurisdiction where the embassy is situated? Can the minister's inspector enter areas like this? I see his colleagues here, or his confreres in the ministry, nodding their heads.

I suppose it's a problem that is somewhat insoluble, but maybe it's not that big an issue. There are quite a number of embassies in the Ottawa area, and obviously there are construction firms and there are workers who are entitled to protection, who are working in these areas. I would just like to know what the minister's feeling is about walking into what is the territorial jurisdiction of maybe another country, to enforce this Act.

As an aside, I notice that under section 3(d) of the Act, in spite of my colleague from Waterloo North (Mr. Good), I think the minister is giving unfair advantage to the undertakers under that Act. I really feel badly about that. I notice my colleague is not here, but I thought I should mention—oh, there he is—that for him.

The final thing I wanted an explanation from the minister on is in relation to section 8, subsection 3 of the Act. I don't quite understand my reading of that subsection. I could see the compulsion in civil suits. Is the reason for this subsection that the minister doesn't want inspectors who are in on certain projects to be compellable witnesses for one side or the other in a civil suit, or against two contractors or one level of contractor suing a subcontractor? I'd just like to know, first of all, what that section means, and secondly, what's it doing in this bill?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if I may just make a few brief remarks.

It may even have been before the hon. minister was a member of the Legislature when, as I recall in the early 1960s, question periods day after day were dominated by the fact that there had been some extremely tragic cave-ins and accidents which had been brought to the attention, Mr. Speaker, of the members of the House and particularly the then Minister of Labour. Not only were the members putting forward the questions very interested in what had been done on the inspection level, but it became apparent that with the province accepting no responsibility for this type of inspection, the municipalities were doing anything but an adequate job.

I would suggest, perhaps in the early 1960s—I am not sure what the Minister of Labour was doing then; selling oil and having a good time — probably the last thing that ever entered his mind was that he would be having the responsibility he has today. It is responsibility which, in my opinion, he discharges very well indeed.

I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that the first time I ever heard about the inadequacies of this sort of inspection was when it was brought to my attention as a member of the House. Week after week there were calamitous accidents and, believe me, they were not reserved to those communities with populations under 100,000. Many of them were right here in Metropolitan Toronto where, with the building of the subway and the building of many of the early highrise apartments and particularly with a large percentage of immigrant labour often having no command of the English language or able to read the signs, there seemed to be an extremely lax approach to construction safety.

I personally have some doubts as to the section in the principle in this bill which restricts the provincialization of inspection only to those municipalities with populations under 100,000. I personally feel that the original intention to take over the inspection at the provincial level in toto should have been adhered to. I want to express a personal regret that the minister has had the thrust of the original bill, which did not proceed very far, diverted.

I am well aware that many municipal councils have approached the government in the strongest possible way, demanding that they maintain the right to continue the inspections. I guess they have had their way, at least in the very largest ones. Our experience over the years has been that even here in Metropolitan Toronto construction safety has been seriously inadequate. To be fair, there is no doubt that this has improved tremendously since, I would suppose, about 1964 or 1965. I do believe that it is efficient and adequate at the present time.

I think we should also consider, Mr. Speaker, the fact that the Construction Safety Association, with the general concurrence, co-operation and, in many respects, the direction of the Workmen's Compensation Board has a province-wide responsibility. My own opinion is that its efforts, under the Workmen's Compensation Board, have been quite effective. Sometimes I wonder about the effects of the elaborate television commercials associated with construction safety but I suppose one can't complain about that.

At least the construction safety programmes are largely provincial in scope. It seems to me it would fit in, in a very orderly and rational way, if construction safety inspection were made province-wide under the Ministry of Labour and in association with the Workmen's Compensation Board.

I felt I should make these comments. We are certainly in support of the bill. I personally feel that it could have been much more comprehensive and, in fact, should have made the province the single inspector of construction safety with the total responsibility in this important and extremely sensitive matter.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to participate? The hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Speaker, before replying to specific questions asked of me by the members opposite, I should like to say very seriously—and I use the term “seriously” intentionally—I want to commend the two parties opposite for their position on this bill. In my mind this bill is perhaps the most serious matter that our ministry has to deal with—the lives of people.

In the question of accidents in the construction industry, as was mentioned, the record over the years wasn't good and I want, during my term of office, to show a great deal of improvement along these lines. I want to say to the members opposite how much I appreciate their support in principle and also the comments they have made here. This will strengthen the hand of the Minister of Labour in this province.

The member for Windsor West was asking the minister to be tough, I can assure him he is going to be firm, very firm, about this piece of legislation being introduced here tonight.

Mention was made, of course, of how long it has taken to bring this bill before the Legislature. This is a fact. Perhaps members will be surprised to know that officials in our ministry, along with our safety council, our trade unions, a number of members from management, companies and industries of all kinds have worked on this since 1969.

It took that long to bring in that bill. Last year when I introduced Bill 198 we had, of course, no intention then of proceeding with it. We wanted, as last resort, to give every possible organization in this province a chance to have a look at it, to study it and also to express their views to the ministry. Mind you, I am glad to report that very, very few of the comments made to us were adverse to the bill. As a matter of fact, I would think that in the order of 95 per cent of people in organizations which have got in touch with us were very much in favour of it and very complimentary.

So it's not a bill that has been designed overnight. It has been worked on by top-drawer men in safety programmes of all kinds. At this time I should like to congratulate them for their work and tell them that today we have good results of what they have done.

Answering some of the specific questions—I may forget some of them; if I do, I'd be glad to get in touch with the members individually at a later date on in the question period—I would like first to deal with the critic for the Liberal Party, the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Reid), who was asking for medicals for underground work. This has always been in existence. It's a requirement, as it is now. This is in the regulation at the back of the bill here on page—

Mr. Singer: The minister means the member for Windsor West wasn't familiar with that—

Hon. Mr. Guindon: On page 15.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): We were aware of that. We wonder if it is adequate.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, it's still there. It's a requirement and we will continue—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes. He mentioned also the question of subsection (6) of section 11, whereby an inspector "may," and asked why we were using the word "may" instead of "shall" or "must." My only answer on this is—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Guindon:—that in some of the projects, some of the jobs, for instance, in a trench or tunnelling job it's pretty hard to put a poster on these projects. That's the only reason.

Mr. Reid: Doesn't the minister think people should be made aware though?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: There's no question but that they are being made aware by our inspectors and I'm sure by both the unions and—but I'm informed that's the reason why instead of using the word "shall" we used the word "must."

Reference was made to inspection of oil wells. They come under another Act of the Legislature. We only look after the construction and the gas lines themselves. We do cover the use of explosives, and there again by regulations. On page 15 of the bill, section 31 says:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations . . . regulating the handling, use and disposal of any poisonous, dangerous or harmful material, substance or thing.

It is being controlled by a regulation.

Mr. Reid: I understand that the regulations are about yea thick. Quite frankly, I am just not aware of what they all cover. Is it mandatory that there be some kind of certificate or some kind of mandatory training programme before anyone can handle the explosives?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Oh, yes, that is one of the requirements of the regulations. By the way, in case I forget, regulations are being worked on now, and they will have to be approved by the regulations committee of the government. In the meantime, the old regulations will apply until the new are made public.

In answering the hon. member for Windsor West, I would like to refer to the point that he made about the inspection in the regional municipalities of northern Ontario, which I believe he was referring to. As members know, there is only one organized government up there, in the Muskoka area.

There is no structure really to take over this responsibility where there is no municipal government. That is the only reason that I can see why we did not include this.

Many members have referred to the fact of why 100,000 and not 50,000 or 45,000 population is necessary before the minister may give back the power to do construction inspection. First of all, I might as well be honest with the members, as I am sure I am, and even with municipalities. I don't have the intention, at least in the foreseeable future, to revert this inspection responsibility to municipalities for quite some time. Until we have upgraded our inspection in this province, I don't think it would be advisable.

Even then at the request of the municipality and providing they can show the Minister of Labour that they can do a job just as adequate and just as good, it is still up to the minister to decide. That is the position I am taking. Nobody has asked the question, but you have asked me to be firm, and I am firm, just as firm tonight as I was yesterday and the day before on another bill.

Mr. Reid: The minister is just firm in rejecting all our amendments.

Mr. Roy: He promised to be tougher.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: A question has been asked as to the number of inspectors that we expect to hire. I think for the first year we will require some 90 inspectors. So far we have hired six inspectors in the past 12 months.

Mr. Reid: Does the minister have any idea how much it will cost—a ball park figure?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: I can give the member a ball park figure. As he knows, the funding is done through the—

Mr. Reid: The Workmen's Compensation Board.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: —Workmen's Compensation Board and paid by the contractors themselves. I would think roughly around $1 million for the first year, maybe a little more.

Mr. Roy: The minister can get the Treasurer to approve it?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: It is not from the consolidated revenue fund. It comes from the contractors.

That covers, I think, some of the points, but perhaps not all, which were mentioned by the member for Windsor West.

The member for Welland South referred to some safety committees. Well, we have, as it is now, a labour safety committee, which is advisory to the minister. We have top-drawer men, from both, of course, as he suggested, labour and management. They are advisory to the minister and they keep advising him the year round. So I doubt that there would be any merit in adding to this body already.

Mr. Haggerty: The minister should read what I said there; perhaps he will get a better understanding.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Well, the point I am trying to make is that really we find this labour safety committee very good. I haven't had any complaints from either management or labour in this regard, but I will be glad to read the hon. member's comments tomorrow.

So far as the printing of the bill in the different languages is concerned, I certainly realize the difficulty in this area in a province such as ours with so many people of different origins. I'm not referring to the main segments of our population, the English and French, but we also, as the members know, have people of other origins whose languages we are not too familiar with apart from the two official languages. So it is our intention to print the bill in four languages and also to give them the instructions in these languages.

I perhaps haven't answered them all but these are the main points that have been raised by the opposition and I am closing my remarks.

I would like again to repeat that this has taken a long time. Commitments were made about this bill by the two previous Ministers of Labour. I can appreciate the work and effort they put into this and since my appointment to this ministry over about 15 months ago, I started right at the very beginning. It was a thing that I wanted to get into. It took that long and there is no secret to the fact that we did have opposition from the municipalities.

The municipal liaison committee was objecting very strongly on the basis that we were eroding the powers of municipalities, and a task force was appointed by my ministry with members from the municipal liaison committee and they sat all summer and came out with the decision that they didn't agree.

I decided then to bring about this bill and still take the responsibility of construction safety inspection through the ministry. But this has been delayed of course for several months. In the meantime we were still getting information from all sources.

All in all I am very happy about what has been said here tonight. Now if there is any pressure coming from outside I can say that the three parties, without any question, are supporting the principle of this bill, which is the takeover of construction safety inspection by the province, and also, funding through WCB by the contractors themselves. Again, I appreciate the comments which were made on this bill tonight.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, to save us going to committee, which I don't think we on this side have any desire to do, could I just ask the minister one more question? It is the one that both the member for Hamilton East and myself mentioned, with respect to section 17(4). We are concerned about the same thing happening with this Act as happens in the Industrial Safety Act, and in the hours of work and overtime section of the Employment Standard Act, with respect to its having to be written into the contract in an organized area lest they be fired, because the attitude of this ministry is that the contract supersedes the Act.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Speaker, yes, in fact this was mentioned by both members and I forgot. I have so many notes here, that I forgot some of them. Now, it's a fact that the Act does not supersede the contract, but I want to give the assurance to members opposite, and to members of the House, that my ministry will prosecute if an employee is fired for the reason that was mentioned by my two friends. The Act cannot supersede a contract. I think the members are familiar with this. But we will prosecute anyone who doesn't comply with this section 17, subsection (4).

Mr. Bounsall: Do we have the minister's undertaking that he will initiate the prosecution?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Exactly.

Mr. Bounsall: Including not just firing but disciplining and suspension?

Mr. Gisborn: How about the other point, taking them out of the PSO, out of the civil service?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Just about a year ago now we told CUPE of what was taking place and that we would take some inspectors. We are naturally giving preference to those municipal inspectors who are, we think, fairly qualified, although they will be trained for quite some time by our ministry. We have told these inspectors that we would give them preference.

Mr. Gisborn: How about CUPE?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: They will have to come under CSAO. However, I can assure my hon. friend that none of them is going to lose anything as far as salary or pay is concerned. Whatever benefits they had before, they will have just as good and I would think in many cases perhaps a little better.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall Bill 127 be ordered for third reading?

Agreed.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading upon motion:

Bill 127, the Construction Safety Act, 1973.

Bill 126, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): I think if the Leader of the Official Opposition would bend a little this evening, I am in the position where I have to call order No. 8, Bill 128, the Ontario Planning and Development Act. The minister is going to make some comments, there will be some other speakers and we will then deal with it on Monday.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is it my understanding that the minister will make his comments, then the debate on this bill will be adjourned until Monday?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: No, not necessarily. I have spoken to your people about it.

Mr. Cassidy: From whom specifically do you have an agreement to that, that the debate will continue?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Your House leader, but you never apparently communicate. He gave me that information not very long ago.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I don't know of any agreement. We have indicated to the House leader how we would like the business to be ordered and he has said that he can't do it that way, and that he is going to proceed with the bill. So let's go.

ONTARIO PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves second reading of Bill 128, An Act to provide for Planning and Development in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister going to make some introductory remarks?

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I would like to make some very brief comments, although no doubt at the end of the debate I will have more fulsome explanations to provide, when I hear from the Liberals how overly progressive this is and hear from the NDP how overly conservative this bill is. I know that is going to happen right now.

Mr. Singer: Why doesn't the Treasurer make his own speech and then wait for ours?

Mr. Reid: We will make our own speeches.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Although it may be that some number of Liberals will say it is too conservative while some number of socialists will say it is too progressive.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important and powerful piece of legislation.

Mr. Cassidy: The first in 25 years, that is why it should not be debated tonight.

Hon. Mr. White: It is historic, I should say, in this Province of Ontario. Although the concept is extremely simple, it provides a brand new instrument for controlling development so that we can safeguard certain of those natural elements in the geography of Ontario which will make this province habitable for generations and maybe hundreds of years to come.

It now enables the minister for the first time to designate a development planning area and to override local official plans and zoning bylaws. Of course, the very power of this instrument imposes an obligation on the minister to use these powers with discretion, and one cannot imagine, I think, a minister, now or later, abusing these powers—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Why not?

Hon. Mr. White: —because of the offsetting restraint of the municipalities involved, and I'll deal with this for a minute or two.

Mr. Reid: It is incompetence that bothers us on this side.

Hon. Mr. White: We have applied this Ontario Planning and Development Act to the parkway belt west, as detailed in Bill 130, which we'll debate following this particular Act, or rather following Bill 129.

Mr. Cassidy: What about Cedarwood?

Hon. Mr. White: We have not utilized the powers of the Act in the Niagara Escarpment bill, Bill 129, although we have embraced some number of sections from the Ontario Planning and Development Act in writing the Niagara Escarpment Act, and, to that extent, the principle which we will debate now is contained in both of the bills which follow.

Mr. Cassidy: What about Cedarwood? Why doesn't he apply it there?

Hon. Mr. White: We have presented this legislation to the Legislature because we have concluded that, in certain circumstances, where compelling reasons exist, the province itself must take a broad and general approach to planning and development in a way that the present legislation does not permit.

Without getting into the details in this debate, if I may use the parkway belt west proposal and the legislation which embraces those proposals, let me say that in the absence of a provincial plan in this area, one almost certainly faces the prospect of having wall-to-wall asphalt from one end of Lake Ontario to the other.

Mr. Lewis: He is doing it anyway. It makes no difference.

Hon. Mr. White: By reserving 55,000 acres of land for service corridors and for park purposes—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A thin green line.

Mr. Lewis: It is meaningless.

Hon. Mr. White: —we will accomplish several purposes, one being—well, listen, thanks for dropping in! Thanks for dropping in.

Mr. Lewis: Never mind.

Mr. Stokes: He is generally here more than the Treasurer is these days.

Mr. Lewis: Just think, all these bills are farcical.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. White: They are not farcical, they are a very bold step forward.

Mr. Lewis: Certainly they are. Some step forward!

Hon. Mr. White: Yes—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Every member will have a chance to speak.

Hon. Mr. White: They are a lot more sensible than Premier Barrett's bills, from which he had to flee in full retreat.

Mr. Lewis: Instead of halfway bills—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. White: We learned something from his socialist friend, I can tell you.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Look behind him, he has got members in that whole section up there. Not a member of the government is even going to listen to him. Not a single cabinet minister is there.

Mr. Lewis: I'll give the Treasurer the ultimate insult. He is even more self-righteous than I am!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: They left this House 25 minutes ago, the whole bunch.

Mr. Singer: Yes, here comes his secretary.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: He doesn't know what's going on either.

Mr. Lewis: The militia arrives!

Mr. Singer: Where's your leader?

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: They are barking like dogs, aren't they?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. Everyone will have an opportunity to speak.

Hon. Mr. White: This bill, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Singer: Ah!

Hon. Mr. White: This bill, Mr. Speaker, as I say, enables the minister—

Mr. Singer: Ridiculous person; ridiculous government.

Hon. Mr. White: —to designate a development planning area and in the process to assume, at least for a period of time, all of the controls that are necessary to safeguard the natural attributes of the province; as I say, the parkway belt west proposal is the first such illustration of these powers.

I would not expect I think—

Mr. Singer: Nine Tories out of 76, that's a great record!

Hon. Mr. White: Thank you.

Mr. Lewis: This legislation means a lot to the Conservative Party.

Hon. Mr. White: I shouldn't think—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Singer: A great and important piece of legislation.

Hon. Mr. White: —Mr. Speaker, that—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Yes. The leader who has been here 125 minutes for the whole month—

Hon. Mr. White: —we would move into another area very quickly, although I do draw your attention—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: —to the fact—

Mr. Lewis: We are the only people who take this bill seriously. The Premier was absent; he was absent.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: —that the study, the so-called CORTS study, which—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, Order!

Hon. Mr. White: —which involves 80 municipalities. And it is my understanding from the people in that part of Ontario that they are lacking in the powers and the resources to carry the CORTS study forward, so if it should happen that the 80 municipalities or some number of them asked us to utilize these powers to advance the planning or development of the Trent-Severn system—

Mr. Singer: Tell the whip to get some Tories in—

Hon. Mr. White: —I myself would be extremely sympathetic towards their request.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): Go back to your municipal council.

Mr. Singer: The provincial secretary can't answer anything except what he sees on slides.

Hon. Mr. White: While it is perfectly true that we have very great powers under the Act, I would draw your attention to several conditions—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Hon. Mr. White: —one being that we are able to appoint advisory committees to bring local input into the situation. We are required by law to have hearing officers.

Mr. Singer: Worked up to 12 now.

Mr. Cassidy: There is no local input in this bill.

Hon. Mr. White: There is a system of appeals provided for.

Mr. Singer: We will have it working soon.

Hon. Mr. White: There is an opportunity given to municipalities and others affected to apply for amendments to the development planning area; and we are required by law every five years at least to have a review made of a development planning area.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: What a disgrace.

Mr. Singer: What a disgrace to the people of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. White: So in these several sections of the bill we introduced certain protections, it seems to me, which will eliminate any abuse of this very powerful legislation. I expect to hear the charge being made in certain of these debates on these three bills—

Mr. Stokes: The minister is anticipating us again.

Hon. Mr. White: But we have not set forth the guidelines so called. Specifically they are not in the legislation, and I expect to hear the charges of arbitrariness being levelled.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Why not?

Hon. Mr. White: But when we consider the possibility—Oh, are the Liberals all leaving now? One, two, three, four, five.

Mr. Singer: The Treasurer is driving them out.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Speak to us. We don't like this legislation, but we are here to listen to it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: In point of fact, when we were contemplating putting these constraints into legislation or into the regulations, we found that attempting to define in advance what the lot size might be, or what the setback might be, or what certain other criteria might be, we invited a much more arbitrary approach than leaving this to the judgement and to the responsibility of the minister—

Mr. Lewis: The bill has a fatal flaw; it was introduced by the Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. White: —who can now stand and take the responsibility for these individual decisions—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Hurrah!

Hon. Mr. White:—and eight to 12 months hence can devolve these responsibilities—in the case of the Niagara Escarpment to the commission itself—and sometime afterward no doubt these powers will revert to the municipalities.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I said this afternoon, I am hopeful that these bills can go to—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Hon. Mr. White: —the economics committee on natural resources, so that details of one kind and another can be thoroughly explored by all members of the Legislature—

Mr. Cassidy: It would help if the Treasurer knew it before he brought in the legislation.

Hon. Mr. White:—particularly those who come from the affected areas. And I myself will no doubt be speaking at the end of this debate, trying to bring some enlightenment to the opposition, whose unwillingness to listen to my introductory remarks characterizes—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White:—the unthinking attacks that can now be expected.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I understood that the minister would adjourn the debate at this time in order that members of the opposition could examine the bill and come back on Monday. At least the weekend to examine the legislation is a reasonable kind of time interval on the most meaningful piece of legislation, according to the minister, for 20 or 30 years.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, my understanding from the House leader was we were going to have second reading of Bill 128, followed by second reading of Bill 129, followed by second reading of Bill 130 and that this legislation would thereupon go to the standing committee and that we would keep these bills moving ahead until they were finished. That was my understanding.

Mr. Roy: The government is going to shove it down the opposition's throat.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Bill 130 was never mentioned. Bill 130 was not on the list at all. The Treasurer is misinformed.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, may I say, as this debate is entered upon, the fact that it is entered upon at 9:27 of the clock—

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Government Services): Nine thirty-five.

Mr. Singer: No. I can read the clock even though the minister can't.

Mr. Lewis: Sure, we will speak for three minutes on three bills.

Mr. Singer: It was entered upon at 9:27 on Thursday, June 7, and when it started, nine Tories out of 76 were in the House; there was one cabinet minister—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: What is the minister muttering?

Mr. Singer: One cabinet minister, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: We'll have plenty to say about the bills before the night is over.

Mr. Singer: I say, Mr. Speaker—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer:—this is a disgrace to the people of Ontario and particularly to the government when it is asking for such unusual powers. I say this was done in face of what the minister describes as one of the most important and far-reaching bills that has ever been introduced.

It was introduced and given first reading on June 4. I suggest to you, sir, that we in the Liberal Party, and I believe our friends of the NDP are in the same position—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer:—have not had reasonable time to consider this or to present our arguments either in favour or against, or in connection with the principle

Mr. J. H. Jessiman (Fort William): There are only four of them over there.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): The members should do their homework.

Mr. MacDonald: The last bill took four years to get through.

Mr. Singer: Therefore, sir, I will move at this point the adjournment of this debate.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Mr. Speaker, let it be on the record that there are only five members of the Liberal Party here.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, if I may—

Mr. Singer: There is no debate on that motion.

Mr. Lewis: No, but are points of order accepted?

Mr. Speaker: I should place this motion first of all I think.

Mr. Singer moves the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Lewis: Now will you accept a point of order?

Mr. Speaker: Is there any discussion on this? Yes.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: No. There is no point of order at all.

Mr. Lewis: Does the minister want the bells to ring? We can take the night anyway.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the point of order.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): He's asking for a point of order. He's not debating the motion.

Mr. Lewis: Can I make a point of order?
Mr. Speaker, it was—

Mr. D. A. Evans (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is no point of order at all.

Mr. Lewis: I'm abiding by the Chair. If the Chair allows me to make a point of order I'll make it. May I make a point of order?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Renwick: He's not debating the motion.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Oh, sit down.

Mr. Speaker: I'll hear your point of order.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): The vote hasn't been called.

Mr. Singer: We'll have it properly treated first.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: How can you have a point of order when there's a motion for adjournment?

Mr. Lewis: I don't know. But the Speaker said so and I shall proceed.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Are the members questioning the Speaker's ruling?

Mr. Speaker: Order! The member for Scarborough West has the floor.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: They may question the Speaker's ruling if they want.

Mr. Stokes: The Speaker is entertaining it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, if I may, Mr. Speaker. The member for Downsview is quite right. While we do want to proceed with these bills and the regional government bills as quickly as possible, it was our understanding from the House leader that the provincial Treasurer would be making a fairly major statement, an omnibus statement, on the Parkway Act, the Planning and Development Act and the Niagara Escarpment Act.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: He did on Monday.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, that's right. It was an eight-minute omnibus statement.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Oh, come on!

Mr. Lewis: As I say to you, sir, that we did understand, in good faith, that the statement having been made, the debate would resume in earnest at the beginning of next week and carry right through.

I concede that while we have no qualms about where we stand on these bills, because we object to them, we want a little more time to look at their contents. We've had but four days. That was the understanding. If the Treasurer would accept that, we needn't go through the process of bell ringing and all the other things that attach to it.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the point of order is clearly not in order but since you have permitted it, I will speak to it. The House leader is not by my side and I cannot—

Mr. Stokes: The minister is questioning the Speaker again.

Hon. Mr. White: —know, obviously, what kind of arrangements he made.

Mr. Cassidy: Here he is.

Hon. Mr. White: It was my understanding that we would debate each of these three bills separately and in turn, starting this evening and continuing tomorrow and on Monday.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Oh no!

Hon. Mr. White: I had intended—

Mr. Stokes: We have the budget debate for Monday.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: We were misinformed.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: I had intended—

Mr. Stokes: Come on, House leader!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Just a minute—

Mr. Stokes: The minister is not ordering the business of this House either.

Hon. Mr. White: I am not going to be interrupted. I had intended—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order, please.

Hon. Mr. White: —at the beginning of each of these bills, it being self-evident that the concept embodied in Bill 128 is an extremely simple one and I myself would be called upon at the end of the debate to answer the criticisms of the members of opposition—

Mr. Ruston: Simple as he is.

Mr. Lawlor: Maybe simple for the Treasurer, but it is far-reaching—

Hon. Mr. White: —and having in mind that we have made a 90-minute audio-visual presentation on Bills 129 and 130.

Mr. Renwick: It wasn't here.

Mr. Lewis: That was a public relations job.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Now the simplicity of the concept in the first of the three bills, and the fulsome presentation of the second and third bills, leaves me to believe that if the opposition isn't prepared to debate it now, they will never be prepared.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer himself has indicated that this bill has far-reaching ramifications and provides large, strong and unusual powers for the government to consider. To state that it is something simple and could be dismissed in a very few moments so that we could go on to something else, surely is entirely ridiculous.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, as far as the agreement is concerned, Bill 128 occurred at the end of the list that was provided by the House leader yesterday and we have not done all of the bills that were listed previous to 128. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it would be a very rational way for the House leader to proceed to accept the motion to adjourn the debate and proceed with other business for the 40 minutes that remains in this session and we can carry on with this debate on Monday.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, if I may and I always regret when these things occur, but it was my—

Mr. Roy: Oh yes, Richard Needham.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: —it was my understanding from the Leader of the Official Opposition that he really didn't mind us proceeding with this tonight.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: No, that is not true.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Under the circumstances—from what he said earlier—well then he had better examine his answer because I am sure that is what he said. Now, other than that—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Roy: Now we believe him.

Mr. Lawlor: He has a gift for mixing things up.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Just a moment. Other than that, I had discussed it very briefly with the House leader of the NDP and he said, "We are prepared and we will proceed."

Now, I had thought that in the course of this evening—the hour being that which it is—the Treasurer would introduce the legislation and say what he had to say. If those gentlemen were ready and were prepared to proceed, that suited me and I would be sure that would suit the House. Then we would have the balance. We were going to do budget debate tomorrow, then we would have Friday, Saturday and Sunday to prepare ourselves. And I saw nothing wrong with that.

Mr. Roy: The minister had better tell the Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: If that is wrong, Mr. Speaker, then of course I am wrong, but that was my understanding and that is how I would like to proceed now.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Let's accept the adjournment and go ahead with the business of it.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We allowed the discussion to continue and it was not really on a point of order. There was nothing out of order—

Mr. Lewis: Isn't it idiotic? Because we are now going to have the bells ringing. Why?

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is nothing out of order in the proceedings. We do have a motion before us to adjourn the debate. The question to be decided is the motion by Mr. Singer to adjourn the debate for second reading of Bill 128. I might point out that it is not necessary to rise individually in this particular case.

The House divided on Mr. Singer's motion which was negatived on the following vote:

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 30, the "nays" 42.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The debate for second reading of Bill 128 shall continue.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development who can't yet figure out how to get the slides to work; who has to pause while the spotlights shine on him and listen to the careful words saying, "We will have it working soon, Mr. Lawrence"; who has to have shown on the slides "unacceptable" which comes on by mistake; who has to arrange this dramatic and multi-thousand dollar exposé to bolster up a bad cause, is the last one in this House who should speak about the merit of a bill that gives absolute and arbitrary power to such a person as the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario whose only substantial defence is, "You can trust us."

Mr. Speaker: I was almost convinced that there was some reasonable merit in the principle behind this bill until the Treasurer pointed me in the direction of having to resolve between my faith in the bill and my trust in him. I must admit, sir, when he put it in that way, I had really to re-examine my position because, frankly, from what I have seen of his performance in the House since he has assumed a position of very substantial responsibility, my trust in him is somewhat less than absolute.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Talk about the bill.

Mr. Singer: All right, the provincial secretary asked me to talk about the bill and he is a lawyer and, by and large, he has been a student of the common law, a believer in the system of justice that governs our laws here in Canada in our British system of justice. And certainly, Mr. Speaker, I would say he is a gentleman amongst many in this House or perhaps even amongst a few in this House who should believe in the rule of law. I would draw to the attention of you, sir, and in addition perhaps, to the attention of the provincial secretary for Resources Development, probably as good a quote as exists in the literature of North America about the rule of law. Daniel Webster said: "Whatever government is not a government of laws, it's a despotism, let it be called what it may."

Mr. R. F. Nixon: And defeated.

Mr. Singer: That's the point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Are we not debating the principle of the bill?

Mr. Singer: Yes, that is the thrust of my real concern about this bill. This bill does not prescribe for the people of Ontario a rule of law. It prescribes for the people of Ontario a rule of what is in the minds of men.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: He speaks for the speculators.

Mr. Singer: When we have to depend on what is in the mind of such honourable gentlemen as the provincial Treasurer then I say, sir, it causes us grave doubts as to the ability that we in our position and all the people of Ontario have to be able to depend on what is in this statute.

Mr. Lewis: Is he going to support it or oppose it?

Mr. Singer: I think if we are going to have a statute that is going to be as unusual as this one, that is going to prescribe a system of land use anywhere in the Province of Ontario, that it is going to have to depend on the trust of the particular occupant of the Treasury benches, then that law has to be suspect from the very beginning.

Mr. Lewis: Does that mean he is for it or against it?

Mr. Singer: You know, Mr. Speaker, that I would not call into question the honesty or the integrity of the Treasurer.

Mr. Lewis: We won't base our opposition on this argument.

Mr. Singer: I believe him when he says: "You can trust me, the Treasurer."

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Talk about the bill.

Mr. Singer: I wonder about who might be his successor, because it occurs to me his life in that portfolio is not going to be a very long one.

Mr. Lawlor: He is arguing the city of Toronto bill all over again.

Mr. Singer: His record has been such that he has had to retreat so many times from established positions that he might be succeeded shortly by someone else—I would hesitate to predict who it might be—who might not be quite as trustworthy as the hon. gentleman from London South, and that is what worries me, not the integrity of the hon. member for London South but the integrity of his possible successor.

Mr. Lewis: I can oppose it, but not on those grounds.

Mr. Singer: I just am so concerned, Mr. Speaker, when you get a bill that is as wide-reaching as this one, which really depends upon the judgement from moment to moment of an individual minister whose defence is going to be "Trust me and I will be right."

Mr. Lewis: We were going to oppose it, but another five minutes of this and we will vote for it!

Mr. Stokes: Move the adjournment!

Mr. Singer: Now let's see, Mr. Speaker, what is involved in some parts of this legislation. Section 2, which is really a substantial part of the principle of this bill, says: "The minister may by order establish as a development planning area any area of land in Ontario defined in the order."

Now, what this in fact means, Mr. Speaker, is that the minister is asking us to give to trustworthy old John—

Mr. Foulds: What does he mean "old"?

Mr. Singer: —the power from moment to moment, the right to go into any municipality in the province—the city of Ottawa, the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, the city of Windsor, the city of London, and say: "No matter what you have done, I, good old trustworthy John, am going to impose by my own decision—and I do it because you can trust me—another kind of plan of development." Then, Mr. Speaker, as you examine in detail the guidelines that are set out in the statute, you have to wonder, you have to inquire, where is the rule of law?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Oh, nonsense.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Eat your heart out. He knows it all.

Mr. Singer: As a lawyer and as one who has great faith in our system of law, and in our constitution, I have to seriously call into question the loose ended, the open ended, opportunity for arbitrary decision that the government is asking for, and this—

Mr. Foulds: Doesn't the provincial secretary wish the member was on his side?

Mr. Singer: —Mr. Speaker, deserves and is going to get, very substantial examination at the time of the debate on this second reading.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that when one looks at a section like section 5—"In respect of an area for which a development plan is being prepared, the minister shall ensure that the council of each municipality is consulted"—and the use of these broad words like consultation, what do they mean?

The minister talks about consulting, the Act talks about consulting. The consulting is a one-way street. There is no designated provision that the minister who has arrived at a plan—and let's face it, Mr. Speaker, it isn't the minister who is going to arrive at a plan, it is these nameless and faceless civil servants who sit behind and advise him, and they are going to brief him in advance of his taking something to cabinet. When his civil servants have said, "This is a good plan, now is the time to consult," what kind of consultation is there going to be? There is going to be an invitation given to the local municipalities saying, "Here is the plan, come in and consult." There is no provision, Mr. Speaker, in the statute that the ministry must justify what it is putting forward and the scheme is expanded, we advertise, people can come in, there will be a hearing officer, we will listen to consultation. It is a one-way street.

It isn't an adversary system, Mr. Speaker. There is no obligation in this statute requiring that the ministry justify its position. All the ministry is required to do, by the provisions of this statute, is to listen. Then having listened, having appointed its hearing officer who listens on its behalf—and the hearing officer summarizes and makes a recommendation—there is no obligation even if the hearing officer's decision is arguable. The hearing officer's decision goes in secret process to the civil service, before the cabinet council, and then is arbitrarily again decided upon.

What is being replaced is the adversary system. The OMB is removed from the whole process. The day in court is removed from the whole process. Mr. Speaker, whether or not the government liked the approach of Mr. J. A. Kennedy, the former chairman of the OMB—and some people say he was a great chairman, some say he was a bad chairman—at least he listened to both sides. While on many occasions—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member now like to move adjournment of the debate?

Mr. Singer moves adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Yes, Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, as I suggested to the House, we will resume the debate on the budgetary policy. Is that right?

Mr. Stokes: Budgetary policy.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Thank you, Mr. Stokes. And on Monday, we will continue with Bill 128, then Bill 129, and Bill 130, and I understand there is some urgency in regard to Bill 132, the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act. Somewhere there we will fit this into the scheme of things.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10:30 o'clock p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, JUNE 8, 1973

The House met at 10 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are again pleased to have visitors with us in our galleries. In the east gallery, we have students from the Bialik Hebrew Day School of Toronto; in both galleries students from Richard W. Scott School of Toronto.

A little later we will be joined in the west gallery by the Commonwealth League for Educational Exchange and in both galleries by students from the James A. Magee Public School of Hanover.

At noon hour, there will be visitors from the Queen of Martyr School of Cheektowaga, New York, and in both galleries Caldwell Public School of Carleton Place.

Statements by the ministry.

EXPANSION OF LOAN PROGRAMME FOR INDUSTRIAL MILK PRODUCERS

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): We are proposing to expand the guaranteed loan programme for industrial milk and cream producers which was introduced approximately one year ago. Members will recall this programme permitted industrial milk producers to borrow from banks, with government guarantee, amounts required to purchase additional cows, bred heifers and market-sharing quota. Over $1 million in loans has been provided in the past year but the existing programme has not really succeeded in obtaining the increases in industrial milk production required.

A serious shortage of industrial milk in Ontario is proving troublesome to the whole industry. Producers and processors have been particularly affected and plants are operating substantially under capacity. Canada, in the last dairy year, imported 28 million lbs of butter, a very disturbing situation in a country so well endowed with the necessary agricultural conditions for the production of milk. Obviously there is a market for increased production of industrial milk.

Ontario is party to a federal-provincial agreement concerning supply management for the production of industrial milk. One feature of this programme is an arrangement for reallocation of industrial milk production among provinces where any province fails to produce its share. If Ontario does not meet its share of the Canadian market more fully than in 1972-1973, it will lose market-sharing quota to other provinces. Production this year and next in all provinces signatory to the agreement will determine the amount of quota to be reallocated in 1974 and in 1975. Therefore, there is some urgency.

If Ontario's industrial milk productive capacity can be improved, Ontario will not only retain most or all of its market share quota in the near future but will also be in a position to continue to compete for the available Canadian market for butterfat as well as providing an improved income for our industrial milk and cream shippers.

In order to do this, the province will expand the present programme to include two new features: First, forgiveness of a portion of the loan based on an increased productivity and performance; and, second, allow loans to be made for the construction or renovation of milk houses and dairy barns and the purchase of fixed equipment, such as bulk milk tanks, pipeline milkers and so on.

There are about 10,000 shippers of industrial milk in Ontario. Over 5,000 of these still ship milk in cans. It is essential in this day and age of modern bulk handling of milk that these producers be encouraged and assisted to change their methods and equipment and thus, hopefully, increase their productivity.

In this programme there will be an incentive to the borrower to meet the province's goal of increased industrial milk production. If the farmer meets certain predetermined operational goals and conditions, 20 per cent of his annual repayments of principal will be refunded each year.

The programme will work as follows: The loan application must be made within one year of the start of the programme, the loan to be repaid within five years of approval and granting of the loan with no repayment of principal during the first year. The local staff of the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food in co-operation with the field staff of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board will assist each applicant in determining the best use of money borrowed, the amount of increased milk production to be attained and the amount of money to be borrowed in relation to repayment ability in each particular case.

The loan applications will be reviewed by a committee appointed by the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food which will likely consist of our extension and farm management specialists as well as representatives of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board field staff. If we experience more normal summer weather this year, the programme ought to bring about the desired results, namely, a stronger competitive position for our industrial milk industry, a larger and more even flow of milk to the processors throughout the year and an improved income for many of our milk producers.

CAPITAL GRANTS FOR ONTARIO FARMERS

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like as well to make another announcement. I thought perhaps we might be able to deal with this during my estimates, but it doesn't appear as though our estimates are going to get on for a while. I thought, therefore, it would be only right to make this announcement concerning capital grants.

In 1967, the government of Ontario introduced a programme of capital grants for Ontario farmers, designed to assist and encourage farmers to make changes and improvements in their facilities in keeping with changes in modern farm technology. At that time a commitment was made that over a period of 12 years the government of Ontario would pay a total of $129 million.

In 1967-1968, the expenditure was just over $7 million. In 1968-1969, it increased to $7.4 million. In 1969-1970, it dropped to $6.8 million and in 1970-1971 to $5.3 million. On April 1, 1971, the programme was amended, broadening the list of eligible items and providing for an increase in the maximum grants of $2,500 to $3,000 per farm.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That was election year, wasn't it?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: In addition, where there existed a partnership or an incorporated family farm business in which two or more families were involved, the maximum amount was raised to $6,000. At the same time we added the removal of dead and diseased elm trees to the list of eligible items under the grant programme. The response was almost overwhelming.

In 1971-1972, $23,328,691 was paid in capital grants. We met this commitment through supplementary estimates voted by this Legislature. The following year, 1972-1973, was a repeat performance, and at the close of the fiscal year we had granted $25,649,904. Again, we met our commitment through supplementary estimates.

We have reviewed our position with this policy at the halfway point, or in other words at the end of six years, and up until March 31, 1973, we find we have already spent $75,782,000, or almost 59 per cent of the projected figure. This leaves us with only $53,218,000 of the original commitment, or 41 per cent; and this must be spread over the remaining six years of the programme.

We do not intend to return to the Legislature for supplementary estimates this year. During the current fiscal year we have allocated $10 million in the budget; and when that has been spent, we will defer any further grant payments until the following fiscal year. The possible exception to this is the section of the programme dealing with farm water supplies and field enlargement which comes under our ARDA agreement with the government of Canada.

Therefore, a $10 million ceiling on capital grant expenditures will be applied this year, and we will be imposing a cutoff of payments when that figure is reached. In the event that we find it necessary to defer payments of grants with respect to applications received in this fiscal year, the applicants will be given first priority at the beginning of the new fiscal year.

Our extension staff in the county and district offices is being informed of this policy decision and will be so advising all applicants.

We believe that with the decrease which appears now to be coming in capital grants applications, this will not be any major hardship whatever this year.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The government will loosen up before the next election! The election cycle is what dictates grants!

TOURIST LOAN PROGRAMME

Hon. C. Bennett (Minister of Industry and Tourism): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to welcome to the Legislature members who represent all phases and facets of the tourist industry in the Province of Ontario. Second, I would like to say that the statement I will make this morning relates to a number of questions that have been placed to me in the last few weeks both inside and outside the Legislature relating to the tourist industry in Ontario.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce a significant broadening of the tourist loan programme which will substantially increase financial assistance for operators of tourist establishments in Ontario. This enlarged programme results from a review of the guidelines for tourist loans which has recently been undertaken by my ministry.

The new programme to be administered by the Ontario Development Corp. and the Northern Ontario Development Corp. will no longer be confined to tourist lodges. It will extend to other types of tourist facilities such as marinas, camps and tourist motels, and in areas where tourism is of prime importance to the local economy.

In contrast to the old programme, loans will now be provided for the establishment of new facilities or for the expansion, upgrading or relocation of existing facilities where there is a need for more tourist accommodation.

Under the previous programme, loans up to a maximum of $75,000 were available to tourist operators wishing to improve or winterize their premises or undertake anti-pollution measures.

The ceiling of $75,000 on individual loans is removed, allowing the requirements of each application to be considered on their own merits. Furthermore, the interest rate on these loans will be reduced from the present level of 7¼ per cent to six per cent, effective today. This new rate will be substantially lower than the rate for other types of term loans made by ODC and NODC. It will also be substantially lower than the going rate from private lenders.

The new policies will considerably increase the scope of assistance to tourist operators in Ontario, and this is part of my ministry's policy to improve the quality of the tourism plant in Ontario.

MEMBERSHIP OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE TO MINISTER OF NATURAL RESOURCES

Hon. L. Bernier: (Minister of Natural Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to be able to announce the appointment of Mr. Omer Peters of the Thames River Band near Chatham as a member of my advisory committee.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): It's about time!

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Peters is especially qualified, I feel, to speak on behalf of the Indian people of this province. His background and experience include a farm upbringing, and almost 20 years as chief of the Thames band and, following that, for a short period, as band administrator.

Mr. Peters has also been active in Indian organizations, serving as executive director of the Union of Ontario Indians in 1968-1969, and chairman of the executive board of directors of the National Indian Brotherhood. He is currently vice-president of the latter organization.

I should add that Mr. Peters enlisted in the Royal Canadian Air Force in 1941, and served as a wireless operator on Combined Operations in Europe in the Pathfinder squadron and the air shuttle service in North Africa, achieving the rank of flying officer.

To give hon. members further insight into the capabilities of Mr. Peters, I can state that he was presented with the 20-year service award in the Kent county community recreation organization. He was a noted ball player in his younger days, and he has actively promoted Indian participation in Ontario recreation programmes.

He was also the first Indian to work in a Chatham canning factory, and this led directly to many others being hired as permanent employees.

I have every confidence, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Peters will further distinguish himself in the service of the Indian people of the Province of Ontario in his capacity as a member of my advisory committee.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

TOURIST LOAN PROGRAMME

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question following from the statement made by the hon. Minister of Industry and Tourism. Can he explain to the House how the expanded loan programme might be put to the benefit of those tourist operators who have lost their businesses, other than property, in those parts of Ontario which have been so heavily polluted by mercury that they can't continue their fishing camps? Does he not consider it anomalous that the grants that are being given, and which were announced today, may be used to control pollution when it is the pollution—that should have come under government control—which has put these tourist operators out of business?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I did not announce the grants today. I announced the new loan programme to be administered by the Northern Ontario Development Corp.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Oh, pardon me. It is the agriculture grants.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The question was placed to the Minister of Industry and Tourism, I believe. We have made provision, in the statement this morning and the regulations, to allow for applications to be received from tourist operators wishing to relocate their establishments away from the affected areas under the mercury pollution programme. They will be analysed and reviewed by the board of directors of the two corporations, or the corporation that is involved. The decision will be rendered as to the availability of funds from that corporation to the individual.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: Has the minister got a programme then to buy the properties that would be abandoned by the operators on the English River on the Wabigoon system which have become useless as fishing camps because the fish are permanently and dangerously polluted?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, under the programme I have announced, we are not in a position, nor is it our intention to acquire lands that might be left vacant as a result of the removal or relocation of a tourist facility.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River). Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: May I ask the minister if these loans, grants—whatever he wants to call them—will be available only to Canadian and Ontario citizens? Or will it be an open-ended programme available also to citizens from other countries, either coming in to buy or build a new camp, or to buy an existing camp in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: First of all, Mr. Speaker, there is a tremendous difference between a grant and a loan programme, a great difference.

Mr. Reid: Not at six per cent there isn't?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: So I think the members should keep it very clear that I am speaking of a loan programme and not a grant situation, Mr. Speaker, and as far as we are concerned at the moment, in the ODC and NODC we have no restrictions on applications based on particular residence or citizenship.

Mr. Reid: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister not feel that there should be some kind of restrictions—particularly in view of the fact—is the minister aware—that in his colleague's area, the minister from Kenora, the tourist industry is 50 to 70 per cent owned by Americans? We should be trying to provide incentives for Canadian and Ontario residents to own these natural resources in the province.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Principally, Mr. Speaker, we would like to think that Canadians would own the resort operations in the Province of Ontario. Our concern—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. J. H. Jessiman (Fort William): They are available. All they have to do is to put up their money where their mouths are.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Our concern as a government, Mr. Speaker, is to see that there are proper facilities, adequate facilities to bring tourists to the Province of Ontario, and that they can be properly housed and accommodated when they are here. So we encourage Canadians and Ontarians to make application. Each application will be judged on its own merits.

If the application happens to be from an American citizen, or from some other foreign land, his application will be given consideration and if necessary we will establish the facilities.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: If I understand the minister correctly, there will be no specific compensation for those operators who have lost their businesses as a result of the pollution, and any relocation grant is not considered to be separate from this tourist loan programme. His alternative, then, is simply to apply for the loan which is available to everyone else, despite the particularly aggravated circumstances he may have.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I'm not about to recognize the question in its full context because I do not say that businessmen have lost their businesses. I think if the leader of the NDP would review some of the facts and figures which are available in this province, he would find that tourist operators in the area had a substantial reduction in business for a period of two years. They have now regained their position and tourist traffic through the resorts is on the increase.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): What about the specific one?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: We are saying to them that if they wish to apply for relocation loans we are prepared to review their applications and judge them on their merits.

Mr. MacDonald: The government knocks them out with mercury pollution and now they have to fend for themselves.

Mr. Reid: I have a supplementary, if you will permit one more, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister not feel that he's being consistent if he placed some kind of restrictions on this loan programme at six per cent when the bank rate goes to 10 and 11 per cent? Would he not be consistent in following the policy as laid down in the ODC grants in regard to foreign firms operating in the Province of Ontario, which are not eligible for forgivable loans?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The member's remark, Mr. Speaker, is correct. Forgivable loans are not given to foreign operators in the Province of Ontario. As far as interest rates are concerned, in ODC and NODC we have, generally speaking, operated at an interest rate somewhat below that of the free market. The reason, very clearly, is that we are trying to encourage industry in the Province of Ontario and we're providing funds to industry, generally speaking, for which the private sector is not prepared to underwrite or lend funds. When they do lend funds to them, it is sometimes at a substantial rate which is not going to keep the operation a practical or economical one in this province.

I am referring to some loans which have been made to tourist operators, ranging from 14 to 24 per cent interest rate. That is not acceptable. The price of the accommodation is out of line for the tourists we bring to this province and if we are to offer the right type of package, sir, we must provide funds at a reasonable rate.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): In view of the fact that this largess is available to others than the citizens of Canada, could the minister assure us that there is a reciprocal availability in states such as Michigan, Minnesota, New York—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Florida.

Mr. Bullbrook: —under programmes like this to the citizens of Ontario in those jurisdictions?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I'm not really concerned about trying to relocate Canadian operators in the United States. I'm concerned about providing adequate facilities in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of a supplementary—

Hon. Mr. Bennett: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the loan programme, as we have outlined it this morning, is available to all those who wish to make applications. It operates basically under the same terms and conditions as a DREE programme would operate.

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of a supplementary: Since the minister is not concerned with Ontario operators relocating in the United States, is he concerned at all about locating American operators here in the Province of Ontario subsidized, in effect, with public funds?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Subsidization, Mr. Speaker, would only come about if their applications were given favourable consideration by NODC or ODC. We are primarily interested in trying to make funds available to Canadians in Ontario and to establish operations in this province.

Mr. Reid: Make it that way then.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

CAPITAL GRANTS FOR ONTARIO FARMERS

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food following his announcement of the cutback on the agriculture capital grants.

How can he justify a cutback at this time when there has been such an expansion in the expectations on the part of many of the farmers who have not yet applied for the capital grant since the programme was originally announced in the election year of 1967 and expanded in the election year of 1971? He handed out $23 million in that election year; he is now cutting it back to $10 million this year at a time when the costs of the farmers are expanding at a rate far in excess of the costs of any other industry.

Mr. Lewis: Tell us about 1975?

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Maybe 1974?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, there is no real cutback. We're simply allocating the money that's left, the funds that are available.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The minister is not allocating any funds or approving applications after $10 million.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That's right. But the same amount of dollars is there that was there originally when we announced the programme, and we will maintain that amount of money available to the farmers. I think that is the appropriate thing to do and I think it is only fair to advise them of that now.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister if he anticipates any priorities in the applications or in the types of applications there may be, or is it going to be strictly as they come?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, it will be as they come. There are no real priorities involved here. Of course, those farmers who may be encouraged to accept what I think was a rather generous offer this morning of a forgivable loan under the industrial milk programme will also qualify for the capital grants, if they haven't already qualified, in addition to the forgivable loan portion of that programme. That makes it a pretty interesting package for those who want to convert and who have not used the capital grants programme as yet.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A question of the Treasurer just before he leaves the House, if he's got a moment.

Mrs. Campbell: He thought we'd ignored him!

TORONTO-CENTRED REGION

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Can he explain to the House the strength of the policy decision by the government to accept the provisions of the Toronto-centred region, at least in the two inner areas? How are these regarded by the community planning branch when it is asked to approve plans of subdivision or certain other developments which might be at variance with the provisions of the Toronto-centred region?

In other words, does it have the force, in law, of a bylaw, or by its acceptance as policy by the government is it in the form of a policy directive to the community planning branch?

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): It is certainly the policy of the government, Mr. Speaker. It would not have the strength of law in and of itself, but it finds its way into law as official plans are approved by us and as zoning bylaws which impose densities are established.

Incidentally, in reference to the questions asked here several weeks ago about the fixed nature of these density figures—at which time I said nothing is forever—I have established in co-operation with the York regional government and with the co-operation of the Metro regional government a committee to review the densities in York so that firm and final figures can be arrived at.

Mr. R. F. Ruston: A supplementary: How can the Treasurer justify an approval by the community planning branch on an application from a Brampton lawyer named Ronald Webb—I believe the matter has been raised in the Legislature on another occasion—for a plan of subdivision in an area which was specifically restricted under the provisions of the Toronto-centred region as far as density figures are concerned?

Hon. Mr. White: I have no knowledge of this case, Mr. Speaker, but I'll be glad to get the information for the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Since Mr. Webb was the campaign manager for the Premier's (Mr. Davis's) last provincial campaign, I believe it would be useful if we did get the specific information associated with it.

Mr. Ruston: That would help.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker, with your permission: Will the Treasurer table in the House any other variances by order in council, memo, letter from the Treasurer or any other way, which would have changed the policy force of the Toronto-centred region particularly in changing the land use possibilities of areas west of Toronto, particularly in the Mississauga area?

Hon. Mr. White: I'll take that question as notice, not fully understanding the ramifications. Let me say that I know nothing of the subdivision mentioned and have never discussed it with Mr. Webb or anybody else.

Mr. Singer: A supplementary: Could the Treasurer, while he is having a look, advise us what change, if any, was made on April 15, 1973, in Mississauga which apparently allowed some 1,000 acres of land, which had formerly been designated as green belt, to be used for industrial or commercial, merely by some kind of change in the Toronto-centred region plan?

Hon. Mr. White: I'll take that as notice, too, Mr. Speaker.

SITUATION AT BRANTFORD JAIL

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Correctional Services.

Can he explain to the House the situation which was allowed to arise associated with the Brantford jail by which it has become necessary for certain changes in personnel and stricter application of the rules allowing the granting of passes for inmates? Can he explain also to the House the procedure by which five-day passes might be granted consecutively so that it's not necessary for a prisoner really to spend much time in that very comfortable location at all?

Hon. C. J. S. Apps (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, the procedure that has been laid down in the granting of the five-day passes is that if a request is made by an inmate through the superintendent, this is considered by a committee at the jail which is supposed to go into all aspects of it, and on the basis of the information that is gathered, then a decision is made as to whether a pass should be given or not.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Where is the decision made?

Hon. Mr. Apps: The decision ultimately is conveyed by the superintendent for a pass up to five days. Anything over and above that has to be approved by the deputy minister. There has been some question as to the procedure being followed in the Brantford jail in connection with this type of pass. We have gone into it very thoroughly and we have found some irregularities that have taken place in connection with the passes that have been given by the superintendent at the Brantford jail, resulting in the fact that we felt in the interests of all concerned, it would be better to transfer the superintendent to another location.

We realize that a superintendent is under considerable stress at all times. It's a tough job. The superintendent at the Brantford jail, as the member may realize, has had considerable personal problems with his wife dying. He has had a heart attack, and he's been under pressure of the winter works programme being completed at the Brantford jail. It has been felt by the ministry that it would be better to transfer him from the Brantford jail, and this opportunity is being given to him.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: I wonder if the minister could indicate whether the irregularities were simply that the passes were not backed up by sufficient reason or were they more serious?

Hon. Mr. Apps: As far as the procedure laid down goes, some passes were given where the procedure wasn't followed. The results haven't been serious. In other words, the record of temporary absence in the Brantford jail is as good as probably anywhere else in the province on the average; so there has been no real damage done. But I think the ministry realizes that these procedures should be followed and in many cases they weren't.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

LICENCE FOR ALBERTA COAL CO.

Mr. Lewis: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development.

In view of the explicit dedication to the field of energy indicated in this House yesterday, how does he explain the order in council, issued May 19, 1973, giving to the Onakawana Co., a company located outside the Province of Ontario, a licence for the exclusive right of searching, prospecting, drilling and exploring for coal at a rental of $1 per acre per year for 21 years?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Is it an Alberta company?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): Mr. Speaker, I'll ask the Minister of Natural Resources to reply to that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, if I could just explain, this was an extension of their earlier licence. If the member will recall, the Onakawana, or the Alberta Coal Co., did have an exploratory licence for that particular area. This is a normal extension of it. If he will check closely, the royalty may be determined by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, but in checking the lease provisions, I don't see any specification as to royalty. Perhaps the minister could explain to me why he has given to a private company, located outside Ontario, at the point when the government is discussing and tabling a major energy policy, the right, which will ultimately give them the right to production, to continue to explore for 21 years at $1 an acre an area of some 20 square miles, or 16,500 acres, at the rental I have indicated. Does it not seem to the minister inconsistent with declared government policy to control energy resources within this province?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, Mr. Speaker, this is not inconsistent at all, because the resource must be explored and must be developed. The licence is there to give them this right, but the royalty aspect will be settled and set by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which is the main item.

Mr. MacDonald: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: As I recall, the earlier assurance of the government from the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development was that development rights had not been given, and he even implied would not likely be given, to this company. Does this extension for 21 years of exploration rights not, in effect, lock in development rights to this company and, therefore, is it somewhat in conflict with the original statement?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: No, Mr. Speaker, the statement that I made earlier still stands. We have not locked ourselves into any relationship contractually or otherwise with that particular company. My understanding, following the minister's earlier remarks, is we are continuing an exploration permit, period.

Mr. MacDonald: By way of supplementary, what exactly is the nature of the development programme that the government has in mind? Private, public, mixed, what?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: We have had two or three different proposals. It could be done by Ontario Hydro; it could be done by Onakawana; it could be done by another agency, and this policy has not been established. The Onakawana task force has made one report. The feasibility from an engineering and commercial point of view has still to be assessed further, and we won't make a decision until we have that information.

Mr. Lewis: The arrangement says that the royalty will be paid at the rate determined by the minister at the time of the issue of the lease. The lease having been issued, what is the royalty?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, there has been no decision on the royalty because no development plans have been established at all. No policy has been set with regard to the development.

Mr. Reid: May I ask by way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, supplementary: What does it mean, then—"to be determined at the time of the issue of the lease"? The lease has been issued. You have given it to them for 21 years, which implies a great deal to us. What is the royalty?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, this is a licence to explore. It is not a lease to develop that particular area, and we are not giving them the royalty. If we enter that agreement it would be settled.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is letting them take 5,000 tons of coal.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West, further questions?

ENVIRONMENTAL ASPECTS OF NUCLEAR POWER

Mr. Lewis: A question of the resource policy minister, Mr. Speaker: Given our new commitment to nuclear power development in the terms described yesterday, how much thought has been given by the government to the environmental consequences of nuclear development? Has he discussed Senator Gravel's moratorium bill on nuclear power development now before the United States Senate, as a result of what has recently been learned about the environmental effects and the public safety aspect of it? What reports are there within the government on this issue?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, to my recollection we haven't discussed Senator Gravel's bill, or whatever it is, but we have had lengthy meetings with regard to the problem of thermal pollution, the heating of waters, the disposal of heat insofar as nuclear plants are concerned. These have been brought forward by the Ministry of Natural Resources to our policy field committee. The studies have been quite carefully done, showing the areas of the heat plumes, the effect on temperatures, the ichthyological effect on fish. We are very conscious of this. The nuclear programme will obviously have to adjust itself to the best environmental advice we can get.

REGIONAL GOVERNMENT EAST OF METRO TORONTO

Mr. Lewis: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Provincial Treasurer: How is he going to handle the request from the city of Oshawa that it not be included in regional government east of Metropolitan Toronto?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Jam it down their throats.

Hon. Mr. White: The bill to be introduced, which includes Oshawa in the east of Metro region, will be government policy.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, since the city of Oshawa has recalled the Treasurer's quote of May 31 in the House, "We are not going to shove regional government down anybody's throat," how does he reconcile that with his arbitrary inclusion of Oshawa in the bill, given the unanimous vote of council to remove Oshawa?

Mr. Singer: Not to mention the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. McIlveen).

Hon. Mr. White: The picturesque phrase the member has chosen to quote was made in quite a different context and related to our determination—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: —and related, first of all, to our determination to wind up four very hot regions and then to depend very largely, if not exclusively, on the initiative of the people in the area. I have had occasion before to describe how Oxford county and Elgin county and certain other areas are coming to grips with this. I have made it very clear, not once but a number of times, that we are not going to shove regional government down the throats of people across this province. We are going—

Mr. Reid: Just in Oshawa.

Mr. Lewis: The government is going to shove it down the throats of the people of Oshawa.

Mr. Foulds: And the member for Oshawa.

Hon. Mr. White: —to include the four regional governments which have been in the mill for years, which have had very broad support from the people concerned—

Mr. Lewis: It depends which throat you live in in this province.

Hon. Mr. White: —and which are now being objected to by Oshawa council because they didn't get 10 lots that they aspired to.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition—the member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Foulds: Psychologically right again, Mr. Speaker!

CREDIT RIVER VALLEY REPORT

Mr. Lewis: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Natural Resources: Why has he suppressed the report on fish management in the Credit River watershed, with all of its ecological implications?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this particular report, so therefore I have certainly not suppressed it.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary: Since the report was completed in 1972 and is in his ministry—and since it deals with the Credit River valley as the last major area of natural splendour on the doorstep of Toronto and Hamilton, and with the damage that is being done to it—will he table it in the House?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly consider that.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the—

Mr. Reid: Come on now.

Mr. Singer: What was he saying about monopolizing the question period?

MINISTRY MANAGEMENT SECRETARIAT

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Treasurer one last question, Mr. Speaker: What is the ministry management secretariat?

Mrs. Campbell: Stuck again.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Call for some help there.

Hon. Mr. White: I am not aware of such a secretariat within my ministry.

Mr. Lewis: Well, by way of supplementary, since the ministry management secretariat is now advertising for a management officer, planning, at $22,300 to $27,800, one of whose primary obligations is sensitivity to the needs of the public—so it states in the advertisement—what in God's name is this new aberration from government called the ministry management secretariat?

Mr. Reid: Another job for defeated Tories.

Mrs. Campbell: For Roy McMurtry.

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): They have to plan what he is going to be.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I am not fully cognizant of the jargon in this new ministry but I will certainly find out.

Mr. Foulds: Not fully?

Mr. MacDonald: Is it a PR officer to relate to Oshawa?

Hon. Mr. White: As a matter of fact, if the hon. member wants to apply for the position I will do nothing to stand in his way.

Mr. Jessiman: The leader of the NDP is almost unemployed. He is losing his present job.

Mr. Lewis: Since the first job of this man, believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, is to prepare policy proposals for the Justice policy field—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis:—would the Provincial Secretary like to tell me just what this is all about? At $27,800 a year? Is this the fellow who will replace the Provincial Secretary?

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): Not eventually. I would say, Mr. Speaker, it was an encroachment on the Justice policy field.

Mr. Lewis: No, but quite seriously what is this all about? What is going on? Why are they paying so much money?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I have just had a bulletin.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: They call them dispatches from the front.

Mr. Bounsall: In the form of a press clipping.

Hon. Mr. White: This position is not for my ministry, it is for the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): That minister is next.

Mr. Lewis: I redirect.

Mr. MacDonald: It is like trying to find a peanut under the pods.

Hon. J. T. Clement (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): I feel, Mr. Speaker, this is like having my turn in the barrel.

Mr. MacDonald: I agree the ministers are all at a loss this morning, that is true.

Hon. Mr. Clement: I am glad that question was asked this morning.

Mr. Jessiman: The leader of the NDP is losing his job and is applying for this new one.

Hon. Mr. Clement: There are certain areas of study and interest dealing with consumer problems—

Mr. MacDonald: He is making it up as he goes along, I can see.

Hon. Mr. Clement:—wherein the policies of the government relating to the consumer ministry must be co-ordinated, must be developed further and studied, and this individual for whom the ad has been inserted in the daily press, hopefully will fill that need.

We have some 13 branches of the ministry dealing with various aspects of consumer matters, and it will be a co-ordinating type of duty so that all of them will work together in some form of harmony and not push and pull. My deputy minister has no assistant deputy minister and this person would, in effect—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, shame!

Mr. Reid: Poor fellow. I don't have a secretary.

Hon. Mr. Clement: —do the job that in other ministries an assistant deputy minister might perform.

Mr. Martel: Can Ross apply?

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Scarborough West have further questions?

Mr. Jessiman: The leader of the NDP feels very insecure and is making application for the job.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York Centre.

METRO BOUNDARIES

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer and Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs. Following the unveiling of the parkway plan, there have been a lot of disturbing rumours about changing the northern Metro boundary. Will this Treasurer, who has gained such a reputation for listening to the people—

Mr. Reid: What! That was tongue in cheek!

Mr. Deacon: —assure this House that no change will be made in the northern boundary of Metro without the approval of the citizens affected?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to give that assurance. The fringe of development in Metro, the phrase that was used in the presentation, was precise and in no way related to a change in the boundary of Metro itself.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West.

SANITARY SEWERS

Mr. Bounsall: A question of the same minister, the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, Mr. Speaker: Why has there been such a great delay in the introduction of legislation enabling municipalities to pass by-laws, should they choose, to make mandatory the connection of lateral sewer connections to the main sanitary sewers? It's a question I asked last June and last December; I've corresponded with the ministry officials over it and all the time it's supposedly "just about to occur". Why has there been such a great delay in the introduction of this kind of legislation?

Hon. Mr. White: We haven't got the initiative in this area. That question should be directed to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Auld).

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister not aware that last July, his ministry had the full and final answer from the Environment ministry with respect to their recommendations, which was positive? Is he not aware that the ball has been fully in his court since last July?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, I am not aware that we are holding it up, Mr. Speaker: I'll have to inquire about it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

JUDGES FOR KENORA DISTRICT

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General. Could the Attorney General tell us what he is going to do about providing provincial court judges for the district of Kenora—particularly, to allow the appearance of a judge on a more than one-time occasion at Whitedog, in view of the fact the judge who appeared there once was quoted as having said he just doesn't see how he's ever going to be able to get back there again because of the great pressure of work that exists in Kenora and because no new appointment has been made since the death of Judge Fregeau about a year ago?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, an appointment has been made since then. Judge Nottingham is the judge there. Judge Fregeau died just prior to that time. We are presently considering other appointments in that area. I was in Kenora two weeks ago and saw the judges there as well as at Fort Frances. A number of changes are being contemplated.

Mr. Singer: By way of supplementary, it was Judge Nottingham who indicated that he'd been to Whitedog once and he just couldn't go back again because of the case-load he had down in Kenora. Whitedog is really suffering because there aren't sufficient judicial persons there to hear cases.

Mr. C. E. McIlveen (Oshawa): Maybe we should appoint the member for Downsview.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, there was no mention made to me in reference to Whitedog when I was in Kenora two weeks ago, but I'll take this up with the chief judge later today.

Mr. Singer: A final supplementary: Could the minister address his attention to an excellent article dealing with this situation, which appeared in the Toronto Star earlier this week?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Yes, what day?

Mr. Singer: I have it upstairs. I'll send him a copy of it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

INCREASE IN CREDIT COST

Mr. MacDonald: A question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations: Again, returning to the current increase in consumer credit interest rates, may I ask the minister, has he come to any conclusion as to whether the government has an obligation, and if so, has some intention of requiring a rewriting of all the existing contracts, rather than the right to unilaterally change all those contracts by an increase in rates?

Secondly, what is the minister's view on the procedure that obtains in this field whereby the charge is made not on the outstanding balance but on the previous balance, so that even though the money is being paid they still have to pay an interest on it?

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, with reference to the hon. member's question insofar as interest itself is concerned, this matter was discussed at some length last week in Quebec at the interprovincial conference which was attended by our counterparts from Ottawa. A resolution went forth to Ottawa, asking them to review both the Interest Act and the Small Loans Act with a view to updating them in the light of today's commercial development.

Insofar as the question is perhaps based on the increase announced by one of the major department stores a week or two ago one the rate paid on the rotating balance—the member might indicate if this is correct—the department store announced to debtors that the rate increase would take effect on Aug. 1 this year. Anyone who does not wish to be bound by that, has the option of paying it off or borrowing somewhere else and paying it off or discharging the obligation in any way he sees fit.

They cannot unilaterally announce it and make it effective and binding without giving the card holder or the account holder an opportunity to redeem it; it is very similar to being on a demand loan basis with a chartered bank. If a person has a loan on a fixed term, the bank cannot vary the rate. They have agreed to lend so much to that person at a predetermined interest rate and they are bound by it. If a person has a demand loan, as you can appreciate, sir, they can vary it almost unilaterally by saying "effective tomorrow."

With reference to the question of charging on the previous balance, I wish I had the answer to that question, and I will tell the members why. There has been a conflict for many years, certainly down in the area of the province where I come from, in computing interest on a mortgage, the standard form being, of course, that interest is computed half-yearly not in advance, or quarterly not in advance.

The practice grew up many years ago of taking the balance as of, say, Jan. 1; then on July 1, if it's half-yearly, computing the interest as of Jan. 1, adding it on and then deducting the payments made during that preceding six-month period and forming a new balance for July 1.

But I think the hon. member can readily appreciate that when monthly payments were made on Feb. 1, March 1 and so on, the balance theoretically was coming down, but the interest was charged on the initial balance.

The federal Interest Act says that this is acceptable as long as the true yield is indicated, and some of the figures are most interesting. A mortgage might show that it is eight per cent computed half-yearly not in advance, and while the figures escape me, the yield in that case might well as 9.75 per cent. This is the conflict that has arisen because of the way the federal Interest Act is drafted.

Four years ago, the province apparently requested the federal government to review it at that time; they undertook to do it, but the review has not yet been completed. That's why the resolution was passed the other day. But I was told quite unofficially by the federal representative that it is in the process of review, and while he could not advise when it would be made public, he indicated that it's almost ready to be revised. And I would welcome that.

Mr. MacDonald: Without getting into the infinite complexities of this kind of a situation, may I ask about the simple policy principle? Has the province got a right to intervene and act within this field since it deals with contracts, even though it may be a contract in relation to interest? Or is the minister just passing the buck to Ottawa for them to solve the problem?

Hon. Mr. Clement: I would love to pass the buck, but I can't. I would have to take the position that as far as I am aware at this time we do not have the right, because that field of interest has already been invaded by the federal people. This Act is an old Act; there is nothing novel about it.

If the interest was so large as to be excessive, then the individual could utilize provincial legislation under the Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act to have it declared excessive where it was found to be harsh—and there have been cases under that particular Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Welland South.

APPLICATION OF PITS AND QUARRIES CONTROL ACT

Mr. Haggerty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question of the Minister of Natural Resources: Has the minister any proposed plans under the present Pits and Quarries Control Act to designate other areas in Ontario that the Act would apply to, particularly in the municipalities of Fort Erie, Wainfleet and Port Colborne?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, we are constantly reviewing the requirements of the urban and builtup areas. As we proceed with the designation and examination of the pits within designated areas, we will be adding other areas on a regular basis.

Mr. Haggerty: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware that as a result of the present controls applied on the Niagara Escarpment, many quarry operators are now moving into other areas, which will create further problems?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, we are, Mr. Speaker. We are watching this very carefully. We hope to have some action in the not too distant future to correct and protect against this.

Mr. Haggerty: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: When can we expect the minister to take action to designate these other areas and to apply the Pits and Quarries Control Act?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful we will have this information for the hon. member in the very near future.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

SALE OF PET TURTLES

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Provincial Secretary for Social Development, in the absence of the Minister of Health (Mr. Potter): Inasmuch as the Alberta government has banned the sale of pet turtles because of their carrying of salmonella, why has the Ontario government not made a similar decision, especially when various medical officers of health have asked the government to do so?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Has the hon. member no feeling for the turtles?

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): Who eats them? Salmonella is a dietary thing.

Hon. R. Welch (Provincial Secretary for Social Development): I will take this matter up with my colleague, the Minister of Health, and provide the hon. member with an answer.

Mr. Reid: We thought it would be something like that!

Mr. Ruston: He does everything else around here.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia.

ALBERTA NATURAL GAS

Mr. Bullbrook: Through you, Mr. Speaker, a question of the Provincial Secretary for Justice: Presuming that the Provincial Secretary for Justice and his colleagues in the Justice policy field had something to do with the decision made by the government yesterday to possibly apply to the courts in connection with the two-price policy being evolved by the government of Alberta—

Mr. Singer: That's the first mistake, that presumption.

Mr. Bullbrook: —I am wondering if the secretary could tell us succinctly how the two-price policy falls within the purview of section 121 of the British North America Act?

Mr. Singer: A very good question!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, the Attorney General was of course involved with any discussions about the constitutionality of the two-price system. Regarding the quotation from section 121 of the British North America Act I personally did not indicate that this was a course whereby any legal action may be undertaken in regard to any action by the Alberta government in respect to the two-price system. It would appear from the newspaper article, and the quote of the Premier, that this is one of the points that could be considered in any action relating to a two-price system.

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of supplementary, may we assume from the response of the secretary responsible for the Justice policy of this province, that he and his ministers weren't even consulted in connection with this position that is being taken?

Hon. Mr. Bales: No, that's not so.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Maybe the hon. member has misunderstood what I said.

Mr. Bullbrook: I'm sorry. I can't hear very well.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I'd just finished saying that the Attorney General's department was in fact involved in discussions regarding a two-price system and the constitutionality of a two-price system relating to Alberta gas. I am not aware, nor have I been made aware, of the fact that section 121 of the British North America Act would be the section or the reason for hanging our hat on any action in this regard. All I'm saying is that from the newspaper report it would appear that this would be one of the points to be considered in any such action.

Mr. Singer: By way of supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

Mr. Singer: We'll get back to this on Monday.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

CONSERVATION AUTHORITIES ACT

Hon. Mr. Bernier moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act to amend the Conservation Authorities Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, this bill broadens some of the specific principles applicable to some of the conservation authorities so that they are of general application.

Included in these principles are matters of the inclusion of the whole or part of the municipality in the area over which a conservation authority has jurisdiction, and the grouping of municipalities for the purpose of appointing members. Provision will be made for the appointment of additional members where the total number of members appointed by the participating municipality is less than four.

The provisions respecting approval of projects will be amended to provide for better long-range planning. The regulation-making authority of the conservation authorities will be clarified but not extended, and the provisions respecting conflict of interest will be brought into line with the Municipal Conflict of Interest Act, 1972.

Mr. Lewis: This bill is a conflict of interest with the ministry.

PLANNING ACT

Mr. Braithwaite moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act to amend the Planning Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide for increased citizen participation in the planning system.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

BUDGET DEBATE

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York Centre.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, as we adjourned this debate a week ago, I was commenting on the way regional government is presently organized and the way it should be. At that time I pointed out that in the government's outline of what it had in mind for Haldiman-Norfolk it suggested making this area of two counties into one. It suggested that it would leave it, though, up to these two traditional counties to work it out over a period of time and that regional government wasn't going to be pushed upon them.

I was pleased that the government took that position. Actually, there are at least two distinct communities that have been centred on the traditional county boundary, with centres in Simcoe and the Dunnville area. Possibly those areas will decide that the new thrust provided by the development in Nanticoke might warrant a third division of government rather than trying to force all these units into one single vast organization, 92 miles from one end to the other, which does not have a natural common interest.

It is important we don't impose our ideas on the local citizens. It is important that our role be one of facilitating discussion and providing information necessary to make sound decisions, not directing them with carrots of special grants to force them into some artificial structure which doesn't make sense to the local communities.

Basically, reform of government rather than regional government is what we want. We want reform of government which will make the community far more able to set its priorities and run its affairs in accordance with its own decisions. We must remember that a community is something that already has natural ties, natural relationships, other than just government, and that what we do in the way of changing these natural lines of communication can be very disruptive and destroy the fabric that is so important to the quality of life in those areas.

I well remember that blatant example of carrots and grants that was introduced by a past Minister of Health. He had a 25 per cent grant for local health councils; a 50 per cent grant for county health councils; and a 75 per cent grant for district health councils. When he introduced that last one of 75 per cent for district health councils, even his own riding—even his own county of Ontario—refused to accept the carrot which it felt was contrary to good common sense in the delivery of health care in that area.

I emphasize, in summing up these comments with regard to regional government, we must be sure that whatever we put together provides a stronger community base, a stronger identity between the community and the government of its affairs, so that people have an opportunity to be really part of a democratic system.

Mr. Speaker, the next point I want to move to is the question of housing and the shocking situation that has developed over the last period of time, particularly since the Toronto-centred region plan was announced. It's a shocking situation which, in the area where I live, Unionville, resulted this winter in an increase in the cost of a house from $49,000—which is bad enough—to $61,000 in a matter of six weeks! It's a shocking example of what happens when governments artificially restrain competition. They restrain competition, presumably in the interests of the people, but fail to realize they are the culprit; and the culprit really is this government at Queen's Park.

It has repeatedly come out with grand plans, as it did on Monday with a grand parkway scheme. People can't argue with the objectives of green belts and the open spaces the government is seeking to provide for future generations. The difficulty is that at no time, when these plans are brought forward, is the method or the manner in which these plans are going to be executed, detailed.

There is an awful lot of talk but no practical action. It's control, control, control; restrain, restrain, restrain; with no provision for looking after the tremendous growth demands and the great pressures of growth which bring about this escalation, this crazy inflation in land prices which costs us so much in this area.

I was shocked the other day when the Treasurer (Mr. White), in response to a question about the Metro Centre situation and the ownership of the province's land in that area, said: "We shouldn't worry about owning land there. It is going to go up in price and we are going to profit thereby." It shows that the ministers, as well as others in this government, have failed to realize that the inflation in land and the implication of these rising prices has cost the citizens of this province untold billions of dollars. It has prevented us from providing for the citizens the publicly-owned space that we need, because it becomes too costly. All these ministers have thought of is profiteering in land. It's time they started to realize that even when the province buys land and becomes concerned about its rise in value, and hopes that it will rise, it is working against the best interests of the citizens.

Just examine an example. What benefit is there to the public of this province when a 50 ft lot sells for $25,000? One must realize that the paving and the provision of all the local services, including the underground hydro, and providing municipal levies and all the things that go into the services and the needs of those people—even the educational needs—might be $5,000 for that $25,000 lot.

If the land costs are based on agricultural values it might be in the order of a few hundred dollars maximum, allowing a very good profit to those who sell and develop the land, because after all agricultural land seldom has a value of over $1,000 an acre and you get five lots to the acre, providing for a very good markup on the land.

Certainly $1,000 for the lot represents profit and substantial return on one's investment in the land. So on a $25,000 lot, only $6,000 is really warranted. The rest of it is gone for carrying costs over this interminable period of years that it takes to get these developments approved, and for the taxes and for speculative profits. There is no economic benefit out of that $19,000 difference and yet this government has failed to do anything to correct the situation.

What happened in the Nanticoke area is a good example of the government's failure to comprehend what its role should be. Stelco has bought a substantial amount of land in that area. Stage one in that development, whenever it does proceed, might provide 600 jobs. Knowing that there are usually three or four side jobs for every job that a company like that develops, you can say there will be 2,400 jobs established by the first stage of the Stelco development. That means 2,400 homes and it would probably be a matter of several years before that demand for those extra 2,400 homes would occur.

What if we now announce there's a provincial plan in that area with a provision for 7,500 homes over the next 10 years, in the order of 750 homes a year. The reason I say we start now is because there is already a pent-up demand that has caused the price of building lots in that area to go up to $8,000-$9,000, which again is far out of line in relation to the actual cost of the services that are provided and any reasonable value on the land concerned.

So what if we decide now to provide for the market demand, ensure there is a full supply to meet the demand. We now know there is plenty of room in the existing communities without going into one of these great land acquisition schemes. We have, in Port Dover, room for a substantial number of people. In Simcoe county, 4,000 homes; in Jarvis, 250; in Waterford, 400. There's lots of room in the existing communities around Nanticoke for 7,500 homes over the next 10 years.

The great difficulty that all those communities now face is how to handle the services, how to finance the people's costs; of education, police protection, fire services and things like that. If they know, and are assured by this government today that these will be provided for by Queen's Park so that the plan can proceed for making 750 building lots available in each year over the next 10 years in that area, we will certainly ensure that no speculation in land will occur.

Basically it is the price of housing lots that has caused land speculation. We have all kinds of land in this province. We have very little land that is good, arable farming land. Unfortunately we have allowed development to occur wherever it is easier to put in services and as a result we are destroying much of this precious arable land.

But if we, as a province, now say we shall make services available to each of the above-mentioned communities, that can serve that area we can provide the housing needs for that major industrial complex; if we can provide those municipalities with, not only the basic services for homes, but also a financial incentive to ensure that it doesn't matter whether the house is 1,000 sq ft in size or 2,000 sq ft in size, then we will certainly greatly relieve the pressure and demand for places to build homes.

In addition, if we provide for good public transportation, good access between the industrial development and these communities, we will enable the fabric of these communities to be strengthened rather than weakened by the development that occurs there.

An example of what can be done in the way of growth in an area and still maintain the fabric of the community is well demonstrated by the village of Markham, as it was 15 years ago when the population was 1,500. It is now 12,500. And yet that community is still a strong, identifiable community.

Compare that with the Bramalea experiment of a satellite city where 15 years or so ago a subdivision was built in the country. It was supposed to be one of these brand new city concepts, but it is only this last year that it finally got a town centre.

It's very difficult to develop any sort of fabric of community life—so important when you have nothing to start with. We have in all areas of this province excellent, existing communities, most of which would really welcome an opportunity to grow, particularly if that growth can occur without disrupting the existing communities. That can be done without causing a tremendous burden in property taxes on the people and would, therefore, be one the municipalities would welcome, rather than tend to resent or tend to delay.

In this way we could assure the people of this province that we would not be wasting their funds by causing them to pay exorbitant sums for housing, sums that really go into the speculators' pocket and that cause no economic benefit to the population.

We can do this at a very small cost. To give you an idea of the cost involved—to serve the 7,500 homes in the Nanticoke area over a period of 10 years, a deficit in the operation of a water and sewage scheme might be required. We would be providing water and sewage treatment and float mains at a rate comparable to that of boroughs in Metro. The maximum subsidy that I have been able to work out for such a scheme would be up to $250,000 a year. That would be the maximum and it would actually in time be eliminated all together if the province were to adopt an across-the-province scheme of this sort. There would be no need for agreements to be entered into between the province and municipalities. It would be done on the same basis as Ontario Hydro provides power to these communities. It would be based upon the estimated need of each of these communities for water and sewage services. If, at the same time, we subsidize the housing to the extent required to ensure that there'd be the same tax revenue from a 1,000 sq ft house as from a 2,000 sq ft house for the first several years, the total subsidy, even in the tenth year of such a programme, would be less than $1 million.

The transportation system could be built up. We know the revenues from gasoline and other taxes make the highways fairly well self-liquidating as far as highway construction we put into the area is concerned. There is no need for us to burden the counties involved with building these roads when they really are traffic arteries to serve the overall area far beyond the county boundaries.

We also need to provide another $2 million to clean up a most unfortunate situation in the village of Nanticoke where people had invested substantial sums, in many cases their life savings, in homes there and now find that they are worth practically nothing because they are going to be in the midst of a polluted area, an industrial zone.

The whole programme is something that would be very small in cost to the Province of Ontario, but if we undertake that programme we can assure the people that there will be no undue land profits that otherwise are going to develop in the area if we allow the situation to proceed without provincial provision of services and assistance.

The escalation in land values in that area could, if it is allowed to occur, readily add a cost of $1 billion to the people who are affected, because it would have an effect not only in the immediate towns but in towns well beyond the area; and on all housing, not just new housing. It would also effect rentals, because after all rentals do move up as land values move up and as housing values move up. And we do know that the higher costs of houses have not been materially due to the cost of construction, they've been due to these inexcusable situations with regard to land speculation.

So I am saying that at a very small cost to the province, and at a real benefit to the province—long-term benefit—we can assure the people in that new growth area there will not be land speculation; that, in fact, there will be available to them homes at a reasonable cost. Our government's job is not to dictate. Our government's job is to provide services and to ensure there is free enterprise and competition in providing for the needs of the people.

One of the great problems which this party sees with that planning bill is that this government continues to think in terms of control and concentration of power, and in doing so it is aggravating the situation rather than helping it.

So, in conclusion, in regard to housing matters, Mr. Speaker, I say we must see the dangers and waste in land speculation. We must recognize that its vast profits provide temptation to those who seek to gain profits at the expense of the people. It's a useless type of investment, that in lands; it's non-productive and it's important that we eliminate the current thinking that land is an investment in which you can't lose money.

The only way we can do that is to provide a free market supply of housing land or development land in this province. We are the ones here at Queen's Park who can do this. We are the only ones who can assure this is done, who can relieve the pressure, open up competition and control development by the provision of services and the provision of assistance in the direction we want development to occur, in the parts of the province where it will not destroy our precious agricultural land.

This leads me, Mr. Speaker, into the area of dispersing growth pressures away from Toronto. The situation in Toronto has been such that the people have finally risen up and rebelled against it and voted in a different type of city government in Toronto and in most of the boroughs. They have voted in governments that would not permit destruction of neighbourhoods by construction of vast areas of high-rise and asphalt and building a strip of concrete 15 miles wide from one end of "the golden horseshoe" to the other. The people don't want this.

Subsidizing business in the way we've been in trying to disperse opportunities for growth around the province is obviously not the answer. What we've got to recognize is what is essential to help municipalities attract growth, that is municipalities that are not in this "golden horseshoe" where everything has been building up at such a rate.

We at Queen's Park have been a major culprit in this concentration of growth in the area. We have continued to think in terms of having all of our government departments stay here at Queen's Park or in the Queen's Park area. The cost of providing space for these new government buildings is at least double what it would be in cities and towns away from here.

Why couldn't the Education Ministry be centred in Peterborough? Why couldn't the Ministry of Agriculture and Food be in Guelph? Why couldn't Workmen's Compensation be in North Bay? Why couldn't they be in these places at far less cost? I say at half the cost, because it is possible to provide equivalent quality space at half the cost in those towns.

We know that if we did that we would need to improve our transportation services, our health services and a lot of other service in those areas where we move them. We know there would be at least three to four jobs created by other types of enterprise for every job we provided if we did that. We know that in order to make it possible for people to live a good quality of life that we would have to provide for services in a far more significant way and in a far more practical way than we have in these communities in the past, where we have left them on their own.

I was very pleased to see the Premier (Mr. Davis), in a statement in North Bay not too long ago announce a plan to reduce transportation rates in northern Ontario. This is a very commendable approach because in doing so he's giving recognition to the fact that the transportation costs always faced by people and business in these areas can't be overcome unless we do something to make it possible to equalize the opportunity of people to have access to markets and to have access to other parts of the province. I'm pleased that the Premier has recognized this.

Mr. Speaker, the government House leader has asked me if I would just sit down for a minute and give him the chance to say something.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for this privilege. I want to introduce to the House as scanty as it may be, the visiting people from grade 8 of the James A. Magee elementary school in my home town of Hanover.

An hon. member: Oh, a great place!

Mr. Deacon: That's a good thing to be introducing those pupils at this time, because I'm sure the people like living in Hanover. Maybe we can have this government start to do something to make it possible for job opportunities to be as available in the Hanover-Durham area, as they are in the Toronto area.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): Oh don't worry!

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The people of Hanover are quite happy, I will tell the member that.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: They are just worried that we are going to go out and bother them.

Mr. Deacon: Well I am sure they are, but I am sure that a lot of them would like to be able to stay there and not have to come to Toronto to find jobs, as so many of them do at this time.

I mentioned this whole question of the attractiveness of development in smaller communities around the province, whether they be cities or they be towns, because there is a tremendous advantage in living in those communities; if one can find opportunities for employment, opportunities for a satisfying way of life.

There is far more discretionary income available, because the cost of housing in this area has been such that we have to provide income supplements to people to attract them to come to this area, if they have been established in other communities.

If they are living in Hanover, it doesn't take them an hour to get to work, as it does for many people in this area. Not only are they saving money in travel, but they are also saving time; which is what people do like to have available, they like to have as much time at their discretion as they can.

I was interested to talk to a chap in Long Lac, who had been living in Toronto most of his life but has lived for the last several years in Long Lac. I said: "What is it about Long Lac you like, and what is it about Long Lac you don't like?" He said: "I love the fact that I can have my recreation, outside, right here. I love the fact I can get to work without a hassle. I like the fact that my cost of living with regard to housing is low; but I do resent the fact that I have to pay so much for some items, that is far more than just the difference in transportation cost between the big city and here.

"I also resent the fact that we have to travel so many extra miles to get to the other outside communities. For example, to get to Sault Ste. Marie, an extra 300 miles or so.

"The other thing is the availability of medical services. The lack of availability of medical services, good medical services, is always of great concern to us."

These are things we could be providing and must provide; good transportation access, good services, and ensure that these people at the same time have sufficient places to build homes that we don't heat up land speculation in those areas.

It is really ironical, when you go into a town such as Geraldton and find housing lots have gone up in price because there aren't enough places for people to build due to our restriction on the type of services that must be provided. We don't do anything to provide for it and the people have only a few places that are available where they can build a home; and the price goes up. We don't seem to recognize the fact that wherever people are living in this province, this province must assume a responsibility for assuring an ample supply of places to build.

Recently the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Auld) was up to a town—I am not sure where; it wasn't Moonbeam, but it was one of the towns up in that area, in the riding of the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Brunelle). I was really surprised when he said they couldn't provide services to meet development needs in that area because it wasn't an incorporated municipality. Wouldn't it have been sad, in this province, had the Ontario Hydro failed to provide services wherever there was not an incorporated municipality? Why do we need to have an incorporated municipality? Why do we have to have anything there except people? Why can this province not recognize that it has a responsibility to provide places for people to build homes wherever there is a demand?

This is the way we will frustrate the land speculators, this is the way we will bring housing costs down.

And of course getting back to this matter of dispersion, Queen's Park's plans continually seem to tend to concentrate people. I think in terms of the York regional collector sewer system which is proposed, where they are going to try to again concentrate people adjacent to Toronto instead of dispersing them.

Take North Pickering! I don't know what you call that thing. I can't think of a word that I can use here that would describe what I think of that concept of a new town, of a new satellite city as it is supposed, to fit in within the Toronto-centred region concept. A huge city of 150,000 to 200,000 people right adjacent to Metro! That is not dispersion, that is concentration; completely against the principles that were supposed to be followed when this original plan was announced.

I am pleased that people are beginning at long last to recognize this whole question of the economics of dispersing people. I was pleased in talking to a senior officer of Gulf Oil, for example, to hear that they were considering ways they can disperse their head office people away from Toronto. Last fall they finally managed to persuade one of their better people in Calgary to move to Toronto, against the will of that man's wife and family, who didn't want to leave a city where they were already established and didn't have the congestion and high costs of Toronto. They got him to move down here with his family, but four months later he quit Gulf and took a job at a lower salary elsewhere because he didn't want to live in this big city.

The Toronto-Dominion Bank, for example, is having difficulty keeping their employees downtown where they have to go through the daily hassle of getting to and from work. This whole question, the whole concept of concentration is being questioned by business people, and it is time it was questioned by this government.

I am pleased that the Treasurer is going to be participating in a conference at the University of Guelph the week after next, when the whole question of dispersion, the whole question of concentrated urban growth and the need to disperse, is going to be examined. Ten communities, including Nipigon, Sudbury, Timmins, Kingston, have been examining what they need as alternatives to this concentration to provide good employment opportunities for their people so that they will be able to continue to live in these communities rather than coming to this Toronto area. It is not that Toronto has gone the way of New York, Detroit and Cleveland; but continued growth pressures that have caused land prices to rise have also caused great pressures to build highrise, to concentrate growth; and this is what we have got to eliminate. We must recognize that the book "Limits to Growth", published last year, indicated the limits to population, the limits of non-renewable resources and minerals, the limits of energy, the limits to our agricultural land and the limits to pollution. All must be dealt with if we are going to survive. We may survive our generation, but there is a real threat to our children and especially to their children. It is feasible if we work at it now, and I am sure that if we do work at it we are going to raise the quality of life for people in this province.

I mentioned earlier that part of this matter of dispersion, a very important aspect of it, is the area of transportation. I am really concerned, Mr. Speaker, about how far we are going to proceed and progress in transportation as long as we have a government with a department that has no idea of the essential needs for a good transportation system. I say the department has no idea, but I am sure there are many in that department who do.

The thrust now provided within that department shows a complete lack of understanding of the basic fundamentals of a comprehensive transportation system. We shouldn't be deciding whether it is roads or rail; we shouldn't be deciding whether it's cars or public transit; it is a matter of recognizing what in each area is the most efficient, the most effective in the long run. What is going to provide the best service at the lowest cost in the long run. For example, we haven't recognized something that New York has recognized, that there is a hidden cost to each car in New York which they estimate at $3 per day that is not covered by a motorist. I wondered, at the time that statement was made by a leading authority in New York City, as to the reason for his saying that the $3 cost, this $3 subsidy to the motorist, was borne by all taxpayers. But it was pointed out to me that there is a tremendous investment in streets just to maintain them, and only half the money at the most is covered by gasoline taxes and revenue.

There is also no assessment on and no taxes received from all this property which is required to move motor cars. If we only had public transportation vehicles and didn't have to provide for all the private vehicles there's no question that we wouldn't have to make nearly as much investment as we now do in streets. We would have much more available in the way of assessable property on which tax revenues could be raised.

It's interesting, for example, that the railways pay to the city of Toronto and its boroughs tens of thousands of dollars a year in taxes. They look after the maintenance of these lines and yet we don't give credit to that when we are considering the cost of providing rail service in comparison to the cost of providing automobile facilities.

I am not suggesting we eliminate the car, but I think we should recognize the true economic cost of cars in comparison with public transportation. We must also recognize, Mr. Speaker, that service is the key to people's decisions on whether to use public or private means of moving about.

Service includes the time it takes me to get to work or wherever I have to go? Time is what I really want. I want to be able to sleep in as long as I can in the morning and I want to get home as soon as I can at night. The actual costs or the economic values are not taken into account by a lot of people to anything like the extent we often assume.

Actually it is amazing how many people will spend $2 a day parking their cars downtown—although I don't think we can find a $2-a-day lot now—yet they don't want to buy GO Transit tickets at $1 each or $2 round trips mainly because they can get up later in the morning if they use their cars and get home earlier at night.

It's time we recognized that an integration of public transportation which provides them with fast, convenient service will move them from their cars to public transit.

In this province we have failed to understand the importance of this integration by approving the Metro Centre in its present concept. It's an inexcusable blunder. The key transportation location in this province has been planned by a developer wanting to get the maximum economic benefit for his new building, and not by the province whose prime responsibility is to ensure that the absolute best transportation interphase has been designed and is constructed.

It's the tail wagging the dog. It is such a key location that in the future it will frustrate our people to a degree that is very costly. It is interesting that in planning the Metro Centre, the actual walking distance between the commuter trains and the subway has been increased; yet the provincial study which has just been released indicated that the No. 1 consideration taken into account by people using a transportation system is how far do they have to walk.

I say it isn't because they are lazy. It's just a matter of the elapsed time. Metro Centre, as it is now planned, is going to be a fiasco for the future.

I can understand why this hasn't been clearly understood when I read some correspondence between the ministry's expert environmental and feasibility studies office and a Mr. Peter Oehm with regard to the projected Barrie bypass to Stayner.

I'm interested that the transportation expert—he's the senior feasibility planner—in his analysis of transportation, writes as follows:

In analysing the use of public transportation as an alternative to the reconstruction of Highway 26, all traffic demand which could not be satisfied by the existing highway network was considered to be satisfied by public transportation. Primary concern was given to satisfying the weekend day-tripper demand from Metropolitan Toronto to the Collingwood-Wasaga Beach area—546,000 annual weekend person trips at present and a projected two million by 1986. It should be noted that the recreational figures quoted are within the scope of skiing and swimming but do not include consideration for snowmobile outings, cotage trips, etcetera.

Mr. Oehm points out in reply:

What credibility is there to an assumption that all traffic demand which could not be accommodated by the present highway would be going to public transportation?

It is obvious that the present Highway 26 can accommodate substantial improvement in increasing traffic by geometric improvements and bypasses at Stayner and Collingwood without resorting to a four-lane highway.

Therefore we submit your analysis is not at all realistic.

Now here's another example of how that man fails to understand the basic fundamentals in transportation.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: He knows one thing. We want the trains back. He knows that.

Mr. Deacon: To continue:

Both CN and CP rail lines are heavy traffic routes since all freight and passenger movements between Toronto and western Canada use these lines. Both lines are single track and traffic does not decrease appreciably on weekends. Substantial capital improvements of tens of millions of dollars would be required on each line to provide a frequent service. The CP line is not signalized and train activity is done by train orders. Trains have to wait at a siding until the section of the track ahead of it is free.

Mr. Oehm points out to this man that the CPR MacTier subdivision carries five trains northbound and eight trains southbound in a 24-hour period, thirteen trains in a 24-hour period, and yet the Department of Highways says they are heavily used. The CN subdivision has three trains northbound and three trains southbound in the same 24-hour weekday period. There are no trains whatsoever operating on Saturday and Sunday between Barrie and Meaford on that particular line; then why the tens of millions of dollars of construction to provide rail service in that area?

He points out that although the ministry thinks that there is no signal service on the CPR line it was actually signalized in 1955 and has an automatic block signal. It shows how far outdated these people in the ministry are. Time and time again, the figures that came out of the ministry's letter showed the failure of the ministry to look objectively at a total transportation concept and a continual reliance upon the railways, who want to get everything they can from the government of Ontario for anything they do, a continual reliance upon the railways for objective figures. It's a ridiculous situation.

I'm pleased that a group in the north have finally been able to persuade the Canadian Transport Commission to hold hearings on service to Barrie, and actually the hearings are going to be held in Barrie on July 10.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Does the member think it will matter?

Mr. Deacon: It certainly will matter. As a matter of fact, in response to the minister's comment, the only service to the north that is now provided is one service to Stouffville which we managed to have implemented two years ago in response to such a hearing, against the best recommendations of the Department of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs. The Queen's Park people didn't want the service because they said it would increase growth in the area. They fail to recognize that there is an existing need, an existing frustration, a daily frustration by people in the area, that needs to be looked after—

Hon. Mr. Winkler: All the hearings that were held in our area were an absolute sham.

Mr. Deacon:—and they fail to recognize that Ottawa is going to supervise the service. I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Every hearing that was held in our area was a sham, a snow job.

Mr. Deacon: That's fine. Maybe in your area. The fact it's a sham greatly contributed to your attitude and to the fact that this government's Department of Transportation and Communications doesn't understand basic fundamentals and can't counter the railways' arguments.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: You're wrong. We attended every meeting and supported the service. I was there, I know what I'm talking about.

Mr. Deacon: The type of support I saw in the work done down at the City Hall was of no consequence whatsoever and did nothing to contribute to the decision of the federal government to introduce services. We have been frustrated for weeks in our efforts to get the hearing in Barrie because of the indication of the Minister of Transportation and Communications to the federal Minister of Transport that we don't want the Richmond Hill service to the north, not recognizing that the federal government is prepared to see that the service is provided if we make a case for it.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: We can't accept that.

Mr. Deacon: I can tell you, in addition to that, that the reason we were able to get a Stouffville service is because—

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That was phoney too.

Mr. Deacon:—some of us, at our personal cost and expense, provided a market study of the need. I've yet to see a market study of the need in the Owen Sound, Hanover, Walkerton area.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Why don't they provide a service?

Mr. Deacon: All that has been done is the typical surface studies and presentations with no real in-depth origin-destination of the people and what the needs are.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: They don't want to do anything really. You can't apologize for them.

Mr. Deacon: They don't seem to recognize that time is essential, quality of service is essential in meeting those needs, and the market will never be developed unless we recognize what is needed to attract the market. There is just no understanding of the fundamentals. The province has a great opportunity to provide an overall comprehensive approach to transportation; moving people, moving goods. The federal role, as we well know, is one of control of water, air, rail, conduits; it provides the traffic control in air, water and rail; it has the common facilities at Malton that it provides in the other airports; it has the supervision to see that those who operate these services are qualified, at least, that the aircraft, the ships, the rolling stock concerned are safe. It does not need to interfere with our providing an integrated overall transportation system in this province, or the province co-ordinating such a system. I am confident that if the province continually points out to the federal government that the CNR and CPR are failing to provide for our transportation needs, and points out to the federal government that these rail rights-of-way should be assumed and taken over and seized control of by—

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Why don't the feds do something for the people of Ontario?

Mr. Deacon: I am sorry?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Why don't the feds do something for the people of Ontario instead of having members opposite apologizing for them?

Mr. Deacon: I think perhaps the only example they've had is this government, and they know that this government has done nothing for the people of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That's wrong and you know it.

Mr. Deacon: Fortunately, in transportation you've been able to get something done by the feds.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That's wrong and you know it.

Mr. Deacon: But we have a responsibility of showing the feds the way with regard to integrating rail with all the other surface transportation methods available here.

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): They have given the member an airport, though.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That we don't want.

Mr. Deacon: Yes, that's right, and locating it where this province wants it, right against an existing metropolitan area instead of—

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: That's their responsibility too.

An hon. member: Members opposite have got to do better!

Mr. Deacon: Well, I won't divert into this question of air at this point, because I want to point out that if we have the federal government take over the ownership of the rights-of-way—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): The location was dictated by the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough).

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Oh, come on now; that's not true.

Mr. Deacon: The ownership of the common facilities such as rail stations. If the federal government controls the traffic in rail as it does with air and water, then it would be possible for us as a province to ensure that others who want to provide passenger service could use those rights-of-way, those valuable rights-of-way given originally to the CNR and the CPR to look after the transportation needs of our people. When they are not doing it, they should be put in a position where they have to compete with anyone else for the use of those rights-of-way.

The last point I want to bring up, Mr. Speaker, is this whole question of the way we make decisions. I have talked about decisions in various areas, about the way we set up a regional government. In my mind it should not be done by officials of this government going out and collecting briefs; it should be done by this government leading discussions and workshops where the community has the necessary information and is assisted to develop its own reform of government.

It is not one of trying to sell a plan after the fact, as has happened out here in Pickering, but one of working out with the community how the overall objectives can be obtained, using the common sense of the community to develop these objectives. It should be, with regard to planning and development, not always presenting a fait accompli where the decision has been made in trying to sell it, resulting in the tremendous opposition of citizens who are affected, but recognizing that citizens do have intelligence, do have common sense and will accept a plan that meets the overall public need.

I have heard people say that it would be a great mistake for us to leave control of education and the curriculum in the hands of a community, that a fiasco would occur because some communities would neglect education altogether. I don't agree with that. I believe people, if they know what is happening in the overall way within their community, what they are getting in value for their money, can decide themselves what their priorities and their needs are, and they will do what is right for the total community.

I look at our plan of doing it, I look at our situation in Moosonee where we spent several million dollars building the Moosonee Education Centre; and we have a little more than a score of people making use of this. Why? Because it is our idea imposed on them instead of their idea developed as they see the need. They would use and would have provided a far more effective facility at a fraction of the cost, had the opportunity ever been given for them to participate.

I've been told that when you get into the financial world it's useless to try to involve ordinary people in developing legislation because they don't have enough knowledge; it's too complicated. Yet those of us who participated in a workshop on warranties have seen wonderful ideas brought out by small storekeepers, by the ordinary public, an understanding of the total problem that is far beyond our own on occasion, and a willingness to see legislation enacted that might not be what they would have chosen originally, but which they see as reasonable and sensible.

Let's involve people in the preparation of answers, the seeking of answers to problems. Let's give them an opportunity to be part of the whole process of analysing the problem and developing answers.

This doesn't mean giving to people the actual decision and by-passing our democratic system and we who are elected to have that responsibility. But we do have the responsibility of ensuring they are part of the decision.

In business it's not the case that you can decide at head office what you are going to do and issue a directive and get a response. If you do it that way you might get 20 per cent response. You'll get a very ineffective and often very costly response. What you have got to do to get real response is involve the people concerned in developing the programme so they are part of it, it's not imposed on them. What is effective in business and pays in business also pays in government, and even more so there.

So in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I have outlined the way of developing regional government, and some of the things I would like to see handled, ultimately, in regional government when it's a form of government. I have outlined the problems in housing, and how I feel land speculation should be handled; the need to disperse opportunity throughout Ontario; the need for a new approach to transportation in this province; and, finally, the need to change the way we arrive at decisions in this province.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I conclude that if we had followed these programmes there would have been no need for a 40 per cent increase in sales tax, nor for the people of this province to lose as much confidence as they have in this government and actually, unfortunately, in all governments. I urge upon this House a decision to change the way we are governed so that the people of this province can truly feel they are a part of a good and great democracy.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In replying to the budget, I would like to do something I have been unable to do publicly before, and that is to express my personal thanks to the Treasurer of this province (Mr. White) on behalf of all of the ratepayers—in fact, all of the residents—of the borough of Scarborough. For, because of this budget, we have had the largest tax cut on property in the history of the borough.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Where does the hon. member get that?

Mr. Drea: But it is more than that, Mr. Speaker, because the tax cut also comes at a time when the borough of Scarborough has come of age. Now I think it's rather significant in the evolution and development of Metropolitan Toronto that the last time Her Majesty had a rather prolonged visit to the Metropolitan Toronto area, it was a borough to the west of Metropolitan Toronto that came of age. Indeed, at that time the Etobicoke public buildings were formally dedicated by Her Majesty.

This time, at the end of this month, Her Majesty will dedicate the new Town Centre in Scarborough, which not only symbolizes but demonstrates the fact that the borough has come of age, since it encompasses not just the general offices of the borough but indeed the Board of Education. It is designed in the way I think municipal undertakings will be in the future, for it is designed as a people centre.

I think it is very significant that at a time when a provincial Treasurer had the foresight to give municipalities the lion's share of an expansive tax for the first time in the history of this province—

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): About time!

Mr. Drea: —indeed, of any other province, that we are dedicating a new town centre in our borough. I think the two go hand in hand.

Mr. Speaker, one of the things that has somewhat disturbed me in this session—

Mr. Haggerty: Now for the bad news!

Mr. Drea: Oh, no! We have quite a few minutes to go and I'll give the signal when I roll. I'm being very general and very placatory at the moment.

One of things that has disturbed me in this session, Mr. Speaker, is the cheap shots that are being taken at people who cannot reply. By that I mean the shots that are being taken at the press gallery.

Mr. Speaker, it was 14 years ago, back in 1959, when I was briefly a member of that gallery. Mind you, it was much smaller in those days, and I certainly wasn't on the first team. In those days they had a first team and they had a second team that came in briefly during the session.

Mr. Haggerty: Who was on third?

Mr. Drea: At that particular time I certainly was the "B" team, because there was no way that I could have done the job that Jimmy Emerson was doing for the Toronto Telegram at that time.

Mr. Speaker, one of the things that bothered me then was the tendency whenever a politician got into trouble on the floor of this House that he spun around on his heel and he angrily pointed his finger and he scorned the gallery, as though it was the gallery that had got him into trouble.

Of course, because of the limitations of this House, people in the gallery aren't able to reply. They could give a very simple reply that anyone who gets himself or herself into difficulties on the floor of this House or elsewhere in public life is the author of their own misfortune. The press manages to chronicle the event, and that's the way it goes. But I say to you, Mr. Speaker, in this session—and I don't think it has been deliberate; I think it has been a sort of impulse, as I suppose the beast comes out in all of us from time to time—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Right!

Mr. Drea: Particularly across the floor there have been some very low blows struck at this gallery.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I thought the member was talking about the Treasurer and the Premier (Mr. Davis), for heaven's sake!

Mr. Drea: No. Keep awake, stay awake, keep with it, stay with it.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): Where did all the sanctimony from last night go?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, you mention these things and you provoke an outburst.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The member is very provoking.

Mr. Drea: To come back to the point that I am making, Mr. Speaker, I think it is time that somebody stood up on the floor of this House for the gallery. Granted, I have a bias, as I had 20 wonderful years in the newspaper business. I have a bias and I admit it, but I think today that we are very fortunate in this House in having what I like to regard as the finest press gallery, both in quantity and quality, that there is anywhere in this Dominion. I know that from time to time some of the oldtimers here like to talk about the great old days.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: In the Dominions?

Mr. Drea: Dominion!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Oh!

Mr. Drea: I know "Dominion" is a word that the Leader of the Opposition party doesn't like very much, so I will say it again, "Dominion".

Mr. Haggerty: From sea to sea!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Tell us about Princess Anne.

Mr. Drea: What would the member like me to tell him about her?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Didn't he send her a telegram?

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Wave the flag!

Mr. Drea: I wouldn't be presumptuous enough to send a lady that I don't know a telegram on any matter.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That is a slap at the Premier.

Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, to come back to what I was saying about the quality of our gallery, as I was saying, I realize there is a tendency among the veterans or the oldtimers to say that in days past, with such people as Roy Greenaway and so forth, the gallery then was the gallery and that today it has been diluted.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think that anything could be further from the truth. As a matter of fact, in those days we had as the dean of the gallery, Mr. O'Hearn, and today we still have him as the dean of the gallery. We don't see him very much, but then we have put a speaker into his office so that he can write the columns, that many of us disagree with when they don't particularly praise us as the greatest gift that the public life has ever had in Canada, but nonetheless enjoy when he is flogging someone else, and to be fair about it, when he is taking a very positive outlook as an objective observer of trends in public administration in this province.

In the gallery, Mr. Speaker, we have progressed to the extent now where we have things that were unheard of years ago. We have regional interpretation of news, which I think is a very important thing. Up until a few years ago there was general coverage here and I don't think it paid enough attention to the people who were in particular regions that were being affected by particular policies or lack of policies by government.

And we have transferred into the electronic media age. When I was here 14 years ago, Mr. Speaker, when it was supposedly such a great and glorious place, there were scant facilities for radio. In fact I can't ever recall seeing anybody from radio here in those days. Now we have transferred and crossed over the gap that was there between the printed word and the electronic medium and today we do have a type of coverage that I think is unexcelled anywhere in Canada.

The point has been raised here this year that somehow there is a lack of investigative reporting by the press gallery because they—and the reason I say they is that we now have a sizeable and a very knowledgeable contingent of females in the gallery, so I am going to use the word they as all-encompassing; and, believe me, “they” have brought a new quality here which is represented in a great many of the stories.

The point has been made here that the press, particularly the gallery, is not terribly interested in investigating the government, because they are all looking for jobs as executive assistants or somewhere else in government. Mr. Speaker, the reason that so many of them go on to government service is not because they are looking for the job, but because this government is always interested in getting the highest qualified person for the job, therefore we have a great tendency to tap into the gallery. It is exactly the opposite of the low shots that have been made this year.

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): Like the one the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Clement) is getting. I think I am going to be sick.

Mr. Drea: The member certainly wouldn't qualify, so I will return to my remarks.

Mr. Laughren: Eat your heart out!

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): The member will do anything for a line, won't he? How low can he go?

Mr. Drea: But, Mr. Speaker, the reason I am dwelling on this is that I think that at a time when all forms of government—the municipal, the provincial, the federal—are somewhat less than unanimously accepted by the public—and I think that we have to bear a part of this cross because of events elsewhere over which we have no control, those in the United States.

I don't think it is worthy of this particular House to suggest that the press has become a captive of big bureaucracy; that because of the economics of the newspaper industry, which prevent many of the gallery members from working the same hours that we do—and I don't really see why they should—because of the tendency for government to go for the highest qualified people, that somehow this has diluted what is a very, very essential part of this House.

We as politicians may think we are the House, but, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you the quality of this House depends upon the quality and the perceptiveness of the gallery upstairs, even though they are voiceless. I think it is high time that a few more speeches were made around here about the quality of it. I will be quite honest with you—there are many mornings when I take a look at certain publications, that I am working on my ulcer and I am not particularly impressed for about a half an hour; but as I say to myself, they didn't think it up; they didn't do it. Whatever we are getting flogged for we did, and it would be a dereliction of their duty were they not to report it in a fair and an honest manner.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move to another small topic before I come to the main thrust of this speech. I am just a little bit concerned about the lack of recognition for someone in the government service—that someone happens to be Miss Helen Allen.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I admit to my biases on this because I had the very good fortune in my newspaper career that for a time Miss Allen and her “Today's Child” were part of my responsibilities at the Toronto Telegram.

Mr. Speaker, I tell you that in all the time I was in the newspaper business, and for the very brief time I have been in public life, nowhere on this continent—indeed I don't think anywhere in the world—has a contribution by one individual, using her talents and the technology of our time in both the printed and the electronic way, meant more to human beings than the work that Miss Allen has done.

I think it is a tribute to her work that at the time of the cessation of publication by the Telegram, when the government of this province undertook to continue her work and provide the “Today's Child” column in the newspapers, that wanted it, both daily and weekly across this province, neither the opposition nor the New Democratic Party questioned it. Indeed I think with anybody else in any other kind of service some questions could have been raised about the fact it was the government not really beginning to intrude, but involving itself in the role of the free press. I think at that time the lack of concern about the long term implications of this were indicative of the position that her work must go on, or indeed a tribute to Miss Allen.

Mr. Speaker, for some time I've been associated with other individuals, both in the elected parts of this government and the non-elected parts of this government, and people from outside of government, in trying to get Miss Allen and the work that she does the type of recognition that I think a woman like this deserves.

There is a bank in this country, Mr. Speaker, that annually gives an award to someone who has done outstanding work in Canada—that is the Royal Bank.

It is not the monetary value, although I must say that would be very nice—$50,000 from a bank isn't exactly the type of thing you turn away from — but it is also the recognition.

Now, in the course of their awards every year they have chosen not to designate Miss Allen. They have picked a novelist; and I have no quarrel with novelists—I read them from time to time. They have picked a professor; and certainly I have no quarrel with professors. They have picked an architect; I think architects do wonderful work.

But where else can you find a person that when they account to their maker at the end of their time, and the very difficult question is asked about: "What have you really done with your talents and your stewardship," they can say that "there are 5,000 kids who have a home, would never have had a home if I hadn't done this work."

Now Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you it is the rankest form of discrimination against a woman. That when the people look to decide these awards they choose males—novelists, professors, architects. I don't care what the occupation is, but they ignore a woman. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, they ignore her because she is doing what in a cliché is "women's work," that she is finding homes for children; and that somehow doesn't merit a place in the big, big picture of the development of Canada.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that when you think about the work that she is doing you look at questions such as: "Who wants a child with club feet?" and "Who wants a child with cerebral palsy?"

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you about one incident I had with Miss Allen. There was a young boy who was to be adopted and, Mr. Speaker, it was a dreadful dilemma for the medical people. Because of a congenital ailment and his real family's history, there was a 50-50 chance that he would go blind—and no one would know until the day came. It was a question of taking a two- or three-year old boy and you would have this threat hanging over you as his parent for about 16 or 17 years—and the chances were 50-50.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is a tremendous accomplishment for a programme that this government and all of us so honestly support, that the child was adopted and has a home. I think that all we can do now, really, is hope the particular affliction does not strike. But I think that is an indication of the work Miss Allen does.

I really wonder how a bank that is interested in people who are developing this country has tended to ignore her for so long. Banks have a lot to do with women; they employ a great many of them. I sometimes wonder if their employment policies aren't reflected in their lack of concern about what women are doing in the community.

Mr. Speaker, I am now going to come to the main thrust of my speech, and here we go. Mr. Speaker one of the other interesting things in this session has been the endless proclamations of gloom and doom from across the floor—that we in this party are doing nothing; we in this party are falling apart; we are in the staggers or we are going out; our record of accomplishment is nil; on and on it drones, Mr. Speaker, on and on it drones.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to stand here for the next few minutes—

Mr. Ferrier: That is what the press gallery is saying too.

Mr. Drea: —and I'm going to set the record straight. I'm going from Agriculture and Food right on up to Transportation and Communications; and I'm going through all the things that we've done; and if they don't want to hear them and they don't want to sit there they can leave now.

Mr. Haggerty: Does the hon. member want his crying towel too?

Mr. Drea: I won't need the crying towel. The opposition are going to need it.

Mr. Germa: Tell us about land deals. A lot of them got caught, that is their trouble.

Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, the first thing I want to talk about—

Mr. Germa: Such things as land deals?

Mr. Drea: —is the man who is the leader of this party.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): The member for Sudbury can't stand the heat in the kitchen.

Mr. Haggerty: The member for Renfrew South had better be careful of those interjections. He knows what happened to him!

Mr. Ferrier: That may be dangerous!

Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I think it is publicly known that the Premier of this province and I do not agree politically on a great number of things. Many of the disagreements are in private; I think some of them have been in public. I am not going to try and convince you that the Premier and I do see eye to eye on all political matters, but I'm here to tell you something else. When it comes to personal integrity; when it comes to leadership; when it comes to the courage that is needed to lead a political party in these troubled times—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Drea: —there is no one in the Dominion of Canada who has the same stature as the Premier of this province, and I'm now going to outline just why.

You know, Mr. Speaker, before the election this country was in troubled times. They'd bungled it in Ottawa. They'd really bungled it. There was a 10 per cent import surcharge put on industry by the US; that was really going to affect Ontario, and they whined and they groaned and they cried in Ottawa, and where was the leadership? The leadership was in this province, because when we went to the electorate we had a very positive programme that would counter that 10 per cent surcharge. We didn't have to put it into effect because the Americans withdrew it. But here we were with enough leadership capability that we could have an instant response and a very practical one to events that were decided in a foreign country and were outside of our control. Right now we are doing the same thing.

Mr. Haggerty: Go to Germany.

Mr. Drea: When we are in the midst of a continental energy crisis, where is the leadership coming from?

An hon. member: From Alberta.

Mr. Drea: Is it coming from Ottawa?

An hon. member: No!

An hon. member: From Alberta, that's where it's coming from.

Mr. Drea: Oh, is it coming from Alberta? The only thing that I have read recently about Alberta is that they want to export, and export, and export. And that is hardly—

An hon. member: To Ontario.

Mr. Drea: Oh no, when I talk export you're crossing the parallel, you're not coming to Ontario.

Mr. Haggerty: The 49th.

Mr. Drea: That's right. But when it comes to the matter of leadership, when this province and this country are in uncertain times once again because of events over which we have no control, we cannot stop the arbitrary actions of people in rather ridiculous little countries in the Middle East, that when they arbitrarily and wilfully decide they are going to cut off oil supplies—

Mr. Haggerty: Tell us about Switzerland, that is the big—

Mr. Drea: Switzerland?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Drea: We are not responsible for certain technological events taking place which require more and more gasoline to be used. At the same time, certain tax policies in the United States have worked against exploration and development of both petroleum and natural gas. We are caught up in that same crisis, although certainly not to the degree that they are yet. And we are not going to be caught up in the crisis to the degree that the United States is, because once again, when Ottawa fumbles and bumbles and doesn't know whether it should continue its national oil policy, or whether it should have an national energy policy or what; we have, right here in this House, yesterday—leadership all the way! Here is the energy question; here are the answers; here is what we are going to do.

Mr. Haggerty: About 25 years too late.

Mr. Ferrier: The member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough) had to bail the Premier out.

Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that that spells leadership and that that spells out exactly what we told the electors this party was going to do.

Again, in the field of transit, while they sit there and they wring their hands that everybody knows public transit is the way of the future but how are we ever going to convince the people to do anything about it? How are we ever going to get into a transit system where we are not going to get ourselves into difficulties over imports because the systems are being developed elsewhere? How are we ever going to find the money? How are we ever going to do this? Here is this government of Ontario—and I'm very glad that my friend the Minister of Transportation and Communication (Mr. Carton) is here—we are into the midst of solving the rapid transit dilemma.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Drea: Not Ottawa! Oh no, we just heard the moan and groan about how the Canadian Transportation Commission can't even decide whether there should be a train from Barrie south or what have you. Already in this province, we are doing the technological and practical work that will put the intermediate capacity transit system into practical operation by 1977.

Mr. Haggerty: The member doesn't believe that.

Mr. Drea: And furthermore, Canadians will do it. It may be foreign technology now, but we will wind up owning it.

And again in the field of transportation, we have, right now, three provinces on their hands and knees — Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba. I suppose we should throw in the poor Maritime provinces too, because they have been complaining for years that the freight rates are rigged against them.

Mr. Speaker, I say that the freight rates are rigged against them; and they are rigged against northern Ontario. But which is the only government that is doing anything about it? It is this government, because where we owned the railroad, we cut the rates.

Where is the Canadian Transportation Commission and where is Ottawa in talking to the two major railroads in this province on behalf of northern Ontario? I'll tell you where they are, they are in the midst of making a deal with the Americans because Mr. Richard Nixon wants to get some very preferential freight rates for the northwestern United States, and part of the trade-off on that is going to be much higher freight rates in the American mid-west and in northern Ontario. That's where Ottawa is.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Drea: And where is Ontario? We are cutting the rates.

Mr. Haggerty: The United States has come over here to see how we run our railroads. We are not going broke like they are in the United States.

Mr. Drea: As a matter of fact, the most profitable railroad on this continent is operated and owned by this government, and the minister is sitting right there. Let's put that one on too.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): The only reason the others are going broke is because they're eliminating service.

Mr. Haggerty: We are being taxed here, too.

Mr. Drea: Now, Mr. Speaker, all the things that we have done in this government, and I have a very long list to go, I haven't even started Agriculture and Food, I'm just at the Premier, Mr. House Leader. I am only warming up on his contributions in a year and a half.

Mr. Speaker, the measure of a government and the measure of a leader is how they react when the going gets rough. Right now there is a concern, a very valid concern, and I have expressed it publicly and privately, about the role of the campaign contributor in the future. Mr. Speaker, I think it is a measure of this government and the Premier of this province that we are the first government in Canada to come to grips with the problem of the campaign contribution; and don't tell me they publish them in Saskatchewan because, mister, they don't!

Mr. Ferrier: After Fidinam was exposed is when this government came to grips with it.

Mr. Drea: In the next election in this province, there is going to be public disclosure of campaign funds. This government has announced it; this government will put it into effect. Mr. Speaker, it is not an easy thing to put into effect—

Mr. Ferrier: And that government will go down.

Mr. Drea: But not for the nefarious reasons that people may think. One of the very great difficulties is that people do want privacy. We see this in a great number of the bills that we put in now, a great concern about privacy. They don't want their names published, even if it is for $10 or $5 or 50 cents or $5,000 or whatever it is. They literally are very terrified of having their names put on a printed list because they presume, and I think quite rightly so, that it is an invasion of their privacy and their personal decision.

Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, we are going all the way. If we want to look back, sir, I remember a great campaign pledge in 1968, that I admired very much, and that is when the federal government said they were going to lead in this field. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am a very patient man, but unfortunately I do not have infinite patience. It is now 1973 and there is no indication in the next federal election, whenever it may be, that there will have been one single thing done about the very pressing and vexing question of campaign contributions.

Yet you have this government four-square on the record, and you are going to have it in this province in 1975 or 1976, whenever the next election may be. Again, Mr. Speaker, that's leadership. It would be very easy to bail out and to get a towel and say: "Oh, it is an awful problem, let's get somebody to study it". No way.

Mr. Haggerty: That is one thing that doesn't have to be bailed out.

Mr. Drea: It is being done. If the member were here once in a while he would understand many of the things that have come out. Unfortunately, one of the problems about being a member of this House is it requires a bit of attendance to understand what this government is doing. A member has to be here when it is dealt with.

Mr. Ferrier: The Premier is never here.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): There are only two Liberal members and two NDP members here now.

Mr. J. H. Jessiman (Fort William): They only have two members of the Liberals and two members of the NDP.

Mr. Ferrier: That is quite a large number isn't it?

Mr. Drea: When the Premier of this province knows that I am speaking, he knows that he doesn't need to come.

An hon. member: He tunes in anyway.

Mr. Ferrier: He never comes anyway, whether the member is speaking or not.

Mr. Drea: Continuing on in the field of energy, Mr. Speaker, where is the national policy to decide the constitutionality of what Alberta wants to do? Where, oh where, is that very distinguished Minister of Justice? Where is the federal Solicitor General? Where are the people who should be introducing stated cases before the Supreme Court of Canada to decide constitutionality? In most other countries it is the national government that goes to the high court and says: "Please decide this question now." Where is it? Why they still can't figure out how they are going to have a national energy policy that precludes exports, when Newfoundland with Churchill Falls, and Quebec with James Bay, are totally committed for billions of dollars of export of energy to the United States, which would be their only bargain.

Mr. J. A. Taylor (Prince Edward-Lennox): Where is the leadership?

Mr. Drea: Where is the leadership? Members saw the leadership yesterday. No constitutional conference. Why waste time? We are going to have it decided, and whether we like the decision or not, it is going to be decided in the very near future in the place where it should be decided, and that is the high court of this country is going to rule on the constitutionality of that proposal from Alberta.

Mr. Haggerty: Where else could they settle it? Fort Lauderdale?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: We certainly would settle it.

Mr. Drea: He asks the question. I always like to reply to my friend for—

Mr. Haggerty: Welland South.

Mr. Drea: Yes. I know it was Welland. I wanted to get the right one in there.

I turned on my television set last night, which I don't do terribly often, and there was your distinguished leader—and I wish he was still here. I like tilting with him. He is a very fine gentleman. Miscast, but very fine.

I turned it on and here he was saying there should have been a constitutional conference, there should have been a meeting between the provinces, why the federal government should have been called in.

This thing has been going on for three or four months. There was an interprovincial conference — the Premier of this province went to Alberta. And when they wouldn't change their mind and it was entirely detrimental to the interests of this province, I think that rather than saying to the Premier of Alberta: "Come down to Ontario and let's talk about it again; maybe we can put some pressure on," we are taking it—

Mr. Haggerty: He did come down here and talk about it.

Mr. Ferrier: The Tory summit failed.

Mr. Drea: —to the right place, at the right time, on behalf of all the people of Canada, because it does affect all of the people of this country.

Again, that is leadership. And again, the whole series of energy reports, the legislation and all the background material that went into them, this is the only place in this country where that kind of material and that kind of legislation comes down, because elsewhere it is always an American report. It is always on the basis of some American study. It is always on the basis of something that is happening somewhere else in the world.

Our energy policy is a reflection of the leadership of the Premier of this province, because it concerns Ontario. It concerns your town and my town, it concerns you and I, and it also takes into account the outside ramifications.

For the first time—and this is the only place in Canada where it would happen—our policy, by necessity, does not have to conform to what is right and best for the United States. Our policy is what is right and best for the people of Ontario, and only this government could do that.

Mr. Haggerty: Tell us about the gasoline increase. Why doesn't this government do something?

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): That is right.

An hon. member: The member must tell his party what is being said here so they will know.

Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I said that I intended to go through it ministry by ministry. Mr. Speaker, I could probably speak for two days on the accomplishments of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food in this province.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: And they voted against it.

Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of brevity—

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Both of them, let that be known!

Mr. Drea: —I am merely going to say that the accomplishments of that Ministry of Agriculture and Food are so well known that I don't understand how anybody could vote against it.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): All two of them.

An hon. member: All two of them weren't even women.

An hon. member: They are never with it.

Mr. Drea: Now, Mr. Speaker can I move to the Ministry of Labour? When we commenced this session, the first bill, other than the traditional one, that was put on the order paper had to deal with the elevator strike. That was a very prolonged strike which had ramifications throughout the entire province. It was a very difficult thing to come to grips with because it was American dominated and controlled from day one on both sides. It also had to take into account the precedent that for the first time this province was going to impose binding arbitration in the private sector. I never considered that to be a terribly important thing but a lot of people did. I think if one imposes arbitration in the public sector one has every right to do it in the private sector on behalf of the public.

Mr. Ferrier: The Minister of Labour (Mr. Guindon) wasn't very happy doing it.

Mr. Drea: Yes, all right; just don't walk into the trap now because here we go. Mr. Speaker, I stood up that day and I took a fair amount of abuse but that's all right. My colleague, the hon. member for Stormont, took a lot of abuse that day as the Minister of Labour. He took abuse that he was being too precipitous, that he really didn't have to do that and if he let both sides in that thing, which was really an argument among scallawags, alone for another week, somehow they would come together on behalf of the public interest.

Mr. Haggerty: Does the member want the government—

Mr. Drea: We heard all kinds of things about how no decent government would impose this awful kind of settlement and that the only reason we were doing it was because we were anti-labour. That came from that side; that we were anti-management came from the Liberal Party.

Mr. Haggerty: All the government wants is chaos.

Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, we did put it to arbitration.

Mr. Kennedy: Members opposite support chaos, that is right.

Mr. Drea: It went to binding arbitration, Mr. Speaker. That arbitration is still continuing so I don't want to talk any more about the merits of the case. I suggest to members that this was happening in other provinces, including that has recently elected a socialist government; that's the province of British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, when that same elevator strike started, or recommenced in British Columbia, wonder of wonders what did that labour-oriented, labour-supported, socialist government do? Did it let them go on strike, the way that the NDP here suggested? Was there more consideration for the working man because the Minister of Labour in British Columbia is a card-carrying dues-paying member of an international union?

Mr. Speaker, the results in British Columbia were this: The men were told they could not go on strike: they had to accept the binding arbitration from Ontario. That, from an NDP government only a few short weeks after the Minister of Labour in this province has to take abuse!

In other words, when it is here in this province, it is fair game to snipe at us. But when it is done, it becomes the pattern for other provinces, even in a province where the Minister of Labour is a dues-paying, card-carrying member of an international union. We didn't impose that kind of arbitration on the elevator workers and the companies. We told them what we were going to do. In British Columbia the government said, "What's good enough for Ontario is good enough for you. So get back to work."

I have yet to hear a single word of praise for the Minister of Labour for that settlement and the current arbitration. I would really think that somebody on the other side should be gentleman enough to do so.

An hon. member: Asking too much.

An hon. member: That is impossible.

An hon. member: There are two sides to every question.

Mr. Yakubuski: I think the member for Cochrane South will have to leave that party.

Mr. Ferrier: No, I am very happy.

An hon. member: He never did belong to it.

Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, we have heard in this last week about the improvements to the Workmen's Compensation Act of this province. I have views on workmen's compensation. I certainly think we should be evolving a different form of it. I don't really want to get into that because we have gone through it this week and perhaps at a more appropriate time I will outline some of my suggestions.

Again, I had to sit here this week, Mr. Speaker, and listen to the Minister of Labour being lambasted for having the heart and soul and the courage of his convictions and for his ability to be a leader in a very vital economic field to improve the lot of people who have no way whatsoever to improve their own lot. Those were the disabled who were disabled many years ago, who have not been able to voice their concern to do anything in a positive way about the way inflation has eaten into their pensions which were none too high in the first place. Yet, when he does that all he gets is abuse and diatribes.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that all the other provinces in this country within the lifetime of this government will follow the lead of our Minister of Labour. He is not here, my fine legal mind over there. I guess he has gone home early too; I guess the only people who work on Fridays are Tories.

Mr. Kennedy: And the NDP is away too.

Mr. Yakubuski: They would be gone too only they missed their train.

An hon. member: They don't do much on the other four days either.

Mr. Drea: And that fine legal mind over there said right after the Throne Speech, "Where is your concern for labour; what do you ever do for labour?" Well, would somebody report to him what we have done?

Mr. Taylor: There isn't a working man in the lot of them. They don't know what labour is.

Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I really think that is also a measure of a government. I have said before the real measure is, what does it do when the going gets rough? I think another measure is, what does it do for those who are really unable to have control over their own destiny, particularly in the economic field, and what happens to them? It would be very easy and I suppose it would be politically very astute to just red-neck a great many of the social problems of this province. We don't do that.

Mr. Speaker, we went to the public before 1971 in this party and we said, "We are going to take the financial and the medical sting out of being old. While we cannot give you back your health, we are going to give you as much dignity and as much comfort as people deserve who have built this province."

We said, "We were going into extended care, we were going to pay the nursing home bills right down to the drugs, and we were going to make it a very fair and a very equitable programme."

We said that it wasn't going to be charity, because they were going to have to pay a bit too, but the bit that they were having to pay—and it is really not a bit; it is about 20 some per cent—was going to be based upon their old age pension, so that they would be contributing and paying their own way to the limit of their own ability on the money that they were receiving from the federal government and for which they had paid all of their lives.

At the same time we told them the population of this province and this party were going to recognize and pay them a dividend for the work they did in building this province into what it is today. We called that programme extended care.

Mr. Speaker, I have yet to hear a sizable complaint about the way that programme works. Yet that is a very pioneering programme, it is a very progressive programme, it is a very all-encompassing programme. It is not just an accident of where you live that you can get this service; it is available the length and breadth of this province.

Mr. Yakabuski: It is not a cost-shared programme either.

Mr. Drea: No, it is not. Thank you very much, I forgot about that. Mr. Speaker, do you know that the federal government—the ones with all of the money all of the time—throw it out of the window? Thirty-four million dollars into Montreal for silly nut stuff in the summertime—and not the Olympics either, I am talking about LIP or slip or whatever they call it — but they have turned us down on cost-sharing. The federal government, those paragons of virtue, those ones I had to suffer through for an hour this morning listening to all the things they would do such as putting the choo-choo up and down from Barrie to Toronto—

Hon. Mr. Winkler: They cut it off.

Mr. Drea: —they won't give a penny to the care of older people in this province who are sick. Don't anybody talk to me about leadership or the lack of leadership. This province went ahead with it.

We hear a lot about those unfortunate enough to be on long-term social assistance under the provincial Family Benefits Act. I wish the minister was here today, Mr. Speaker, because I think that one of the things he has done through regulation, which perhaps has escaped the notice of the House, is probably the greatest humanitarian gesture in some years.

Perhaps "gesture" is the wrong word. I think that it was a justified thing. I think that it probably could be argued it might have been done some time ago. But in any event, it was done.

As you know, up until this year, Mr. Speaker, to receive a pension as a disabled person in this province—and I'm sure every member has had experience with this on appeals and so forth—you had to be totally disabled in your living sense. In other words, your lack of employment. The fact that you couldn't ever work again really didn't have much to do with it. But you literally had to be in a wheelchair.

Mr. Speaker, that was changed this year. Now, if you are permanently unemployable in this province you are considered to be totally disabled for purposes of the Act. We have opened up dignified pensions where we didn't have to, because you see, it's diminishing returns, Mr. Speaker, supposedly the Canada Pension Plan takes care of it, and the Canada Pension Plan does very well, except we have a large number of people in this province who have never been fortunate enough to be able to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan. And who is to look after them?

Well, Mr. Speaker, in the final analysis it comes down to this government to look after them. And I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, on the record they were in very good hands when they were in charge of a ministry headed by a man with the humanitarian principles and the honesty and the integrity of the hon. member for Cochrane North (Mr. Brunelle).

And you know, Mr. Speaker, even in such controversial fields as the Ontario Housing Corp.—and let it be known that I am no admirer of Ontario Housing and I don't think that comes as a surprise to anybody; I may admire the principle of it, but I am certainly not altogether enthralled with its day-to-day operations—but, Mr. Speaker, in a couple of areas I think they deserve great praise, because they are progressing far beyond the conventional aspects of public housing.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, this year there are going to be 12 homes purchased, existing houses purchased in Metropolitan Toronto. I could tell you the particular area they're going to be bought in, but I won't. The reason I won't is I don't believe in ghetto-izing or stigmatizing or doing anything else to people to make them out of the ordinary. I think when people are left alone to lead conventional and routine lives, they do very well. It's only when we make them the focus of attention that we get into some difficulties.

Now, these 12 homes are going to be occupied by Indians, Mr. Speaker, I suppose 12 homes in Metropolitan Toronto with over two million people and, literally, hundreds of thousands of apartment units and houses and rooms and what have you, isn't very much.

But you know, Mr. Speaker, Ontario Housing has entered into a very exciting experimental project with Indians. Because the Indians are going to run the programme.

Instead of waking up 10 or 15 years from now and finding an extremely large Indian migration into Metropolitan Toronto — and believe me, Mr. Speaker, it will come, because the reserves are no longer viable. They are going to come here. Toronto is the place where the action is. People from all over this country, all over the world come here, so the Indians in the north and the west and the east are going to come here, too.

Instead of then having to go and develop a crash type of programme, Ontario Housing is now into experimental work with Indian people. We're not buying the houses and giving them to them free. We are merely making it very easy for them to purchase the houses. And they will be paying off the mortgages according to their ability to pay.

Instead of being second-class citizens foisted upon the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and its residents, these people will be first-class citizens from the day that they enter into this programme. It will be very beneficial to their family life and I can assure, Mr. Speaker, that they will be integrated into the community to the degree that they want to be. In other words, there won't be 12 houses on one street, the houses are scattered.

I think that such programmes, receive very scant attention. I suppose in a government with a budget in the billions, a programme that merely deals in thousands and just a dozen houses really doesn't compete for attention. But again I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, this is the measure of a government that does care about people—not only cares about people, but does something for people.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I was going to say something about the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, but I think I have already praised the minister enough. After all, that first intermediate capacity line is coming from Scarborough to the vicinity of Queen's Park, so I think, since my cup overfloweth, I won't proceed any further with that ministry.

But, now to come to an aspect of the budget, Mr. Speaker. When I was making my introductory remarks I said that it was the first time that a provincial Treasurer anywhere in the Dominion of Canada—I know that you two gentlemen don't mind the word "Dominion", I guess some of the radical fringe there leave when you utter historic words like that—that a province had earmarked funds from an expansive tax into municipalities.

A great deal of lip service is being given to the fact that municipalities need a better tax base, or a more adequate tax base, in the 1970s, 1980s and 1990s than the property tax. But who is doing anything about it? We have heard two, three or four weeks of anguish, tears, protests, howls. As a matter of fact in biblical terms, I thought we were actually going to get into the word "rant" in that context, not the other one. I really thought we were going to have that. There were some nights I thought, in this place when we would look outside to see, the red lamp flicker and go out—because we were that bad.

Mr. Speaker, I haven't heard a single word about the two per cent sales tax since the night it was finally passed. That two per cent extra sales tax means that my property tax rate is being cut by the highest amount in the history of the particular municipality where I live. Right across this province this is being duplicated everywhere else.

And do you know why we don't hear anything about it, Mr. Speaker? Because we are the first government in this country, in this century, that has decided not to punish thrift, and to stop doing it. We are taking away the property levy, which is heaviest on those who can afford to pay least, and we are putting in an expansive tax that will allow people to buy a house, to go through with the Canadian dream, and not, in their old age, to have it ruthlessly wiped out because property taxes made it too expensive for them to continue on in the home.

Mr. Speaker, for generations and decades in this country we have been punishing thrift. The provincial Treasurer of the Province of Ontario put an absolute final and irrevocable end to that in this budget.

Mr. Spence: Why was the government going to tax hydro?

Mr. Drea: If I knew that one, I wouldn't be here.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Drea: And besides, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that has been lost in this budget is continuing the practice of not punishing thrift. As you know, for people over 65, there has been a special municipal subsidy to assist them with the payment of their education tax—because, as I said, I am a very firm believer in the dividend yield theory. I think when a person has spent their entire adult life, or even one year, in building this province, I think that we have the obligation to let them have a dignified and reasonably secure life in their declining years.

Mr. Ferrier: The member is sounding like a Social Crediter.

Mr. Drea: Never, never, never let that be said. No, I always lean to the right. But, Mr. Speaker, it used to be $50 that special subsidy and then we said if you were really in need you could apply for another $50. Mr. Speaker, this time around we have done something else that hasn't been done in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. Haggerty: This government overtaxed them from the start. Rob Peter to pay Paul.

Mr. Drea: How can we overtax when it is the municipalities taxing them in the first place?

Mr. Haggerty: Take that out of the same pocket and say "I am sorry we have overtaxed you."

Mr. Drea: But Mr. Speaker, now we have devised a way that they will get $100—yes there is a means test, but the means test is going to be done in the privacy of their own home and it is the means test that every one of us goes through once a year when we pay our federal and provincial income taxes.

On that purple form next year, if it is still purple, there will be additional sums of money for those who are over 65 years of age and it will come to them along with the very sizable redistribution of income that we now provide in this province.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the only redistribution of income there is in this country, by and large—unless you want to take in income tax which I consider to be far too high and far too severe at the moment—the only real redistribution of income in this province is the result of the work of this provincial Treasurer and his predecessor. When we went into the tax rebate system for the first time people could actually see the money that was coming back to them. It wasn't some kind of subsidy or some kind of economic programme—

Mr. Haggerty: They were overtaxed from the start.

Mr. Drea: —that was hidden and supposedly beneficial to them. In this province, when we redistribute income, Mr. Speaker, we give the cash. You get the cheque. You can cash it. You can see what you are getting back. And again, because we are giving back so much—I see my colleague the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) here—60 cents on the dollar to education. Sixty cents on the dollar.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Promise delivered.

Mr. Drea: You never hear that from a school board, you know. Oh, the trouble they have raising their money! They have no trouble spending it and they sure like to get the 60 cents on the dollar. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, that was a campaign pledge of this party, that by this year we would be—

An hon. member: Quite right.

Mr. Drea: —up to 60 cents on the dollar. Bam! There it is. Because, Mr. Speaker, when this government speaks and—

Mr. Deacon: How much on the dollar is it in Scarborough?

Mr. Drea: —when the Premier promises or pledges, Mr. Speaker, there may not be many things sure in this world but when the Premier of this province gives you his word and his public pledge you can bet money on it, because it comes through every single time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deacon: How much on the dollar is it in Scarborough?

Mr. Drea: How much of it is it on the dollar? In Metro it is about 33 to 34 cents on the dollar, but I suggest to the member—and I listened to him for an hour about his choo-choos and all of this stuff and how they were going to take the growth factor out of Toronto and all of these things. If he wants us, in this government, to give exactly the same amount of money to every school board in the province, or to discontinue our set of grants and so forth, then he should just stand up and say so, because he's the one who stood over there for an hour and he wanted equalized opportunity across this province. That is how you're getting it, the way we're handing out the money.

Mr. G. Nixon (Dovercourt): And don't forget it.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That's why we are here and they are there, and that's why they will stay there.

Mr. Deacon: How much on the dollar is it in Scarborough?

Mr. F. S. Miller (Muskoka): Is he back?

An hon. member: He wants it cut to 33 cents in the rest of the province, eh?

Mr. Deacon: Just wanted to be sure the hon. member knew what it was in Scarborough.

Mr. Drea: As a matter of fact, I'll tell the member for York Centre something else, because it was his party that raised it in the last election. I think that everybody knows where my school taxes go.

They don't go to the public school, they go to the separate school and the member's party raised that. And no government in this province, or on this continent, has been fairer to the Catholic population and their separate schools than this one, and all we get for it is abuse. I say that as a Catholic—and I'm very proud to be one and I have children in the separate school and I am a product of the separate school system and I am also a product of the Progressive Conservative Party of this province and I say to you, no government has ever been fairer anywhere. And right on up to the university level too.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I just have a couple of small points; I think I've got about a minute. I did want to mention something, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to adjourn all this, but I did want to mention something and I want to get it into Hansard today because I want it to be overseas in time for him to read it.

That is, Mr. Speaker, I think of my good friend Ward Cornell, who is now our man in London.

Mr. Kennedy: Great man.

Mr. Drea: I think he is doing an outstanding job for this province. I think that he is keeping a very intensive watching brief on the trade patterns that are emerging in Europe which will affect this province.

As I say, once again, Mr. Speaker, instead of waiting five or 10 years from now when the European Common Market will have affected and dislocated some trade in this province, instead of waiting until then and getting the towel out and going through all the manipulations, this government is doing something about it; we have somebody there who is keeping us informed, and who is doing the job. Once again we have anticipated the difficulties that may or may not come and we are going to be in a position to do something about them in a very logical and orderly way when they come about.

Much as I wish he was back on the hockey games, I certainly wish him continued success in that job, because whereas before he was bringing entertainment to many millions in this country, he is now working actively on behalf of the industrial heartland of Canada, which is this province.

Mr. Speaker, I have devoted quite a lot of time to praising this government but I have a number of things that I want to take issue with this government on. Unfortunately as I look at the hour ahead, I am afraid that I am going to have to adjourn until we resume this particular debate.

Mr. Drea moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, before I adjourn the House, I would like to place a motion and move that until the summer recess the House may sit beyond the normal adjournment hour of 10:30 each night.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, as previously announced, on Monday we will proceed with Bill 128, standing as item No. 5, and then Bill 129, item No. 6, and Bill 130, item No. 7.

Hon Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at 1 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JUNE 11, 1973

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Once again we are pleased to have guests with us. Today in the east gallery we have students from St. Stephen's Separate School of Rexdale and St. Joseph's School of Tillsonburg.

In the west gallery there are students from Jordan Public School of Jordan and St. Brigid's Separate School of Nakina.

A little later in the afternoon we will be joined by students from Errol Road Public School, Sarnia, and St. Martin's Separate School of Terrace Bay.

Statements by the ministry.

ONTARIO SUMMER GAMES

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Community and Social Services): Mr. Speaker, the Province of Ontario is committed to improving the quality of life for our citizens and this means improvement in the human quality as well as environmental quality.

I should like to take this opportunity to remind the House that this government will also continue to encourage and develop athletic activities fully recognizing that sports and physical recreation are important and increasingly necessary in the development of our cultural and human quality.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): For northern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Right. To attain these goals the provincial government, municipal recreation authorities and the provincial sports governing bodies have combined to ensure that adequate opportunities are available for those who wish to merely participate at the recreation level for either the satisfaction gained or the satisfaction gained through excellence of performance.

This preamble brings me to the announcement, Mr. Speaker, that the first Ontario Summer Games which the Ministry of Community and Social Services is co-sponsoring with the city of Oshawa from June 30 to July 2, are fast approaching.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): We are hearing a lot about Oshawa.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): You bet.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Great city. Permit me to go back for a moment.

Hon. R. Welch (Provincial Secretary for Social Development): Great member.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Great member, right. In 1970 the Province of Ontario Winter Games were held in the borough of Etobicoke; 3,500 athletes competed in regional competitions and 1,200 of them were brought to Etobicoke for the provincial finals. About 200 of these young people were then selected to represent this province in the second Canada Winter Games in Saskatoon.

Because of the success of these winter games, we can look forward to the first Ontario Summer Games in the great city of Oshawa.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): Great member!

An hon. member: Known as the McIlveen games.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: We expect about 2,000 athletes, including the provincial member, coaches and officials will be involved in the total programme. Financial assistance is provided by this government through the sports and recreation branch of the Ministry of Community and Social Services. This assistance covers such costs as adaptations required for local facilities in Oshawa, the provision of officials, awards, meals, accommodation and transportation. We expect that between 400 and 475 athletes, coaches and officials will be housed in Oshawa during the games.

Nine of the 15 sports included in this programme will be staged in Oshawa, making it the central focus for the games. Six, for a variety of reasons, will be held in other locations in the province—for instance, baseball in Thorold, canoeing in London, diving in Sudbury, shooting in Winona, water-skiing in Morrisburg and rowing in the great city of St. Catharines.

An hon. member: The rowing capital of the world!

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Swimming in Hamilton Bay.

An hon. member: I thought the member was going to walk on the water there.

Mr. Lewis: The Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Kerr) will be walking across the bay again.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: We greatly appreciate the support we have received from the city of Oshawa in the organization of the games. Special notice, Mr. Speaker, must be given to the Oshawa Municipal Recreation Department for the depth of its involvement throughout the planning stages and the responsibilities assumed by members of its recreation staff. I wish to add, the city has planned a number of other important events during Fanfare Week that will culminate with the games.

The nine sports featured in Oshawa include: track and field, cycling, field hockey, lacrosse, soccer, softball, swimming, tennis and water polo.

For about 250 athletes, the Ontario Games is but the prelude to the Canada Summer Games in New Westminster-Burnaby, B.C., Aug. 3 to Aug. 12.

The Canada Games, a developmental programme providing national competition every second year, alternating between the summer and winter seasons, was initiated at Quebec City in the winter of 1967. The second winter festival was in Saskatoon in 1971. The first Canada Summer Games were in Dartmouth-Halifax in 1969. Happily, this province has won the team award at each of these national events. While winning a flag for team competition is in no way comparable to the value of participation for our athletes, all of us will be watching with great interest to see just how well our Ontario team performs this summer.

You will be interested to know there are a number of national and international events planned in which Ontario athletes will participate. At the end of June, the province, along with the federal government and the borough of Etobicoke, will host the Pacific Conference Games, an international track and field meet for countries which border on the Pacific Ocean.

Next year, the British Commonwealth Games will be held in New Zealand; in the following year, 1975, the Pan-American Games will be held in South America and the Canada Winter Games in Alberta. These events culminate with the 1976 Olympic Games in Montreal, as part of the 21st Olympiad.

Mr. Speaker, these are but a few of the many interesting sport events we can look forward to in the next three years, and beyond that, the hosting of the 1978 British Commonwealth Games in Edmonton, Alta.

Mr. C. E. McIlveen (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, concerning the statement of the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Now for the bad news.

Mr. McIlveen: As member for the riding of Oshawa, which is hosting the games—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Is the member staying on?

Mr. McIlveen: For the moment.

I wish to invite all members of the House to come down, not only to Fanfare Week, but to see the games. Many of the athletes from their own areas will be participating.

I wrote a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Davis) asking if he would get all the members in line and we could run a relay race with a torch from Queen's Park to Oshawa. He gave me a confidential reply that unfortunately if we left Queen's Park by the time the House was through, the games would be over by the time we got there.

He's left it up to the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) and me to carry the torch from Queen's Park to Oshawa. The member for High Park has finally consented to do the same if I would join with him in judging Miss Nude Canada; being a couple of doctors, I thought the anatomy lesson would be good for both of us.

I just happen to have some gold pins—like the one that I am wearing—for each of the members. I would like some pages to distribute one to each of the members, and one from the city of Oshawa. Even though we've got kind of banged in regional government, we still are going to give a few things away. Thank you.

Interjections by hon. members.

PROPERTY TAX CREDIT

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, June 1, the hon. member for Scarborough West asked a question relating to the Ontario property tax credits and the alleged use of such credits by the federal government to collect, as he put it, previously forgiven income tax. As a result of this question and of certain statements attributed to the hon. member in the press, an erroneous impression may have been left with the public. I think it is therefore incumbent upon me to put the record straight and allay any fears caused by the hon. member's remarks.

The initial question asked by the member was as follows:

Is he [the Treasurer (Mr. White)] or the Minister of Revenue aware that the property tax credit is being used as a way to extract income tax arrears on the part of the federal government from people over the age of 65 whose arrears had previously been forgiven?

The member went on to state that he had documentary evidence of two such cases before him.

In response, both the Treasurer and I indicated that we were not aware that the federal government was, in fact, using the tax credits to pay debts which had been, as the hon. member stated, forgiven. However, I undertook to pursue the matter with the federal government on the basis of the two cases which the hon. member claims had been brought to his attention, if he would supply the letters to me.

Although the member agreed to provide me with this information, he has not yet done so.

On the morning of Wednesday, June 6, when the promised details of these cases had not yet arrived in my office, a member of my staff telephoned the office of the leader of the New Democratic Party. The call has not yet been returned.

That afternoon, the member for Scarborough West again raised the issue in the House—

Hon. Mr. Welch: Very interesting.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —but having been taken to task for using the word “forgiven” he then spoke simply in terms of “arrears of tax.” As I pointed out at the time that is an entirely different matter.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): This is unbelievable. Thank God it is not question period.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is no question that the federal government has the right to apply the property tax credit, otherwise payable to an individual, against that individual's tax liability for the current tax year or against arrears of taxes. I do not understand how there could be any confusion on this point.

Mr. Lewis: That is what is wrong with it.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The minister shared the confusion for a week himself.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In the fall of 1972, legislation was enacted by this House amending the Income Tax Act which allowed the federal government to apply the property tax credit to any arrears of federal income tax.

Mr. Renwick: And we opposed it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That was passed with the approval of the NDP.

Mr. Renwick: That is not correct. We opposed the bill and specifically drew the minister's attention—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As recently as the latter—the hon. member for Riverdale had better not shake his head.

Mr. Lewis: We specifically drew the minister's attention to that at that time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am about to show the member how he drew my attention to it. As recently as the latter part of April of this year, just a few weeks ago, this Legislature debated and passed a bill further amending the Income Tax Act. Subsection 4 of section 2 of this bill re-enacted the provisions contained in the 1972 bill with certain changes. These amendments, therefore, once again dealt specifically with the matter raised by the member for Scarborough West—at least as he has now qualified his question. The explanatory note to the pertinent provision reads as follows:

Subsection 4 provides for the application of the property tax credit to meet any liabilities of an individual for income tax, Canada Pension Plan contributions and unemployment insurance premiums. This change is required under the terms of the collection agreement between Ontario and the government of Canada for the administration of the property tax credit plan.

That is the end of the quote of the explanatory note.

Mr. Lewis: And we opposed it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the hon. member want to interject some more? I would love some more.

Mr. Lewis: I am just telling the minister that we raised specifically with the parliamentary assistant that the federal government would have the use of it for the Canada Pension Plan and Unemployment Insurance.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member is talking about income tax.

Mr. Renwick: It is income tax on the whole.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: One cannot argue that this could have slipped by unnoticed because, as the hon. member has pointed out, there was a debate on this express subject. In speaking to this provision of the bill on second reading, the hon. member for Riverdale, although opposed to certain applications of the tax credit, supported the application of the credit to meet an individual's income tax liability.

Mr. Renwick: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To quote directly from the hon. member's remarks as recorded in Hansard of April 24, 1973, on page 1258:

Now with respect to the property tax reduction, the only point in it that I could ask for some comment about is that I see now that the Treasurer is required to apply it not only to any arrears of income tax of the taxpayer before he gives consideration to actually paying it to the taxpayer, but he is also required to apply it to any arrears in which the taxpayer may be with respect to the Canada Pension Plan or with respect to any obligations which he may have under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Renwick: I was speaking only of current arrears, current arrears.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am still quoting the hon. member:

I can, perhaps, understand why the Treasurer would not refund the tax directly to the taxpayer with respect to interest charges and other penalties which he is obligated to pay under the Income Tax Act of Canada or of the Province of Ontario. That seems to me to make very good sense.

End of the quote of the hon. member's comments. In other words, the system of deductions for income tax arrears was agreed to by the NDP.

Mr. Renwick: No, they were not.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Incidentally, I should point out, Mr. Speaker, the same agreement—

Mr. Renwick: Did the minister read the rest of the debate?

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—exists between the Manitoba government and the federal government as well.

Mr. Renwick: We are not responsible for the Manitoba government.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Is the member speaking for the party now?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, if it is now the position of the New Democratic Party that the property tax credit should not be applied against arrears of income tax, I think the member for Scarborough West should at least recognize that this is a complete reversal of his party's position.

Mr. Lewis:—I am glad the minister is interpreting for us.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Scarborough West has any evidence that the property tax credit is being applied other than in accordance with the legislation passed in this House, and in respect of this particular issue—

Mr. Lewis: No. I have no evidence of it. I didn't say it was other than in accordance. I said we disagreed with the contract, that's all. The government shouldn't have entered into it.

Mr. Renwick: We said the minister was wrong.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: With the approval of the NDP he should bring it forward so that we can pursue the matter with the federal officials.

Mr. Renwick: Come off it!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If, on the other hand, as I suspect, the member has misinterpreted the cases he has referred—

Mr. Lewis: No, not at all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—he should say so and remove the doubts he has raised in the public's mind.

Mr. Renwick: Not misinterpreted at all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let's not make any mistake about it, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member was taken to task on a number of occasions—

Mr. Renwick: That doesn't help one of the poor people in this province from whom the government has taken the money.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—for using the term “forgiven income taxes,” and that’s what we’re talking about at this time.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is really a paranoid minister.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions. The hon. leader of the Opposition.

ONTARIO ENERGY POLICY

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I would like to ask a question of the Premier, asking him if he has had any communication with the government of Alberta since his statement a few days ago that he was going to enter into court action to question the validity of the decision of that province to have a two-price system for natural gas? If he has not heard directly, can he comment on statements made by the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs in Alberta regarding the Ontario threat of court action?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Premier): No, Mr. Speaker. We supplied to the Premier and the government of Alberta the material that was read here on Thursday, plus, I believe, the material that was tabled here. To my knowledge, I’ve had no communication directly from the Premier of Alberta, at least as of two or three hours ago. I wouldn’t like to interpret to members of the House, on his behalf, any statements made by one of his ministers. Our position is still maintained. If I do have some correspondence or some indication from the Premier of Alberta as to the reaction of the government there to our statements, I would be delighted to communicate it to the members of the House.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Can the Premier tell the House when it is calculated that the two-price system will go into effect unless there is some exterior delay? And what kind of a timetable does Ontario have for either entering into negotiations with the federal government or, failing that, if they refuse to have a conference for some sort of negotiation, before entering a writ in the courts?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I can’t give the Leader of the Opposition any specific timing. I understand the minister responsible in Ottawa made some observations, either on Thursday or Friday, that he was quietly working behind the scenes to resolve this. This is encouraging in that there have been discussions involving the federal government over the past number of months. I, personally, am not familiar with any new suggestions that that minister may have in mind but, certainly, if he can resolve it, we would be very pleased.

I can’t tell the hon. member at what point in time we will be moving into the courts. I can only say, as I said to the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) on Thursday, that it’s being very actively pursued at the moment. If necessary, as I said, we will test the constitutionality within the courts of this country.

I can’t tell the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, whether there will still be a conference on energy. It would be my hope that there would be, because, while the current discussions, if we can phrase it that way, between Alberta and Ontario are very important, they don’t constitute the entire question of energy supply in Canada. I, personally, think that a national conference on energy would be very constructive. Certainly, from our standpoint, we will continue to pursue it.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): A supplementary question.

Mr. MacDonald: A supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Since the Premier’s parliamentary assistant has recommended a three-price system, the third one being for export purposes, and the Prime Minister has repeated that proposal and presumably given endorsement to it, on what grounds can the Premier now challenge the two-price system which he himself is advocating?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It’s legal if Ontario says it is.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think we can still challenge it. At one point in time, we were looking for, and we still are looking for some solution without having the matter tested perhaps. Looking ahead to the future, I think that there is some merit, no matter if an interim solution is found, in determining what the rights of the provinces really are.

I say, with respect, that probably we’re discussing gas or oil today as between Alberta and Ontario, but tomorrow it could be some other form of natural resource or energy resource affecting one of our sister provinces, even affecting the Province of Ontario. I think there is some merit really, Mr. Speaker, in having, as the member for Downsview suggested, a friendly reference to the courts, although I'm not sure whether any of these are that friendly; but some determination by the courts perhaps ultimately would be desirable.

I want to make it very clear that while the parliamentary assistant did suggest the three-price system, and perhaps this is a possible solution, obviously no one else has accepted this with enthusiasm; so we are in the position where we are now indicating the directions that we intend to proceed. If there is some change in attitude on the part of the federal government and the Province of Alberta, we are not unreasonable people and we would be quite prepared to discuss it.

I'm just now offering, shall we say, a voluntary opinion to the member for York South who is very genuinely interested in this matter, that probably at some point in time, and perhaps the sooner the better, we should have a determination as to the constitutional position.

Mr. MacDonald: A supplementary question here.

Mr. Singer: By way of a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member should be able to pursue his point, and then the member for Downsview.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Would it not be accurate to state, then, that the Premier's reference to the court is not only a challenge to Alberta, but designed to establish the constitutional validity of his own position?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I thought that I made this clear, really, in my statement that as it relates to the field of energy and the resources area generally I think there is some merit in determining just what are the provincial and what are the federal rights. I think, if some determination is made of this, it would help us on other matters that could arise in the future. I think, really, we've reached the point where there is merit in doing this.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Premier could tell us if he has instructed counsel, either within or without the government, to be ready to issue a writ should the instructions be given?

If this has been done, as I presume it has, would he be prepared to make available to us the latest legal opinion which the government has, insofar as the constitutional issue is involved in this particular issue?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would only say to the member for Downsview there are people actively involved. I can't tell him just how this may occur, whether it would be a reference related just to the position of Alberta and Ontario or whether it would be an intervention in one of the pending cases. I will get as much of this information as I can for the hon. member. If we determine, of course, that it is in the public interest to disclose whatever legal opinions we may have—and I'm sure that with legal opinions, knowing them as I do, there could be varying points of view on a complicated issue such as this—but if it is in the public interest, certainly I'd be quite prepared to disclose these opinions to the House.

Mr. Singer: By way of further supplementary, would the Premier not agree that this kind of an action really isn't a cloak and dagger sort of thing, and that some of us who have an interest in constitutional matters might be very interested and perhaps helpful if we could see the kind of legal opinion that he has received and the basis on which it is proposed that he might go ahead?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

CONTROL OF MEDICARE EXPENDITURES

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A question of the Minister of Health: Since the list of must-pass legislation that has been put forward by the House leader contains no reference to bills pertaining to the Health ministry, are we to assume that the Minister of Health is going to make no statement nor is he going to offer any legislative amendments which are going to have the effect of putting some further controls on the outflow of payments from the Medicare fund? Such a statement has been indicated as expected soon by both the minister and his policy minister.

Hon. R. T. Potter (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I think there will be one that we will have to bring in this session. The only other bill that would be introduced in this session is the health disciplines bill, but there will be one to which the member is referring.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: As the minister states that before we leave for summer recess there will be a health bill, can the minister make it clear as to whether or not this bill will have the effect of controlling the outflow of funds in payment for the Medicare programme?

Hon. Mr. Potter: Mr. Speaker, this will be pointed out when I bring the legislation in.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: As a further supplementary, is the minister going to make the much-promised statement on these matters? I believe it was referred to first in February by his policy minister in London and it has been delayed over these many weeks.

Hon. Mr. Potter: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, before recess?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Soon?

Hon. Mr. Potter: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

SITUATION AT BRANTFORD JAIL

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I have a question of the Minister of Correctional Services. Can he indicate to the House the nature of the irregularities that he spoke of in his statement of Friday last associated with the granting of passes by the superintendent of the jail in Brantford? Can he indicate whether there were any occasions when five-day passes were granted back-to-back, which in fact would have the effect of granting perhaps undue freedom to people convicted by the courts? And was there any other provincial agency associated with the recommendations for these passes which the minister said were granted with some irregularity?

Hon. C. J. S. Apps (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, I can't give you an answer to the specific thing that you mentioned—whether there were two back-to-back five-day passes granted. The only thing I can do is reiterate the fact that there were irregularities in the issuing of some of the temporary absence passes. The superintendent didn't follow the procedures laid down on several occasions, and although this didn't result in a poor record as far as the temporary absence passes were concerned, the fact that he didn't follow the regulations in some of these cases was one of the reasons we felt that we should transfer him to one of the other institutions.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: Can the minister assure the House that the irregularities were only under the control of the local superintendent of the jail and in fact were in no other government office?

Hon. Mr. Apps: I assume that is the case. I'll be glad to check into it further and let the member know, but I assume that that would be the case.

The ultimate responsibility for the issuing of the passes up to five days is the responsibility of the superintendent, so ultimately he would have to assume that responsibility.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Further supplementary: Is the minister aware of a case where among the prisoners granted a special pass was a practising lawyer, who was granted a pass to defend a case in another town in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Apps: Mr. Speaker, no I wasn't aware of that particular case.

Mr. MacDonald: What one would call extra-legal activities!

Mr. Lewis: Probably under the Legal Aid Plan.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

SPEED LIMIT IN TORONTO

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications: Is he aware of the decision made by the Metropolitan Toronto council—

Mr. Singer: No, the city of Toronto!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: —the city of Toronto council to restrict speed limits on city streets to 25 miles per hour? Does he approve of that restriction; and in fact has he, under the law, the power to approve or disapprove of those restrictions?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): I hope so.

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): Mr. Speaker, first of all, there is a private bill in connection with the city of Toronto presently going through the procedures of the Legislature.

Mr. Singer: There is nothing in that about speeding!

Hon. Mr. Carton: Not about speeding, I realize that, but there are certain matters there, relative to stopping speeding, which I am concerned about—namely putting up obstacles along streets, which I do not agree with, quite candidly.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Yes; and that's an improvement.

Mr. Singer: Which the minister does not?

Hon. Mr. Carton: I do not agree with that!

Has the city of Toronto, and I'll ask this of the hon. Leader of the Opposition, have they made application to the minister?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Have they?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: They said they would.

Mr. Singer: Well, they passed their bylaw; it can't be made effective until the minister approves it.

Hon. Mr. Carton: What I'm asking is have they sent it up to the ministry for approval?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Well it wouldn't be there yet, Mr. Speaker, and I'll deal with it when it comes.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary: Does the minister approve of the thought, his approval being necessary that a municipality, the largest municipality in Ontario, should restrict its speed limits to 25 miles an hour, when the standard speed limit for all the other municipalities is 30 miles an hour?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, this is one of those situations where it will be studied, and I am not going to just give an answer in the Legislature to something that may be pending. There are many aspects of the Highway Traffic Act that would also have a bearing on this. When you bring in a bylaw—

Mr. Singer: It is very simple: either the minister is going to approve it or he is not.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Exactly; and when it comes before me, we will deal with it.

Mr. Lewis: The minister hasn't decided yet.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

TRANSPORTATION COSTS IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications:

Is he aware that on page 26 of the submission to the Premier from his parliamentary assistant, the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough), reference was made to freight rates in Ontario and sympathy was expressed in terms of the phrase, "all possible support to studies by the western provinces of freight rates," ending with this statement: "Broadly, for example, we," meaning Ontario, "should support the western Premiers' demand for complete disclosure of railroad costing in Canada."

Is his ministry prepared to make available the complete disclosure of his ministry's freight rate studies through northern Ontario at this time, and particularly the northwest, in the spirit of the parliamentary assistant's recommendation?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, the Foley report, which relates to the matter of freight rates in northern Ontario, yes, that is available; and I will make it available.

Mr. Stokes: Supplementary: In view of the Premier's statement, concurrent with his announcement in North Bay a few short weeks ago, will this ministry, in concert with the Attorney General's ministry, institute proceedings to test the legality of the present freight rate structure? When the Premier used the example of the cost being greater from Hearst to Oregon than it was from the Maritimes to Oregon, I would point out that it is greater from BC to Thunder Bay than it is from British Columbia to the Maritimes because of shipload lots through the Panama Canal. When will this ministry test the legality of the present freight rate structure as it applies to the northwest?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, the resources of the ministry, in other words the people who provide the expertise on this particular matter; yes, those resources will be available to the Attorney General on request. It would be at his instance, though, that the legality would be tested, not at the instance of my ministry.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary. Has the ministry any other material to which the parliamentary assistant was referring in connection with the ministry's assessment of freight rates?

Hon. Mr. Carton: The main part would deal with northeastern Ontario, because that is the subject of the study that has been going on and has been completed. The main part would be relating to northeastern Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: Would the minister disclose anything the ministry has on the northwest?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Yes, Mr. Speaker, anything we have in the form of a study report, yes.

Mr. Lewis: Has the ministry anything at all?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I have been dealing with the northeastern aspect and, as I said, there is a report; it will be made available, as it will if there is anything further.

EXPORT OF ONTARIO GASOLINE

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Premier, Mr. Speaker: Has the Premier called into his office the heads of the big three oil companies in Canada and in this province—Shell, Gulf and Imperial Oil—to ask them to give him a breakdown of, and justification for, such export of gasoline as is presently taking place by those companies to the United States, and in the process cautioned them that that is a policy not deemed advisable by his government?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have not called the heads of those three companies into my office to discuss this in those terms. This does not mean that at some point in time fairly soon, if necessary, I will not do so either.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: Would the Premier also call in the heads of the big three oil companies and discuss with them the question of price increases and justification for those price increases in the context of the emergency energy situation which he has latterly described?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think it is natural to assume that if—and I say if—I had a discussion with the heads of those three organizations we might touch on a number of subjects during the course of our discussions—and I say if I do have those discussions with them.

Mr. Lewis: Will William Kelly be present at all those discussions, as he has been in the past?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is suggesting that William Kelly, being very knowledgeable in the energy field, should be part of those discussions because of his knowledge, I will take that advice under consideration.

Mr. Lewis: I know the Premier wants him there! I understand that.

DIRECTOR OF PROGRAMMES ANALYSIS

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Chairman of the Management Board who is this director of programmes analysis at $25,200 to $31,500 that he is presently advertising for to fill the "immediate vacancy" in the "key position" associated with the Management Board? Why is this being done?

Mr. J. H. Jessiman (Fort William): Is the member still feeling insecure?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: What was the balance of the question?

Mr. Lewis: Why is this being done? What is this post and what is it all about?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: It is a vacancy and I can't tell the hon. gentleman who it is, because I don't know.

Mr. Lewis: What is the post all about? What is involved in this very highly paid post?

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): How can we apply for it?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I must say I haven't seen the ad and I will certainly get the information for the member.

Mr. Lewis: Wouldn't an advertisement involving a senior appointment for the Management Board secretariat at that level require the minister's approval in advance?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: It probably will before he gets the appointment, yes.

Mr. MacDonald: That is a rubber stamp I would say.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Those bright young men from Hanover please note.

PERSONNEL FOR NORTH PICKERING PROJECT

Mr. Lewis: Just getting them on the record, can I ask the Minister of Industry and Tourism just what role he envisages for the information officer who will foster effective communication between the North Pickering project and the public and to assist in a public participation programme; and the social analyst he is hiring for North Pickering to analyse feedback coupons, among other things, the one job at $15,500 and the feedback coupon analyst at $8,000 a year? What is going on in North Pickering?

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Doesn't the member know?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Consultation.

Hon. C. Bennett (Minister of Industry and Tourism): Mr. Speaker, we have indicated to this House on several occasions that with the North Pickering project we would put together a team that would co-ordinate all information going out to the people of North Pickering and area; that on the other hand we would put the information together when we had the participation by the public so that we can draw some concrete analyses.

It is fine for the opposition, Mr. Speaker, to chuckle about the situation.

Mr. Renwick: They want to propagandize going out and coming back.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: We have tried to respond effectively to the requirements and the demands of the people of that area, and these are two of the people who will assist us in doing just that.

EARL BERGER ASSOCIATES

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications: In this aspect of the new propaganda machines in the various ministries, would the minister like to comment on Earl Berger Associates and the holding of the public hearings in Brantford on the expressway? Specifically do you think that the hearings in Brantford will be of a level of farce sufficient to brand them as Berger's Bingo, as they were branded in London on the expressway hearings for Highway 402?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, firstly may I say that Dr. Berger first came to my attention through the auspices of his services at St. Catharines, and because of the fact that he is extremely well qualified and because of the fact I have had nothing but complimentary remarks from all sides about his supervision at those particular public hearings. The people who were pro-expressway and the people who are anti-expressway without exception complimented Dr. Berger on his particular performance. Because of the fact that it is not easy to find an individual of these capable qualifications, he has been asked to do the same thing at London. I understand it has gone very well at London.

Mr. Lewis: It has been described as preposterous.

Hon. Mr. Carton: By whom, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Lewis: By the journalist covering it.

Hon. Mr. Carton: In any event, Mr. Speaker, I have all kinds of correspondence—

Mr. Lewis: By the citizens who came.

Hon. Mr. Carton:—from pro and con, respecting Dr. Berger's qualifications.

Mr. Lewis: Has this public relations firm now become a wing of the government, moving from expressway centre to expressway centre, holding public hearings, supposedly to look into the justification or legitimacy for an expressway, but, as in the case of the Brantford Expressway project, putting out glossy, elaborate material giving arguments in defence of an expressway at an open public meeting?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the main point about Dr. Berger's qualifications, apart from his knowledge, was the fact that he did listen. These were the terms of reference. His term of reference is simply to listen to both sides. He makes no comment.

Mr. Lewis: He makes no comment?

Hon. Mr. Carton: He makes no comment.

A: the end of the particular public hearings, he then makes a report to the minister.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: Since it is also a part of his terms of reference that he makes no recommendation when he makes his report, but simply indicates what the citizens have said, how can the minister possibly justify the fact that it's so difficult to get a person of proper qualifications, because his qualifications, as far as I can see, are only those of a sympathetic chairman? The minister could ask anybody in this House, I suppose, to perform those functions.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, goodness! Don't do that!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: And since his qualifications are so high—

Mr. Singer: Perry Ryan, for instance.

Mrs. Campbell: Barry Lowes or Roy McMurry!

Mr. R. F. Nixon:—what is the government paying him to sit in Brantford and listen to the arguments, write them down and convey them without comment? What is he being paid?

Hon. Mr. Carton: I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that we have a great number of sympathetic chairmen on this side of the House. If there are any, and I qualify it this way, if anyone on that side of the House can recommend to me a man who has the qualifications of Dr. Berger, a man—

Mr. Lewis: Perry Ryan, Stephen Roman, Frank McGee.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I'd point out, Mr. Speaker, that at least Dr. Berger hasn't as yet been accused of any political involvement. At least he is being hired on his merits.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He is being paid to be impartial. How much is the Government paying him?

Hon. Mr. Carton: I don't know the exact figure, Mr. Speaker, but I will get his qualifications and I will get the amount that we're paying and report to the Legislature on it.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Is it possible that he could be retained at a figure of $100 a day, simply to listen to these arguments and convey them to the minister without comment, and so get the minister off the embarrassing hook of the policy statement made by his leader under other circumstances?

Mr. Stokes: A hundred dollars a day for a rapporteur.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): A tape recorder could do that.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, it is possible he is receiving $100 a day.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It might even be more that he's getting.

Hon. Mr. Carton: But I will check out the $100 a day, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does it make sense to characterize him as a nondescript reporter, when prior to the hearing this kind of material goes out containing a subsection called, Probable Consequences of No Expressway, in which is stated: "Findings of the recent transportation study confirm the general consensus of previous studies, an expressway is necessary"? Does that strike the minister as a listening, open-minded feature of public hearings?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, that's just a quote. That's not his opinion.

Mr. Lewis: It's right from the brochure, which I understand was distributed by this PR firm prior to the hearing.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Again, Mr. Speaker, the material that was distributed prior to the hearing is to make certain that all sides know exactly what is involved.

Mr. Lewis: Oh! At least one side is well represented!

Hon. Mr. Carton: As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I understand that in Brantford all the anti-expressway people were involved in the public hearing.

Mr. Lewis: They had to be, with this stuff coming at them.

Hon. Mr. Carton: So, it wasn't a case of rounding up the pro-expressway forces.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. George.

POLICE COMMUNICATIONS SYSTEMS

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that he has so many funds to do research, could he tell me what, if any, research has been done with reference to a communication system—other than the tower structures—by way of computers, as is being done in the United States? And can he tell us when the tower which Metropolitan Toronto is building will be obsolete, and has he advised them to that effect?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Solicitor General): There are a number of questions in that, Mr. Speaker. I outlined to the House—

Mr. Reid: Did he understand any?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I outlined to the House the communications direction of this government with respect to all of the police forces.

First is the technical aspect of CPIC, of providing a computer centre with all of the data, the history, which can be made available to the police forces right across the province instantaneously, referring to wanted people, vehicles and other items.

The second aspect is to make compatible all of the communications systems across the province, and the first major step in this direction was when we made additional funds available to the police force of the regional municipality of York in order to ensure that their system is compatible with the projected two-channel system available across the Province of Ontario.

Metro has, of course, developed its own system over a period of years. Nothing has been brought to my attention that the system is not compatible with what is projected or is beyond being made compatible with the provincial system.

There is nothing that has been brought to my attention that indicates the communications setup will be obsolete. They are very anxious to get what they have now—which has been on the drawing board for a number of years—into full operation, and the tower which is in the Winston Churchill Park is, as I understand, the remaining link and the key in the Metropolitan Toronto system. They are proceeding on the basis that they need that to get the current system going and that, hopefully, will be compatible to whatever is developed at the provincial level.

I don't know what the hon. member's reference or source of authority is for the remark "obsolete."

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, if I may, following that, I would just like to ask if the Solicitor General realizes that in the United States they are using their traffic computers in a far more sophisticated way? In fact, I believe in Metropolitan Toronto it isn't being used at all except as a traffic computer. Has the commission—which is doing such a great job of research and other things for the Solicitor General—ever brought to the Solicitor General's attention the sophisticated use of the computer to replace this kind of operation?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and I are talking about two different things. If she is referring to the computer system relating to traffic control, that is not within the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General; that is within the jurisdiction of the metropolitan traffic section, working, I would assume, in relationship to the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. Are we talking about the same thing, because the tower has nothing to do with the traffic going along Yonge or Bay St.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I guess I have my answer, but perhaps I could make it clear. There are traffic computers all over the North American continent—

Mr. Speaker: Is there a question? Please, a question.

Mrs. Campbell: I am trying to clarify—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a statement. A question would be in order.

Mrs. Campbell: Does the Solicitor General know that there are traffic computers all across the North American continent and that in certain areas these traffic computers are used as a means of instant communication, giving information as to incidents of crime as they occur, so that police officers may know in advance what they are going to meet when they get to the scene of a crime? Does he know that?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I am unaware of the specific matter that the hon. member is referring to. I do know this, that we are developing at the provincial, and hopefully at the municipal regional level, a communications system which will achieve the purpose of instant communication. As to having it integrated with a traffic control system, I don't know whether there would be any advantage to it in that or not.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

HYDRO RESEARCH COSTS

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development: How much money has Ontario Hydro spent on research into various forms of energy from solar power, which is nonpolluting and perpetually renewable, as alternatives to nuclear fission power, which is neither?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): I'll take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The answer is none.

Mr. Stokes: Burr leads again.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of the Environment has the answer to a question asked previously.

STELCO POLLUTION LEVELS

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Wentworth asked the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development the following question:

Is it a matter of government policy within this jurisdiction which permits the Steel Co. of Canada to emit sulphur dioxide at a rate five times greater than that emitted by Dofasco, and approximately four times greater than the regulations of the Province of Ontario; that permits them to emit particulate matter at a rate twice the level of Dofasco and approximately twice the level of the regulations of the Province of Ontario; and to emit fluorides at a rate something close to 15 times the level established by the Province of Ontario as being acceptable?

First, Mr. Speaker, Stelco and Dofasco are both on controlled programmes which I think were settled about 1970, and are on schedule, and they require them to meet the standards set out in schedule I of the regulations for sulphur oxide, particulate and fluoride emissions.

There is, of course, a vast difference in the capacity of the two plants. I think Stelco produces something in the order of five million tons a year as opposed to 2½ million tons, and the relationship of emissions is inherent in these relative sizes, and their production rates.

The emission of fluorides has been receiving a great deal of attention. In fact, Stelco changed some of its equipment and reduced its emissions by about 25 per cent, and about two months ago started a new process without the use of fluor-spar, which hopefully will eliminate entirely the emission of fluorides. The air management branch and Stelco have been following the results of this test very closely to make sure that the resulting emissions are meeting our air quality standards. The hon. member asked two supplementary questions; the first one:

May I ask the minister whether he would be prepared to make available to the municipality of the city of Hamilton the figures related to the emission of these two particular pollutants by the two companies involved, who are within the city?

My information, Mr. Speaker, is that the provincial officers in our Hamilton office have been supplying all of the information requested by the city of Hamilton officials with regard to the emission of pollutants. If this is not correct, if the hon. member will ask whoever it is who wants the information to get in touch with me I'll make sure that it is available.

The final supplementary question:

May I ask the minister if he would also check to find out why it is that at this point, some two years after the statement by the government that Stelco and Dofasco were going to be pulled into line and that there was a programme in effect that would reduce pollution emissions in the Hamilton area, we still have these kinds of situations?

I am sure, as the hon. member knows, the Hamilton industrial complex produces a very complex set of problems, very highly technical problems. The first control programmes for the steel companies were aimed at the emissions of particulate matter that were and still are the predominant air pollution problem in Hamilton. While these programmes are not due to be completed until 1975—I think the month in the schedule is August—and they require 90 per cent control of particulate emissions, to date Stelco has reduced particulate emissions by 50 per cent and Dofasco has achieved 37 per cent control of the emissions which prevailed in 1969 and 1970.

Since that time there has been continuing dialogue with the companies to reduce emissions of other pollutants, such as fluorides and sulphur dioxide, and of course some of the water pollution programmes which they have completed are also part of their programme and part of their costs. It is a normal operating procedure for the air management branch to make initial control requirements on the predominant pollutants and to follow up on secondary pollutants as time and importance of these pollutants dictates.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Deacon) is next.

Mr. Deans: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary, yes.

Mr. Deans: Thank you. Is the minister aware of whether or not the new process being used by Stelco to combat the fluoride emission contains arsenic in sufficient quantity to be dangerous to the inhabitants of the area immediately north of the Stelco area—on the other side of the bay in other words—considering the fact that they are the people who get the worst possible effects from all of the emissions from the Steel Co. of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, my information as of about three weeks ago—which was, I think, when I read the first preliminary report of the new experiment which started in March—was that there was no problem. On the other hand that's one of the reasons why we and Stelco are monitoring that new process very carefully, to see that in reducing one emission we are not producing something of equal or greater hazard. But my information is that it appears to be going well.

Mr. Deans: Okay. One final question in this regard: In the monitoring of both the new and the existing problems, will the department undertake to monitor on a more frequent basis? Again I'm informed that one of the difficulties we are having in getting an accurate recording of the amounts of emissions from the various sources, is that the time span is too long. I'm informed that, in fact, we are receiving a great deal of emissions over short periods of time, and I understand that we are getting a lot of emissions over one- and two-minute periods. This causes considerable difficulty, for when it is spread out over the entire period of time for control purposes it doesn't appear to be too bad.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, without getting into a prolonged discussion I think I could say this; that by and large the effect of emissions is looked at over a 24-hour period and the health standards are set the same way. I think it's fair to say that in certain processes there are peaks and valleys, even though production may be on a 24-hour basis.

Another problem is in having the effective equipment to do the stack sampling which is required, rather than the ground sampling, which is what interests us primarily because that is where the people are. But I'll dig into the hon. member's question a little more thoroughly with my technical staff and if I have any further information for him I'll send it to him.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York Centre.

TAKEOVER OF GREAT NORTHERN CAPITAL CORP.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations: What action is the minister proposing to take regarding complaints by minority shareholders of Great Northern Capital Corp. that recent purchase of control of Great Northern by British interests at a price of 50 per cent above prevailing market value, was carried out in contravention of the principles of takeover that the Ontario Securities Commission has laid down?

Hon. J. T. Clement (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I've had no complaints directly. I'll take the question as notice and inquire of the Securities Commission and get back to the hon. member.

Mr. Deacon: I am talking about the letter distributed to shareholders.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park is next.

GUIDELINES FOR MEDICAL PRACTICE

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health. Is the minister aware of the guidelines that were distributed today by the College of Physicians and Surgeons to specialists in various fields, psychiatry and internal medicine, and do these guidelines for practice meet the approval of the Ministry of Health?

Hon. Mr. Potter: No, Mr. Speaker, I haven't seen them yet.

Mr. Lewis: The minister wouldn't want them to check with him in advance.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview is next.

POOR QUALITY OF RESTAURANT MEALS

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Could he tell us if he is doing anything more about the apparent poor quality of meals in Ontario restaurants other than giving a lecture to the Ontario Restaurant Association? Is he, perhaps, doing something about the quality of meals at Ontario Place or in the restaurants along Highway 401 or even the restaurants in this building?

Mr. Lewis: Especially the last, it may be said.

Mr. Deans: He is taking a YWCA cooking course.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I have not yet taken up good housekeeping or the preparation of food but I must say to the members of the House that the discussion relating to the improvement of meals in the Province of Ontario is now taking place with the Ontario Restaurant Association and our ministry.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Shulman: A supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary? Yes.

Mr. Shulman: Does the minister intend to release this secret report on our restaurants which apparently is so embarrassing?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: No, I do not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Why?

Mr. Shulman: Why? Can I ask this other supplementary, Mr. Speaker? Why?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, the opinion of the minister is that it is in the interest of the public that the report be dealt with by our ministry and the associations which are affected.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Lewis: What is it, a threat to public health? Why can't the minister release it?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. If some of the members across the way were doing the food, it might be a threat to public health.

Mr. MacDonald: That is what I call a high school pitch.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: That is okay.

CLOSING OF APPLEFORD PAPERS

Mr. Deans: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Labour. Is the Ministry of Labour currently in communication with Appleford Papers in Hamilton to determine why it is closing the plant down and to ensure that all of the people who have been laid off to date are taken in within the meaning of the Act, since it is becoming apparent that the plant is closing down permanently? Has the minister determined what effect the purchase of the plant by Eddy Forest Products has had on the decisions to close down?

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is a general practice, of course, for the Ministry of Labour to work very closely with both management and labour in cases such as this. Insofar as this particular plant is concerned, I will need more information which I will pass on to the member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River.

MERCURY TASK FORCE

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development. Did the minister read the article in the Star over the weekend in regard to tourist camps and fishing on the English-Wabigoon river system? Secondly, is he satisfied that the current government policy allowing the Indians and tourists to continue eating the fish is a good one? Thirdly, did he have anything at all to do with the policy as it's laid down? In other words, did it come up before him in the policy development field?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: The answer to the last parts of the question is yes.

As to the first part of the question, no, I haven't read that particular article but I have read others recently on the question of tourism and the effect of the mercury on tourism. I don't think I can respond any further than that. The ministers involved, the Minister of Health and the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier), have both made statements on the matter and until government policy changes, I wouldn't have anything to say.

Mr. Reid: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker, if I may.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. The time has been exceeded for oral questions.

Petitions.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I would like to ask the House leader that, in view of the upcoming debates on Bills 128, 129 and 130 both the Minister and the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development be in the House so that we can get some answers on these bills.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, of course, has no point of order whatever.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF HALTON ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled An Act to establish the Regional Municipality of Halton.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I suggest, sir, that the short form of the title of the bill might be the Snow White bill.

An hon. member: It's the good fairy bill.

Mr. Deans: The Treasurer is going to need all his dwarfs to help him out.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the establishment of the regional municipality of Halton. With two significant exceptions the bill follows substantially our original proposal for a two-tier regional municipality with four local municipalities: the city of Burlington and the towns of Oakville, central Halton and north Halton. There is provision in the bill to change these names to meet local preferences.

Following extensive discussion with the residents affected, we have altered our proposal so that the village of Waterdown and the township of East Flamborough will be included in Hamilton-Wentworth, rather than in Halton. Nassageweya township will be entirely in central Halton rather than be divided.

Boundaries have been defined consistent with the right-of-way for the parkway belt west which was announced a week ago.

Mr. Speaker, we are confident that the new regional municipality of Halton will provide strong local government to meet the needs of present and future residents of this rapidly developing area of Ontario.

This bill will be taken through the legislative process by my parliamentary assistant, the member for York East (Mr. Meen).

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF OTTAWA-CARLETON ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton Act.

Motion agreed to: first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, this bill contains mainly housekeeping amendments requested by the municipality. There is a provision for the introduction of bus lanes on regional roads and changes to allow the regional council to provide its employees with some special benefits now available to employees of the city of Ottawa.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT COUNCILS ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to repeal the Regional Development Councils Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, regional development councils have been phased out of the government's programme in Ontario and this bill removes the legal authority for them.

Many of their responsibilities formerly carried out by the regional development councils with respect to encouraging public participation in the planning process are being assumed by other bodies.

For instance, the new Ontario Planning and Development Act gives the Treasurer authority to establish groups to advise the government on the entire planning process.

At the same time, the government has established five broad planning regions to replace the former 10 economic regions.

Provision for consultation is also provided in the new legislation on the Niagara Escarpment and the parkway belt and the government is committed to furthering this process of widespread public participation in all our planning activities.

PROPERTY TAX STABILIZATION GRANTS ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to establish the Property Tax Stabilization Grants.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Sargent: Another branch office.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the Property Tax Stabilization Act provides for the alleviation of the burden of municipal finance upon the real property tax base. This is to be accomplished through two new grants, the resource equalization grant and the general support grant, as contained and described in this Act and the regulations which will accompany it.

The resource equalization grant enables those municipalities with below average per capita tax bases that is, those with less than $10,000 per capita equalized assessment to provide those services which they have had to forgo because of their low base; or reduce their mill rates which are generally high due to a combination of the low base and the need for services; or both increase their service levels and reduce their mill rates. This grant will be available to all cities, towns, villages and townships where their assessment base is below the average per capita amount.

The general support grant recognizes the general financial burdens which municipalities have experienced regardless of the level of their property tax base. It provides for a payment based on a sliding scale between two and six per cent of their net general dollar levies, depending on the rate of increase in their gross revenue fund expenditure. By this device we hope to encourage municipalities to exercise some restraint in the rate of increase of their spending. This grant will be paid to all municipalities in the province, including lower and upper-tier municipalities, upper-tier in this context including the county level of local government.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Is it the government's intention to proceed with this before the summer recess or is this for our perusal at the moment?

Hon. Mr. White: I was hoping we would complete all my bills before we adjourn.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: They have already paid out money.

Mr. Singer: Will we start at 9 o'clock on Monday and finish at midnight Saturday?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

MUNICIPALITY OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves second reading of Bill 132, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, as I look at this bill, there isn't really a great deal in it.

Hon. J. White (Treasurer, and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I should not have moved second reading.

Mr. A. K. Meen (York East): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding as I am to be responsible for the bill and to be authorized to reply in the debate, that it would be desirable, if not necessary in fact, for me to move second reading of the bill in the absence of or on behalf of the Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. White: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will retract what I have said.

Mr. Singer: Let the record not show.

Mr. Meen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Meen, on behalf of Hon. Mr. White, moves second reading of Bill 132.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): But not in the absence of.

Mr. Speaker: I think that is a little unusual to say "on behalf of" when the hon. minister is present in the House. I am not sure at all that this would be a proper procedure on the introduction of second reading. I might have the benefit of the Clerk's advice on that point, because I suspect it is rather unusual. However, if the hon. members of the House will accept this situation, I will be glad myself to accept it.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): On a point of order, I think the whole matter pertaining to the parliamentary assistant should be cleared up, Mr. Speaker, and it might well be that the government could recommend that it should be referred to the standing committee on procedures.

As you know, sir, you have not permitted questions to be directed to the parliamentary assistants nor have you granted them the right to reply on behalf of the ministry, simply because the matter has not been dealt with by the appropriate committee and by a change in the rules?

For our part, we have no objection to the parliamentary assistant having the passage of the bill, but we do wish that parliamentary assistants would have a clearer responsibility in the House so that, particularly in the absence of their ministers, they could respond to questions.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, the hon. Leader of the Opposition is quite right. The standing orders do not permit questions to be directed to the parliamentary assistants. I should think that the remedy, of course, if the House desires this to be so, would be by the simple expedient of a motion to that effect, supported by the House. Or it could be done in the manner suggested by the hon. Leader of the Opposition by referring it to the committee on procedural affairs. The whole matter of the parliamentary assistants should then be clarified. However, since the House has today agreed to proceed in accordance with the desired fashion, I think we should now proceed with the second reading of Bill 132. The hon. member for York East has moved second reading of Bill 132. We may then proceed.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): He pays his salary, too.

Mr. Singer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is not a great deal of new ground carved in this Act. There are a few things that cause some comment and there are a number of different principles here. Certainly we are not going to object to giving our approval to the mall idea in Metropolitan Toronto, but it does cause me to wonder why there is always a last-minute panic when these malls are being asked for, and why we can't get some general legislation that will avoid reorganizing the business of the House.

Malls seem to be reasonably accepted, and have been quite successful, certainly in the Toronto area. Ottawa has had them; I don't know whether other municipalities have or not. But I don't think it should be beyond the ingenuity of the draftsmen who advise the minister to come up with some general legislation about the use of malls which would avoid the necessity of having a series of special bills giving this kind of approval.

I notice one section here fairly early on in the bill, adding a portion of the township of Pickering to the borough of Scarborough. That's of more than passing interest, because this emanates, I presume, from the studies that led to the presentation of the parkway. Was it the parkway? The second part of that presentation the other day? The green belt!

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): That would be the green belt.

Mr. Singer: The green belt decision.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): No, it had to be regional government.

Mr. Singer: Or, because of regional governments or because of something else. I just wonder why we can't be co-ordinated in this regard, and perhaps get some kind of an explanation of what's going to happen to that sliver of land to the north of Steeles Ave. running west from Yonge St. to the railroad tracks, which is south of the green belt, cut off from North York—the hon. member for York East should be somewhat familiar with this—and cut off from the new York regional municipality.

I know my colleague from York Centre (Mr. Deacon) has some views on what might happen to that piece of land; but since that has been physically separated by way of the green belt from the municipality to the north, and since now to some extent the government is adjusting the boundaries of Metropolitan Toronto, would it not make more sense for the government to deal with that at the time that it is changing the boundaries of Metro? It's the first time they have been changed since Metro has in fact, been created.

I am interested in the section dealing with the request of the Metropolitan council to pay legal costs of a certain group that was involved in an inquiry. Now, this is an unusual kind of a precedent, Mr. Speaker. I don't know if I have got the benefit of having the minister listen to me or not, or the parliamentary assistant from York East; is he with me, the parliamentary assistant?

Mr. Meen: I am listening.

Mr. Singer: Yes. I say that the provision which would allow the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto to pay the legal costs of a certain group that was involved in an inquiry conducted not too long ago by His Honour, Judge Vannini, is an unusual kind of a provision. One would wonder whether this kind of a request should be dealt with just because it was made, or whether or not there should be some specific guidelines laid down in the legislation.

There were other groups involved in this inquiry; whether or not they incurred any costs I am not aware. As to whether or not the payment of costs should be governed only by a request, perhaps they should relate to a recommendation made by a judge at a public inquiry. Or perhaps it's a risk that individuals and groups run in our community when they have to incur costs, the same as being charged with an offence under the Criminal Code and later being found to be not guilty.

There is no compensation system for those people who are found to be not guilty. So I am a little concerned about the kind of precedent that is about to be established here. I ask the parliamentary assistant specifically what particular consideration did the government give to this request. Is he prepared to honour it merely because it was made, or does he have in mind certain guidelines that would apply?

I'm not singling this out because of either the incident, the occasion or the group that is involved, but I am concerned about the kind of precedent the government is establishing. It has been suggested in this House on several occasions by a number of people, including myself, that perhaps we could work out some kind of a system for compensation for those who appear before our courts and the charges against them are not proven and they are discharged.

Some of those expenses can be very high. Other than that, Mr. Speaker, I don't think there's very much in the bill. Those are a few points that occur to me quickly, and if the parliamentary assistant can answer them reasonably satisfactorily then we might be prepared to support the bill.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, there's a couple of points I want to make about this. I think this bill is inconsistent with government's policy and I think the government should recognize that if it intended to follow its own policy, it's making a very serious mistake in the bill.

The area of the bill that I refer to is the area which intends to vary the boundaries of Pickering and Scarborough townships; and it puts a few hundred people and a few thousand acres from Pickering into the corporation of the Borough of Scarborough.

However, in so doing the government has ignored the whole intent of what apparently is its policy right now, which is to create an extension of Metropolitan Toronto in North Pickering just outside the Metro boundaries and not very far beyond this particular annexation.

If the government intended to follow through with that extension of Metro Toronto in an easterly direction, with the creation of a new commuter area in that vicinity, then it should have annexed North Pickering into Metro Toronto as well.

Now frankly, Mr. Speaker, we would disagree with the creation of a new bedroom suburb of 250,000 just outside of Metro's boundaries. We would disagree with its being put into Metro's boundaries; and I think this Legislature should be aware of the inconsistencies which exist in the government policy as a result of this bill.

The situation that will be created as a result of failing to follow what is apparently government policy will be that there will be a part of Metro which just doesn't happen to come under the political jurisdiction of the Metro council.

We think the government possibly ought to at least be consistent; or better still in fact, it should very seriously reconsider its plans for the new town of Cedarwood, which violates the Toronto-centred region plan—and which would certainly violate the whole principle under which Metro was created and under which growth was to be directed well towards the east of Metro Toronto and not just on its fringes.

The other point I wanted to raise, Mr. Speaker, is to question the government as to why it is that after 20 years of Metropolitan government in Toronto, this Legislature should be called on to be an extension of Metropolitan council; because that is literally what we are being asked to do in this particular bill insofar as it deals with pedestrian malls.

We are being asked to regulate the blocking off of traffic. The area is defined, the number of feet is defined, the specific powers are defined. It's ridiculous, Mr. Speaker; it's just ridiculous!

The Metropolitan council, which governs two million people, which has had 20 years to grow up, which has reached the age of majority that exists in the province today, which certainly has officials who are as competent as those of the province—I won't comment on the competence of the politicians who run Metro; possibly they are of equal competence with the politicians who run this particular government.

Nonetheless, there is no reason why they should not have the powers to decide whether and when to block off a particular street, and for what reason, without having to run to the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Carton), or without having to run to this particular assembly. And so for that matter should the city of Ottawa and the city of Brantford and the city of Windsor, and any other municipal jurisdiction that wishes to have those powers to block off a road to create a mall; to adapt their environment, in other words, to the wishes of the people who live in that particular community. But it's not to be as far as the province is concerned.

On the one hand, the Treasurer and Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs mouths pious slogans about the need for municipal economy. On the other hand, he continues to leave on the statute books legislation that requires this Legislature to act like an extension of the Metropolitan Toronto council. Mr. Speaker, we believe there should be general legislation in this particular regard and that it should not have ever again to come before this Legislature in this particular form.

I might say that in exercising the powers of a municipal council, I think we are playing very fast and loose both with the Ontario Human Rights Code and with the principles of freedom of speech, which I had thought this government on occasion had endorsed. A portion of the section that refers to the mall allows the Metropolitan council, and presumably its officials, to prohibit, regulate or to license the distribution of literature or the sale of literature, pamphlets and other published material on the mall that they propose to create.

The regulation of beer gardens and the regulation of restaurants and the regulation of hawkers and the regulation of food sales and the limitation of noise through public address systems are all perfectly acceptable powers to be given to the municipal authorities. I do very seriously question, whether in this legislation or in general legislation, the powers to stop the freedom of speech, to prevent people from selling newspapers, to prevent people from distributing pamphlets, should be given to any municipal council.

There are federal laws in this country that regulate obscenity; those laws are effective on the city of Toronto mall and on Yonge St. just as they are effective on the Sparks St. mall in Ottawa or anywhere else in this province. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that those powers are sufficient powers; that no further powers should be given. If the municipality is concerned about business practices along the mall and about people touting their wares with advertising, there are other means that it can use in order to regulate that particular nuisance. But the power of regulation by prohibition of printed material, whatever the lasting merit or lasting value of it may be judged to be, is just plain wrong. I would suggest to the ministry, Mr. Speaker, that this particular section should be withdrawn from the bill and that the rest of the bill should go forward without the violation of freedom of speech which is embodied in section 6(d).

Mr. Speaker: Do any other hon. members wish to address themselves to this bill? If not, the hon. parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Mean: Mr. Speaker, the members opposite have raised a number of very interesting points. I'll endeavour to deal with them, if I can, taking each point together with the comment from the two members who have spoken in connection with the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I think both members have addressed themselves to the matter of the authority for the mall. The government and this ministry have considered extending this authority to Metro Toronto on a permanent basis, but Metro, at least for the time being, have indicated to us they do not wish this on a permanent basis.

Personally, I have some misgivings about the extension of this authority on a permanent basis, inasmuch as under present legislation municipalities may close off a street and create a mall, provided they recognize that they are responsible and liable in damages to shopkeepers and others who are deprived of access and egress to and from their properties, with demonstrable loss. This is one of the elements contained in this kind of special legislation, which in every case when Metro has come to us—I think this is the third year running—they have sought protection against any such liability that could arise.

Notwithstanding that, we recognize that it has worked well in the past. The shopkeepers have, I think, virtually unanimously supported this application by Metro. They have come forward, and we have been prepared to give them this legislation. As I indicated, we have proffered them this year a sort of permanent authority to do this. It was declined, you might say, with thanks, Ald. Archer of the city of Toronto indicating that the city was still experimenting with various ingredients in the creation of this mall and that until it was satisfied as to all facets of it, they didn't want it spelled out in permanent legislation.

The member for Downsview inquired about Pickering and that small section of Pickering which has been added to or, by this bill will be added to Scarborough. This Rouge area, as I understand it at any rate, is added to Scarborough as a result of the east of Metro regional government proposal, as we call it, which I rather expect will be introduced to the House in the not very distant future. It seems logical to add it; it is not very large. It has some 8,600 acres and, I think, about 4,000 people in that section.

That, in our opinion, is not a significant departure from the general principle enunciated by the government that we do not intend to enlarge Metropolitan Toronto by any significant amount. That is rather an insignificant thing—a kind of straightening of the boundaries—and I think the member for Downsview would agree that that is about what it constitutes.

He raises the question of the little strip on the north side of Metropolitan Toronto running, west I believe he said, from Yonge St. I don't know much about that particular area. I suppose in due course, if the government gets around to looking at some of these areas which are more readily serviced from within one region than from within another, it might take a look at it, but I have no knowledge at the moment of any anticipated alteration in the north boundary of Metro.

I think the member for Downsview also referred to section 8 of the bill, the section dealing with the Ukrainian-Canadian committee. I agree with the hon. member that this is a unique sort of thing; it might well be taken as some sort of precedent. It came about, as hon. members will recall Mr. Speaker, last fall when we introduced a similar sort of amendment to the Metro Act to authorize Metropolitan council to compensate the police who were involved in that investigation, for their legal expenses.

At that time the Ukrainian committee came to us asking that it be treated in a like manner. Of course, we recognized that that is inclined to create a sort of precedent but suggested to the committee that if it made a similar kind of approach to Metropolitan council itself and if Metro council, by resolution, requested us to make an amendment to the Act authorizing them to make such payments, we would take it under advisement. This is precisely what has happened. We have been requested by Metropolitan council to give them the authority to compensate in some fashion or other the Ukrainian-Canadian committee for those expenses.

Frankly, I think the government feels that we ought to take a look some day soon at the provisions of the Public Inquiries Act, as indicated by the hon. member for Downsview. There is no authority in that Act for a judge to indicate that costs ought to be allowed to participating parties. I think we should take a look at the Public Inquiries Act; that would be an appropriate place to do it, not here in this legislation. Obviously, we are doing it specifically for this group which requested it from Metro council and Metro council, in its wisdom, has felt that it was desirable to help the committee out in some fashion.

Mr. Speaker, I think that covers the various points raised by hon. members opposite. I think there are other sections in the bill which they have not touched on and I think we are all, therefore, in agreement that they should pass.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is for second reading of Bill 132.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, would the parliamentary assistant permit one question?

Mr. Speaker: Would you permit one question?

Mr. Meen: Yes, I may have missed one question from the hon. member.

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, the assistant did not comment on the subsection which will allow the prohibition of literature on the mall. I'd like to know if he would agree to withdraw that section from the bill?

Mr. Meen: No, we can't agree to withdraw it, Mr. Speaker. I apologize; I had intended to touch on that.

That is basic authority in the Municipal Act. All we are seeking to do is to give Metropolitan Toronto, in the area of Yonge St. which is a Metropolitan street, the same authority to license hawking and distribution of literature and other things of that sort in the same way as the municipalities themselves may do so.

Now, if it is appropriate to withdraw it, it is not appropriate to withdraw it here. It would be appropriate to withdraw it from the Municipal Act and that is a different matter. Therefore, I certainly could not countenance removal of the provision from the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Amendment Act presently before the House.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall this bill be ordered for third reading?

Agreed to.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading upon motion.

Bill 132, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Clerk of the House: The fifth order, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 128, An Act to provide for Planning and Development in Ontario.

ONTARIO PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT ACT (continued)

Mr. Speaker: Had the minister (Mr. White) completed his remarks?

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Yes he had; and I had moved the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I recall. The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: If I may pick up the remarks that I had just embarked upon the other evening. I was suggesting to you, Mr. Speaker, that there are many things in this bill we just believe that we cannot, in fact, support. What the government is doing in this bill, and in several other bills that the House leader announced on Friday are going to be called for second reading, is replacing the rule of law by the rule of nameless and faceless civil servants.

What the government is saying is that planning henceforth will be done—and it asks for power in such wide and sweeping terms that one has to be frightened—what the government is saying is that we, the government, are going to take upon ourselves the right to establish development and to control zoning in the Province of Ontario without anything more than a sort of ritual sun dance that might take place from time to time when objectors can come forward and express their opinions before a hearing officer who has no responsibility other than to record carefully what those objections are. He then submits a report to the minister, or to the body responsible, and then the decision which was put forward is either confirmed or rejected.

What really is happening, Mr. Speaker, is that Caesar is being asked to sit in judgement on Caesar. The plan appears to be a steal from the expropriation Acts, ours and the federal one; which sounded at first glance like a very good idea. The so-called hearings of necessity—and really that's what it is, that's how we referred to it in the Expropriations Act—have become nothing more than another time-wasting device which never, in fact, appears to change anything.

Perhaps I could draw a parallel, Mr. Speaker, to the hearings of necessity which received some substantial publicity in relation to the new airport at Pickering. The federal government appointed Mr. Swackhamer, a very able lawyer, to sit and listen to objections in relation to a decision that government had made about locating a new Toronto airport in the Pickering area. Mr. Swackhamer, pleasant man that he is and capable man that he is, listened very carefully, and the odd time asked a question to elaborate on the type of objections that were being put forward to him.

Great and elaborate briefs were presented. Prominent counsel were retained. John Robinette, for one, I think, made presentations running for several days. Many individuals who felt that they were aggrieved by this decision came and made very interesting representations against the decision. Even such inexperienced people as myself, Mr. Speaker, went before Mr. Swackhamer and made a presentation on behalf of certain people whom were representing.

All that resulted in was a great large volume which I wrote for and I now have in my closet—it runs about that thick—where there is a summary of all of the representations that were made, and then a recommendation from Mr. Swackhamer to the government. Really, after all those days of hearing and after all those many thousands of dollars of expense, the decision went back to where it had started. It went back to the federal minister who had the responsibility of making the decision, and he was really not convinced at all by anything that Mr. Swackhamer had heard, or anything that Mr. Swackhamer had reported to him.

As I say, when we first came to this kind of an idea, when we discussed our own Expropriations Act, I was among those who thought there was some kind of merit in it; and I advocated it. But I did suggest—and I never could bring this government to accept it; and the federal government picked it up from our legislation—that if these hearings of necessity were going to in fact have any validity, they had to go to someone other than the minister who had made the original decision.

But that wasn't the way it worked. That isn't the way this Act is set up, nor is the next Act that we are going to discuss, perhaps later today, Bill 129. What do we get? When the government, or the bodies that are going to succeed it, have come to the conclusion that a particular plan of development is going to be established anywhere in Ontario—and I will come back to section 2 in a moment—then the government by order establishes this area and makes up its mind as to what kind of development is in fact going to take place.

If there are people who want to protest, the best they can do is eventually come before a hearing officer. It will help them little, in my opinion in any event. If they hire the best counsel available in Ontario, the best planners available to advise their counsel, they can make representations, I would suspect, until they are blue in the face to this hearing officer. He, in due course, will have the duty—and I am sure he will carry it out—of recording what they have said, putting it back to the people who made the original decision; and the likelihood of their changing their minds is very, very, very remote.

So what have we got, Mr. Speaker? We are now about to initiate a system of planning in the Province of Ontario whereby the minister may, by order, establish as a development planning area any area of land in Ontario defined in the order.

Now, the other night I was suggesting to the minister that it isn't that I don't trust him. It is that I don't trust his successor, whoever that might be. What this statute in fact allows is that the minister may come into any area in the province of Ontario—he may come in to Metropolitan Toronto and say: "End of your development plan. We have got a new one. This is it and we will replace whatever you have."

They can come into the city of Toronto, or the city of London, or Windsor, or what have you. Suddenly there is a new development plan designated by the minister and then a hearing procedure is set up.

The hearing procedure is, in fact, very interesting as well, Mr. Speaker. The hearing procedure does not involve any justification by the ministry or by the boards that will succeed them. It goes from the ministry to—there is a scheme in here—and without specifically spelling it out it goes down the line after a while.

There is no provision for the justification of the original planning. At no point does this Act envisage that the original plan of development will ever be argued for. There is no machinery in here that forces the minister or his later delegates to say this is a good plan "because": Because they need more factories over there, or need more single family residences over here, or this would be a good place to have a park, or what have you. There is no machinery set out in this statute whereby the ministry has to justify itself at a public hearing.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): They could do it in the Legislature.

Mr. Singer: Well, they may have to do it in the Legislature; but the hon. member for Eglinton has been here long enough to recognize that when we are going to get into details of the particular plan of development, we would have to be here for many, many hours to take one of them. I don't know what is envisaged. Presumably we are going to go into the Haldimand-Norfolk area—let's try that one as a start—and deal with several thousand acres of land; several thousand acres of land with industrial designations and residential designations and park designations and road designations, and so on.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Townships with official plans already.

Mr. Singer: I just don't believe that we are going to be able to debate that, detail by detail in this Legislature, without exasperating the feelings of all of the members; probably being out of order, because there is no specific provision here that we will be able to debate any one of these things.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, to this point the member for Eglinton is correct, we can get up and say to the Treasurer (Mr. White): "Why did you do such-and-such terrible planning in Norfolk?" And he will say: "Well, because we thought it was right and we don't think it's terrible." And that's about the end of the debate, really.

Perhaps you can get at him in the question period, but there is no provision here that's going to say, why have you—as you will do presumably in Norfolk-Haldimand—why have you moved the road from here to over there; and why should the park be at the north instead of the south end? We are not going to be able to get into that kind of a discussion and there is not going to be that kind of justification that the people who make the planning decisions will have to put forward in order that those planning decisions are acceptable.

So really, Mr. Speaker, what we get to is that the decisions are going to be made by nameless and faceless civil servants. We will never really be able to point our finger at X—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey Bruce): Right.

Mr. Singer: —and say: "He's the man who did it. Can we go and argue with him? Can we hear what his justification is?"

Mr. Sargent: That's the key.

Mr. Singer: The Treasurer is abandoning the controls that existed before, where there was an appeal in the way of a public hearing to the Municipal Board. When these matters were argued before the Municipal Board under the previous chairman—and I would imagine under this one; certainly that's the scheme that set up the Municipal Board—there had to be some justification for the planning proposals put forward by the applicant; and if the opponents didn't like it then their arguments could be heard. At least there was a body there that would listen in detail to this kind of an argument, weigh the pros and cons and come forward with a decision.

What this bill proposes, Mr. Speaker, is that these rights are being taken away. They are being taken away in such broad general terms that they have to be frightening. The minister may by order establish a development planning area—any area of land in Ontario is defined in the order. Absolute power—no appeals; no argument; no justification of the merits.

As my colleague from Brant has said, if the government goes into the Norfolk-Haldimand area where official plans already exist, it can wipe those out with a stroke of its pen. The local people, the local planners, the local elected councils, have no other recourse than to go before a hearing officer and say: "This is terrible."

There is going to be nobody there; there is no machinery that I can read in this statute which indicates that those people who are responsible for bringing in the new plans have to come and say: "This is good because—." All they have to do is sit and listen.

I think that's wrong. I think that's terribly wrong, Mr. Speaker. I think what the government is now doing is taking onto itself absolute power insofar as land use and zoning is concerned, without any attention being paid to and without any rights being left with the local people in any way whatsoever.

It's for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that we have come to the conclusion that we cannot support this bill. We think this bill is a terrible invasion of the rights of the people in Ontario to have something to say about the use to which land they own or land with which they are concerned is going to be put.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): They are walking out on him now.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The member for Ottawa Centre can see what his speech brings about when he begins.

Mr. Singer: I am not saying, Mr. Speaker, that eventual land use determination has to be in accordance with the rights of every individual. I would agree, Mr. Speaker, that the end criterion has to be the greater good for the greater number, but this surely has to be done in a democratic way. And when this government gives us a series of bills—such as this one, Bill 128, and 129 and 130—all of which carry through, sometimes in identical wording, this terrible invasion of individual rights, all of which take away from individuals and from elected municipal bodies the rights to ask for justification, the rights to properly challenge what's going to go on in a civil service atmosphere—going to go on in a place and be done by people we can't find, whom we can't identify, whose reasoning we can never get at—then I say, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Ontario have got to rise in righteous anger and defeat this kind of a proposal.

I don't know what is going to happen here in the Legislature, and I'm sure our words in debate are not going to change this minister's mind.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Oh, I wouldn't say that.

Mr. Singer: I would hope they might. He's a very open-minded minister. Certainly he listens on occasion to the things we have put forward. I have yet to see—well, no, I won't say I have yet to see him; he did during the budget make a substantial about-face.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: "One of his finest hours," the St. Catharines Standard said

Mr. Singer: Maybe he'll do the same again here. But I would urge upon him second thoughts and third thoughts and fourth thoughts on the contents of these bills. I would urge upon him a realization of what really the government of Ontario is doing.

I don't believe that all the wisdom lies in the front benches of that government, no matter who is occupying them. Whether it is the present occupants for today or it will be us tomorrow, I don't think that all of the wisdom extant in Ontario will reside in the occupants of those benches.

I don't believe we should abandon systems of justification and should give the fiat to control land use absolutely to civil servants, and that is in fact what is being done.

You look, Mr. Speaker, for instance at section 6: "A development plan may contain," and it goes through six headings under subsection (a) and then it ends up with: "Such other matters as are, in the opinion of the minister, advisable." In case there was any doubt that the minister is going to be absolute they put in subclause (vii) of part (a) of section 6 so that if the first six criteria are not sufficient anything else can be put in that the minister deems advisable.

And then, the development plan may contain—and this goes into 6(d); again there's the general grandfather clause—"such policies as are, in the opinion of the minister, advisable for the implementation of the plan." It's a different kind of method of control.

By so doing, by putting in those two grandfather-type subclauses to which I've just referred, the ministry will have successfully removed any consideration of the contents of a plan, even from the courts—because in the criteria you lay out, as specific as the earlier ones might be, you've cut the ground away by putting in those two general clauses at the end of subsection (a) and subsection (d) of section 6.

So what you are saying confirms my earlier argument. What the government says is the minister can do no wrong insofar as land use is concerned and his word is final and that is the be-all and that is the end-all.

Mr. Speaker, in section 7 I've marked a number of subclauses there and also in section 8 and section 9. This is a debate in principle and I'm not going to deal with those at length. We'll deal with those if this bill has to go to committee.

I'm interested and can't refrain from commenting on subsection (3) of 9, which allows the minister not even to have this kind of a hearing before a hearing officer if he considers a frivolous application has been made. I suppose frivolity is a very subjective judgement and if in the mind of the minister something is frivolous, that apparently again is the be-all and the end-all.

The minister reserves unto himself all of the tests that people might want to be able to resort to insofar as challenging the wisdom of government. I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that the minister is going to suggest to us there is no better control than legislative control.

That's a point that I've sometimes made and it's a point that I don't disagree with, but I don't think legislative control means absolute dictatorship. That's what I'm suggesting this government is going to be able to do if it is given the authority to go ahead with the provisions of this bill.

Certainly legislative control is important, and certainly it is important, Mr. Speaker, that we are able to stand in our place from time to time and question the actions of the Treasurer of Ontario in any of his official governmental capacities, in relation to any of his actions. But I say to you, as I was suggesting to the member for Eglinton, that kind of a safeguard is not sufficient to be able to question what might happen reasonably soon in Haldimand-Norfolk.

Mr. Reilly: Where would the hon. member take it?

Mr. Singer: Well, I would think the government would take this back to the drawing board. I would think that it would begin to wonder. There should be no one who would wonder more than the hon. member for Eglinton on the taking away of an individual's right. How many times have I heard him say: "We've got to protect the little man, the little businessman, the ordinary citizen who has no remedies"?

Wasn't his last speech in this House about businessmen, minority shareholders? We got into a bit of a row on that in the select committee this morning. I can understand the point made by the member for Eglinton. He believes that the small shareholder, the minority shareholder, should have more protection than other people believe.

He made the argument. His opinion and mine on that particular point were at variance, but that's the kind of point the hon. member for Eglinton should well be able to understand. I have listened to him over many years, and this is the point he continues to make.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that before this argument is over the hon. member for Eglinton will join with us in condemning the provisions of this bill. Certainly, the philosophies expressed in the bill are the antithesis of all the thinking the hon. member for Eglinton has expressed since he has come into this House.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): That's a commendation for the bill.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I could continue at some length along the same theme, picking out phrases from the statute and making additional arguments about the importance of the rule of law. I am not going to use all of my ammunition at this time. There are going to be two other bills which are the same in principle and I will use some other facts and figures which I have in relation to them.

Suffice it to say, for my contribution to this debate, Mr. Speaker, we find this bill abhorrent. We find this bill a complete derogation of the true ideas of democracy which we believed, up to this point in time, applied in the Province of Ontario. We don't believe that any ministry should be entitled to the powers which are asked for in this bill and we oppose it accordingly.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I watch with interest in this House and I see young people from various schools around the province coming in to see how our legislative process works. For their benefit, as well as for members of this House, I think they might be interested in what is happening here today.

In 1946, this province had a Planning Act which governed municipal planning and which has governed it for a period of getting on for 30 years. The minister decided some time ago, in his wisdom, that more powers were needed as far as the provincial powers of planning were concerned and, therefore, he decided that he would introduce a new Act. This Act, therefore, is the most fundamental reform of planning in the province in something like a quarter of a century.

The young people who have come here probably were told by their civics teacher or one of their other teachers about the importance of Parliament and about the way in which a Legislature soberly deliberates about policy, gives it careful consideration, ventilates the various objections and opinions which various people have and has the opportunity for consulting with individuals and interest groups within the society that is governed by that particular Legislature.

However, in this particular case, the legislation, which represents a pretty fundamental change, was introduced to this House one week ago today. It was published in the press for those who were interested less than a week ago today. Debate on it began in this Legislature only two days after the bill had been published and information about it was generally available to the people of the Province of Ontario.

This suggests, Mr. Speaker, that the minister, as well as his government, pretty seriously misunderstand the way in which the parliamentary process ought to work. That certainly is not the way in which my friends up in the gallery were taught that this place works. Neither the minister nor his government understands the way in which the process of planning in this province, or in any democratic province, ought to work. They misunderstand it completely and that, Mr. Speaker, is why we feel we cannot support the bill, and in fact must oppose it.

The minister has substituted manipulation for genuine consultation. He has disguised a centralized process of preparation of plans by cloaking it in certain machinery which is designed to fool and dupe the public. Essentially what he is proposing in this particular bill is no different from what the government has right now. The bill, Mr. Speaker, is a sham. The minister is a prestidigitator, he is a sorcerer who is trying to fool the people and trying to make them believe that they will be consulted and will be involved. It is—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: It's not quite the same as a prevaricator, but it comes pretty close.

Mr. Cassidy: That's true, yes. It is something the government has done on a number of occasions and I shall have some examples during the course of the speech.

But I think that the thing to look at first is what the minister himself has had to say, then measure up the words that he has given to groups—such as the trilevel conference in Peterborough the other week; the Community Planning Association of Ontario, where I believe he was this morning; and to this Legislature in that pathetic eight-minute introduction of this bill which we had on Thursday evening.

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): On a point of order!

I would have been glad to speak longer if all of the opposition members the other night hadn't been heckling continuously to the extent that I think not a single word I said was heard. I will have more to say at the end of this debate, and by the time I'm finished I have no doubt the hon. member will have heard enough.

Mr. Lawlor: I heard a great deal.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, why is it that neither in this House or outside the House the minister has yet to say exactly how he intends to apply this Act? Whether in fact he intends to use every power available under this Act in order to supersede municipal planning and zoning right through the province; or whether in fact the Act is simply something that he has put into the hopper in order to implement the government's presumed commitment to land use planning of the Throne Speech and whether he in fact will not use it at all or to any significant extent.

Let's just look at some of the comments of the minister in his speech; and I did hear every word as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, virtually every word—I certainly read every word the minister had in that rather lame introduction of his bill. Surely the minister can give us more than that; more than eight minutes. He said:

I cannot imagine a minister now or later abusing these powers because of the offsetting restraint of the municipalities involved.

The facts of the bill, Mr. Speaker, are that the offsetting powers of the municipalities are severely limited and in many cases may not apply at all; as we shall see in a few minutes. The minister also said:

The government had concluded that in certain circumstances where compelling reasons exist, the province itself must take a broader general approach to planning and development in a way that present legislation does not permit.

At no time has he spelled out what those certain circumstances may be. At no time has he spelled out what are the compelling reasons that would come in, in order to convince him or the government to introduce portions of this law. At no time has he spelled out an overall rationale—which I will spell out as far as that part is concerned—an overall rationale for bringing in an Act like this.

That is one of the reasons why we are so uneasy about the government's intentions. We are entitled to know just what those compelling reasons are. We are entitled to get them before the second reading debate, Mr. Speaker, and not at the very end when the minister feels that he has heard enough from this side and then decide to give us the goods and tell us what we should have been debating during the course of the second reading. What are the guidelines, in other words.

The minister, in his introduction, rejected guidelines. He said, "We can't do them." He said, "We can't lay down in the bill things like setbacks and lot sizes and things like that."

Well, of course not, and nobody expects him to. Those were not the guidelines that anybody expected the minister to lay down when he was introducing this legislation.

What we were concerned about particularly was the process by which these provincial planning powers would be used. And it is that process, Mr. Speaker, which has got us most seriously concerned in the course of the bill.

In the background paper the minister released at Peterborough, he made a number of comments which we found interesting. Among other things, he referred to regional planning as a policy strategy embodying social, economic and cultural as well as physical plan elements. Those words are reflected in this particular Act, but if this Act is to be the definitive instrument for regional planning in Ontario, we have yet to hear that from the minister.

We are told only that it will be used in the parkway belt west of Metro. We have been told a number of areas where it will not be used and we have had no more information from the minister on which to work.

The minister states that the planning exercises which are under way as part of his regional plan in eastern and southwestern Ontario will result in a set of broad policies designed with the needs and wishes of the people concerned in mind. Yet if this Act is the means by which those policies are to be prepared, there is no means by which the needs and the wishes of the people concerned can be injected into the provincial plans. There is certainly no guarantee that their needs and wishes will be injected.

The minister stated that he intended that the North Pickering community would be oriented to the needs, desires, and aspirations of people. Look at the words, Mr. Speaker, "the needs, desires and aspirations of the people." But when the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Lawrence) was asked why North Pickering or Cedarwood would not be covered under the Ontario Planning and Development Act, he said it would be because the land will be publicly owned.

Surely there will still be people who are living on that land; surely those people are also going to have needs, aspirations and desires and surely they, too, should be guaranteed some kind of input, even the inadequate kind of hearing process which is here under this particular bill.

The minister said in his background paper that provincial planning will be a clear, open, public process. As far as the bill went that he then proceeded to introduce, Mr. Speaker, the minister's words were hypocrisy. They simply were not true. There was no guarantee of a clear, open or public process in this particular bill. In fact it can continue to be, just as covert a process as has existed before, although it may be accompanied by the occasional efforts to bring the public in to the point where they believe that they were consulted as the government goes ahead with its particular intention.

Mr. Speaker, the government has been told again and again and again that the people of the province want to be involved in the planning process. They want to be involved in a very meaningful way. This has come not from radical academic intellectuals and from citizen activists and people like that. This has come from some fairly august and authoritative sources. The Committee on Government Productivity, for example, a committee whose advice the government has been very anxious and eager to heed on many occasions, stated in report No. 8 that:

In the preparation of each regional or urban plan, a dialogue between the government and the public must take place. The development of a plan is progressive, being based upon the views of people living in the area, but taking into account also their responses to proposals developed to reflect vital issues. Throughout the dialogue, the government must maintain a reasonably open mind on the degree of development in a region and the direction it should take.

That's the Committee on Government Productivity.

The Ontario Economic Council, also made up of government appointees and also a prestigious and hardly radical body, had equally a very strong advocacy of involvement of citizens in the planning process. The government didn't even see fit to wait until the council, which it funds to the tune of several hundred thousand dollars a year, could publish its report on planning before coming ahead with the Planning and Development Act.

In a review which was published in the Ontario Planning newsletter, they state very clearly that citizen involvement in planning decisions is strongly advocated, and that it should not simply be in the form of opposition to a plan which is already proposed, which is the form that citizen involvement has taken in the past. We should not be, they say, in the position where irate citizens are storming the doors of the town hall, the city hall, or for that matter the Legislature. Citizens ought to be in at the beginning. They have to be involved in the process. They should not simply be let in at the end in order to have to argue and fight every inch of the way against proposals which they find unpalatable because they have not been involved.

Perhaps a less august body, but one that certainly stemmed from this Legislature and contained a majority of government members, was the select committee on the Ontario Municipal Board. If the minister has examined that, he will know that the entire thrust of the report was to decentralize decision-making; to get away from the need for a provincial body, in this case the Ontario Municipal Board, to be involved in local or regional planning decisions. This was to ensure that every citizen had the right to be involved, had the right to be notified, had the right to have his say during the course of planning proposals rather than after those planning proposals had been ratified by local council and were just simply one or two by-law readings away from ratification and awaiting the approval of the Ontario Municipal Board.

There are principles now in Ontario law as a result of the Brampton decision—our legal friends would know more about that than I—which basically require that during the course of hearings on a planning application at the local level citizens have the right to be notified.

If that hasn't taken place, if citizens have been excluded from the process until the council come out of its in-camera meeting to ratify a bylaw at a quarter to midnight on a dark Saturday evening, if citizens are excluded until that point, the bylaw will not stand up in the courts because the principles of natural justice have not been followed. That's what the courts are saying. But the minister, alas, doesn't understand what's been happening: he's taken an entirely different route.

Our fundamental objections are chiefly directed to the first part of the bill because that is where the minister talks about the planning process as he understands it. However, that is not the way the people who have been advising him, and this Legislature, understand it. That is not the way current thought on planning understands it. That is not the way we understand it. And we do not think that the people of Ontario will accept the arbitrary kind of preparation of plans that the minister proposes.

If you look at the planning process, Mr. Speaker, you start out by deciding what kind of goals you want to have. If it's a regional plan then what kind of goals do you have for your region? Are they industrial goals, population goals, style of life goals, environmental goals, recreational goals, transportation goals? There are a number of goals.

And these things are not to be drawn up only by the technocrats, the bureaucrats and the planners. Right there, at the very first step in the planning process, the public has got the equipment to be involved. It knows the kind of society, the kind of area, the kind of region that it wants. There should, and can be, interplay among various members of the public and between the public and the planners in the process of full setting. But that is not provided for in this Act.

Next, the planners come in. They complete a survey of resources. They decide what's there and what are the potentials of the area. That's something that the planners do best and it's rather more difficult for citizens to do. But once you've decided what you have right now, you've got to make some forecast about what you're going to have. Those forecasts, as anybody who has been in the planning game knows, are very impressionistic and are in an area where the general public has got a great deal to contribute.

I've only to recall the Spadina Expressway decision and the plethora of forecasting that went on there, about what would happen to the city depending on certain assumptions about the way in which the city developed. If it was to be an automobile-oriented city, then possibly the expressway was needed. But the citizen opposition, the people who came in and weighed heavily for reconsideration, first on the local level then on the OMB and then ultimately on the government, were saying: "Those forecasts are wrong. Our goals for the city are different. Those goals affect our forecast. We do not need that expressway. We should be creating a different kind of city."

Therefore in the process of forecasting the government is also making decisions about what kind of society, or what kind of region it wants to have. Therefore, it is perfectly legitimate, at that stage, for the public to be involved.

Once you have some ideas of your goals and the kinds of resources you're going to have to work with, then it's a matter of working out the various strategies on how to do it. But there are various means of doing it. And there are alternatives, as the minister has been at pains to point out, in some of these rather lyrical speeches he's been delivering up and down the province; there are alternatives. The public is certainly able and ought to be there in order to help decide about those alternatives; in order to register its opinion, in order to indicate to the provincial government how the people of a particular region feel about the various alternatives they have helped to define for their regions, and which one they particularly prefer.

But that process of defining the alternatives and then choosing between them is also not open to the public in the process which the minister has laid out in this particular bill. The choice between those alternatives is not open to the public in this particular bill. The only thing that is open to groups of citizens, municipalities and other interested parties, is in the ratification process which is that which is laid down in the process of hearings and in the travel of the bill of the proposed plan from the planners up to the minister and up, eventually, to the cabinet.

But where is the interaction which the COGP talked about? Where is the interaction where you have planners making proposals, citizens having a look at them and chewing them up? You have a kind of a dialectic process that ought to occur in planning and, in fact, one of the ministers said that this was a Marxist bill. It certainly isn't. Maybe it ought to be. Maybe, in fact, the minister ought to understand the nature of the dialectic which does occur within planning when you have it open to citizens and when they are involved—not at the very end, but from the very beginning; and that's the way it ought to be.

If you look at what the minister has, in fact, done, you see that he has simply obviated any significant local involvement. He said that he may establish one or more advisory committees in the development planning area which has been defined by the ministry. He doesn't have to, but he may.

There was no indication who would serve on these advisory committees, whether they would all be Tory bagmen or only half of them, whether they might possibly represent a range of interests within the community. There are absolutely no indications whether that power will be used, how it will be used, what equipment the advisory committee may have, what access to resources the advisory committee will have, whether its advice will be heeded, either by the planners, by the minister, by the government, or by anybody else.

The bill also says that the minister shall ensure that the council of each municipality within a development planning area is consulted. And that's the basis, as far as I can see, for his saying that municipal involvement is guaranteed in the bill. Because the bill says that each municipality shall be consulted, or he will ensure that they are consulted.

But it does not say how; it does not say when; it does not say to what intensity, what extent; it does not say whether they should be consulted as to all features of the plan, or none. It does not say whether they will be consulted.

In fact, if you read the words of the bill, Mr. Speaker, it says they'll be consulted only as to the proposed contents of the plan. And the proposed contents of the plan to me look very similar to the proposed plan which is referred to later, and which is what you get when you have finished all of your planning, you've finished choosing between your alternatives and you've finally got something that you want to stick to.

It looks to us as though that's the area and the only place at which the municipalities are going to be involved. We don't think that's good enough. There is no meaningful involvement guaranteed for municipalities, just as there is no meaningful involvement guaranteed for these advisory committees. As for the citizens and interest groups and other people in the community, well you may as well forget it! The minister doesn't even understand that they have a stake in their region and that they ought to have the right to be involved, rather than being left out as they have been right here.

Then we come to what I call the ratification process. That's where the minister has a proposed plan.

A proposed plan, I would assume, is something like this here, the parkway belt west, or perhaps like the Haldimand-Norfolk plan that we received the other day. Its characteristics are that it is generally prepared in camera; conceived by bureaucrats somewhere in the recesses of Queen's Park; achieved without consultation; often unsubstantiated by any factual analysis that can be found. Its characteristics are also that the people responsible for it are seldom able to answer for it, often have no answers at all about its contents, in some cases may have read nothing about it at all, but nevertheless feel they ought to back their people. That is the proposed plan as we are getting to be acquainted with it here in this Legislature.

Anyway, that proposed plan will be sent out to the municipalities and to a regional advisory committee if one had been appointed, and the public will be told by newspaper that should they feel interested the ministry would deign to let them have a copy in order that they can make their comments. Then there will be a hearing officer and the hearing officer will listen and the hearing officer will then make his recommendation and the proposed plan will go up to the minister.

It is very significant, Mr. Speaker, that it is the proposed plan that goes up to the minister, that regardless of any objections which are lodged by municipalities, by citizens, or by the advisory committee, there is no way in which the proposed plan can be ditched, turned around, turned back to the community because it has been made very evident that it was a lousy plan. The proposed plan, intact and virginal, goes up to the minister and the minister is then expected to consider the recommendations of the hearing officer before going forward with the proposed plan to the cabinet.

Now even at that stage, Mr. Speaker, there is still no possibility of amendment of the proposed plan. This damn thing is unshakable. It is immutable. It won't be changed until it gets to cabinet, and we are asked to accept that during the ratification process, a minister who is so busy that he hardly knows what to say until a speech is put in front of him, a minister who at best can spend only two or three hours on one of the results of these hearings of a development plan, will somehow be able to make an independent judgement on the basis of the hearing officer's recommendations, will somehow have the expertise and the time to make modifications to the plan and will then be able to defend what he has done and take it up before the cabinet.

It simply is not an acceptable procedure the way it is going right now. When it goes to the cabinet is there any provision for an appeal? No. Once the cabinet has decided that it will accept the proposed plan, or accept the proposed plan with some modifications, and makes it provincial policy, is there any way in which one can get a review? The answer is no. Is there any way that the process is open enough that citizens or municipalities can even get political leverage on the plan and use that kind of pressure in order to get changes they consider desirable? The answer is no.

Is there any feedback about what the minister is thinking when he reads the hearing officer's report? Is there any feedback back to the citizens, back to the area affected? The answer is no. Are there any guidelines as to how the cabinet or the minister will deal with these things? The answer is no.

It is a very negative kind of thing, Mr. Speaker. It is a very closed kind of process. It is a very secretive kind of process, and that is not the way we believe the planning ought to be carried out in the province.

Members of the opposition party have mentioned that these are Draconian powers. Of course they are Draconian powers. What worries us in particular is that we don't think the minister even knows what he is going to do with them, or if he knows he certainly has not come clean with this Legislature to tell us what he is going to do with them. He misunderstands consultation and he misunderstands the way in which provincial policy has been formed, and about the only place where we might conceivably find common ground with him is that ultimately there has to be some responsibility of a government to make policy on a regional and provincial basis.

It so happens—and this is about the only point where I will agree with the minister—that we accept that that responsibility does rest with the government. However, everything that leads up to that point in this bill, Mr. Speaker, is wrong. It is wrongly conceived, wrongly understood, and it is for that reason that we severely question the kinds of power which he is assuming unto himself.

We have some good reasons, Mr. Speaker, for questioning the way in which the government is going to proceed. We certainly see no signs that they are going to turn over a new leaf and that they are suddenly going to be angels, angels of consultation, people who will listen in the way that was promised back in the last provincial election. There is no sign of it, and there is every sign that the government will continue to work in an arbitrary fashion which fails to recognize the needs, the desire and the right of people to get involved with planning at the local and regional level. I mentioned Cedarwood. Because of public ownership, for some reason, the government is not going to set up any complicated machinery there and is not even going to use the limited powers that exist in this particular Act.

In eastern Ontario when the now Ministry of Industry and Tourism introduced the eastern Ontario plan, as it was called, the minister was almost laughed out of the room by the municipal representatives who had been invited to come and see something substantive. In fact, they were furious with him because of the insubstantiality of what he had come forward with.

They were particularly frustrated because of the fact that for about four years people in eastern Ontario had been awaiting the pleasure of Queen's Park.

Queen's Park had arrogated the planning process from eastern Ontario. It had taken it over from the Eastern Ontario Development Council. It had put it into a room up here in the neighbourhood of the Legislature and then it had put it on the shelf because other priorities were given precedence.

Eventually, Queen's Park came back with a booklet that represented the beginnings of the planning for eastern Ontario, something that could have been done in the course of two or three months plus a month for the pretty graphics. That was all. Yet the people in eastern Ontario who were summoned from as far as 80 or 100 miles to come to see the minister do his thing, found that there was nothing there and that all that they were really being told was that three years of their time had been wasted.

In northwestern Ontario, the minister says there has been full consultation. The answer that I have had from people who have been involved in that area and who know about the progress of the northwestern plan is that that is sheer bunkum and that there has not been any significant kind of local consultation or local involvement in the plan for northwestern Ontario.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Pecksniffian cant!

Mr. Cassidy: The minister's predecessor just under a year ago, or just over a year ago, disbanded the regional development councils. They certainly were performing a role as advisory committees, or whatever you may call them, representing local views on regional planning in the 10 economic regions of the province. They introduced the bill today, but they disbanded them, pulled the rug out from under their feet, and took away their funds, effective in September or October of last year.

They are now five months behind in the proposal by one of the minister's many predecessors, to set up advisory committees of the municipalities and to set up advisory committees of the business, academic, labour and commercial sector which will advise on regional development plans within the new regions. At the provincial-municipal liaison committee, the reason for the delay is very clear. It is that the province is unwilling to take any meaningful steps toward aligning its ministries on a regional basis in order to conform with the regional planning which is now said to be under way with the Treasury and Ministry of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs.

When the government introduced its intermediate rapid transit plans, it simply laid over the maps of Hamilton, Toronto and Ottawa its conception of where the new routes for rapid transit should go without so much as a word of consultation with any of the local governments that were involved. And in Haldimand-Norfolk it is much the same kind of story and it's much the same kind of story with the regional school boards.

In Peel-Halton, it is much the same kind of story. The Peel county council pleaded and begged for more information and they pleaded for time in order to develop new concepts of regional government. Their requests were overruled by the government which took a panicky, hurried and very slim majority decision of the Peel county council to be the definitive and last word as to what the people in that area wanted. It is now proposing to implement it into law. That's the way they worked in Peel-Halton.

We have seen that happen in regional government. I will tell the House some more about that when the bill comes forward.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): I will tell the member something about it too.

Mr. Cassidy: It certainly is true.

Mr. Lewis: The member for Peel South is going to have to.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right, yes. I would like to see how Peel county council wasn't overruled. It was an 11-to-10 vote and five municipalities of the 10 opposed the proposal which is currently before this Legislature.

That's a measure of the kind of consultation and attempt to conform to local wishes which is so characteristic of this particular government. In regional government proposals right through the province, Mr. Speaker, we have seen this again and again and again. The government makes a pretence of consultation, eventually decides what it wants to do and goes steaming ahead regardless of the feelings and wishes of the local people.

We have had an example in Ottawa-Carleton, and I don't know what the member would think of this. In Ottawa-Carleton, after two years of muttering vaguely of the need for amalgamation of municipalities, the parliamentary secretary came to Ottawa on May 7, I believe. He told the assembled mayors and Reeves that he wanted them to come up with a plan for amalgamation in 53 days, by the end of June. If the government didn't like their plan for amalgamation, the province would impose its own. If they didn't come up with a plan for amalgamation, the province would impose its own. It's a sort of heads the province wins, and tails the municipalities lose, kind of proposition; which again is so characteristic of the way in which the province has worked.

The government simply misunderstands the meaning of consultation; it has shown it again and again. And yet it is that process of consultation the Conservative idea and the Conservative process of planning which are embodied in this bill. That is why we cannot support the principle of this bill, Mr. Speaker.

Let me give members another example.

Mr. D. R. Irvine (Grenville-Dundas): The member doesn't support it because he doesn't understand it; that is why.

Mr. Cassidy: I sure do, but I would understand more about it if the minister had, in fact, bothered to tell his own backbenchers, this House or the public of Ontario what it all means.

I am working from the wording of the bill and the wording of the bill suggests that he is simply intending to continue a process of planning which the government has been doing badly and with a lack of consultation for the last five or 10 years. If he intended something else, if he is putting on a new cloak, he should have told us and he should have brought forward some evidence to convince us; and that he has not done.

Mr. Speaker, this is the plan for the parkway belt west. It was created by a task force which was begun in 1970, as the report itself tells us. Now, some time before 1970 there had been discussion in a very general way about the need for the parkway belt; I will have some more to say about that when we get to that particular debate. The Central Ontario Development Council had come forward with some proposals; the 1970 report on the Toronto-centred region plan had also talked in general terms about the parkway belt.

As the Speaker is aware, or may be aware, there has been no consultation about the Toronto-centred region plan. There has been no attempt even to sound out and test out these proposals on the public who are affected by them. The plan is simply laid on the table; as the government has said it is adopted as provincial policy.

It has been on the table; occasionally it gets adapted from time to time in order to please this particular developer or in order to bring in this particular new airport and new city and that kind of thing. In other words, the chief influences on it have been the distortions which have been introduced by the provincial government itself, certainly not with consultation and involvement on the local level.

We are told that the parkway belt is the one area of the province to which this new Planning and Development Act is going to apply. It's very clear when one looks at this report just what all that consultation and public involvement—the open, clear public process that the minister talks about—is really going to mean.

On the map at the back of the book there is very clearly laid out where the parkway belt is going to go. We have here a proposed plan and there is nothing in any public consultation that goes from here on, Mr. Speaker, I would contend to you, which will change one dot or one iota of the basic outlines of this proposed plan.

Nothing at all will change it. The public will be brought in. They will be manipulated. They will be asked to believe that, by talking about the zoning or about the width of the expressway corridors or about the buffers which may be put up when expressways and hydro lines pass through recreational areas, they are being meaningfully involved.

But the basic concepts of the parkway belt, which is the first plan under this new Act, are already set. The minister may as well call hearings right now, get the darn thing through and have it out and passed within three or four months, because then at least municipalities which are affected could come forward and seek amendments.

There is no meaningful consultation left, as far as I can see; no opportunity for meaningful consultation left with the plan as it stands at this time. Yet that's what's going to happen again and again. The minister will set out a planning area. The planners will go to work. They will bring down a document like this and then people will be asked to believe that they are being consulted as they go before a hearing officer in order to express their views.

What do these hearing officers do? There were some questions about that today, and this is another concrete example about the hearing process. This is something new to Ontario; it's been introduced only in the last two or three years and only, so far, in relation to expressways. It's well established in British practice; it has public trust there. But it's very difficult for us to have public trust in this government because of the way in which they have manipulated planning and consultation in the past and because of the way in which they are manipulating the hearing process as they have used it up to now.

The introduction to the leaflet prepared by Earl Berger and Associates for the hearing, which was conducted by Mr. Earl Berger I understand, states that the hearings are "to ensure that the opinions and feelings of local groups and individuals regarding the proposed continuation of the Brantford Expressway are conveyed to the decision-makers in an unbiased, concise and clear manner."

Well, it would seem to me that if the person holding the hearings is to convey the opinions of people to the decision-makers, which I presume means the cabinet, in an unbiased manner, it is at least incumbent upon him to convey some background to the public, if he is to do that at all, also in an unbiased manner, and that is certainly not the case in this particular document.

If the document is biased, as it is, then it is simply an engineering of public consent by a man experienced in public relations and nothing more. It should be recognized as that and the government, when it moves in with hearings, should state clearly: "We are holding hearings in order to persuade you that—" and then underneath the government can put in the particular proposition that the government is trying to advance at that particular time: "Expressways are good for you;" "gravel pits belong in the Escarpment." There are all sorts of things that the government ought to allow: "That speculation should continue in the areas outside of Toronto." These are a number of things that the province seems to believe in.

In page five of this particular document, Mr. Speaker—this was an unbiased report on the planning that preceded the Brantford Expressway—when it comes to "Environmental Considerations," which is something citizens are obviously concerned with, Mr. Berger tells the citizens who are about to talk to Mr. Berger: "Every attempt was made to adjust the final alignment to avoid the need to acquire sound buildings and to use those land areas identified for redevelopment in the Brantford urban renewal study." If anybody has looked at aerial photographs of that expressway, you will know that 234 buildings are to be removed. Most of them are sound housing. Some of them are housing in the $30,000 category, which the minister would recognize as meaning housing in the $50,000 to $60,000 category if it was located here in Toronto.

This report also seeks to allay people's fears that expressways reduce assessment because they sterilize land. It says there is no real loss. There may be a short-term loss, but: "Other studies of housing, business or industrial displacement provide convincing evidence that all uses tend to relocate within the general area."

One of the experiences of expressways is that among other things, certain types of industries simply never relocate at all. They are driven out of business because they depended on low-rent locations and on certain other factors that allowed them to stay in business and create jobs; and those factors end when the expressway comes through.

Then finally, this marvellous phrase, that the "findings of the transportation study," according to Earl Berger, "confirm the general consensus of previous studies — an expressway is necessary." Well, if that is the case, then there was no need for those hearings at all, because Mr. Berger has already told himself what to think. If that is the way the hearings are going to be carried out across the province, there is no need to hold them at all.

The hearing officer will come down and waltz into town and say: "Look, I have got this summary that has been prepared by the ministry to show you that every aspect of this plan is vitally necessary. There is really no need to change it all. Don't try to convince me with the facts. Don't try to tell me how you feel. I am not interested. I have made my decision. You'll find it if you read between the lines of the thing I am handing out, so why don't you go home and let's go and have a drink down at the local pub."

Very much the same kind of thing happened when Mr. Berger was involved in the hearings in London as well. It was also an attempt to manipulate the public. As it turned out the public came armed with questions. They wanted to question the ministry officials whom they had had no chance to question before.

But when they asked them about environmental studies of the area, which had been done a year or more before, the ministry experts said they were unaware of them. When they asked the officials why the expressway could not be relocated north of the city rather than to the south—I guess it's south of the city rather than to the north—again there were no answers available from the experts.

The experts had not come prepared to participate in a dialogue so one didn't take place. But the citizens were frustrated because they had had no other opportunity to talk to the planners, to talk to the people who were making the proposals and to find out why these proposals were necessary.

"The affected citizens are angry and they have every right to be." That's a comment by Paul Saloway, who is a respected reporter with the London Free Press. The legitimate questions have received few if any satisfactory answers. That was the conclusion of the hearings as conducted by this government on the London Expressway. And yet in the way this Act is worked out the citizenry will receive few if any adequate answers as far as proposed plans under the new Act are concerned.

There is no guarantee of it at all. There is no way in which they can get it. You know, Mr. Speaker, the minister has an attitude toward the provision of information which reflects the whole approach of his government. Whether it's airplanes or planning or anything else, there is a feeling that the public really shouldn't know, a feeling that the opposition parties shouldn't really know, and a feeling that municipalities shouldn't know.

For example, when people come to the minister asking for financial implications of any of his regional government plans the answer has invariably been either "we don't know" or else "we will get the answer to you" when it is too late to have any influence on the particular piece of business that is before them. That certainly would have happened in the case of regional government east of Metro.

There is no guarantee that the advisory committees can get information here. There is no guarantee that municipalities can get information. There is no guarantee that they will have the resources to be involved in these regional planning studies. No guarantee at all. When it comes to the hearings there is no guarantee that citizens can get to alternative strategies prepared by the planners.

There is also no guarantee that they can see how the alternatives were defined and how the choice was made between them, no guarantee at all. These people are simply shut out. The minister is expecting, as his government so often expects, that the public will confront the government in a kind of David and Goliath situation. Only, as far as this government is concerned, it always wants David to lose and it does everything it can to make sure that David loses. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lawlor: It takes the slingshot away.

Mr. Cassidy: It takes the slingshot away, that's right!

The ministry has got a panoply of experts paid $20,000 and $25,000 and $30,000 a year to carry out its work for it. And it is hiring these experts at a great pace right now. An information officer is required to foster effective communication between the North Pickering project and the public and to assist in a public participation programme—

Mr. Lewis: Those boys opposite have gone wild on information officers.

Mr. Cassidy: —for $15,500 the ministry—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: —is hiring a manipulator to go in and talk to the public in North Pickering and to ensure that any public which is there will be subject to his particular wishes.

Now there has been certainly no guarantee that the public will have a planner, an information officer, an animator or any other kind of resource person with whom it can confront the ministry.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Cassidy: The ministry's information officer will be backed by a whole team who will be working on the North Pickering project. The public, if it is lucky, may be able to get a bit of free legal and planning advice, but nothing else.

How about this one!

Regional Planning Managers: $17,700 to $22,300 for the regional planning programme to translate provincial economic and social policies into a set of plans and programmes tailored to meet the needs of each of the five planning regions in Ontario in such a way that each region can achieve its full potential. Social, economic, cultural and physical elements are included in each regional plan.

Well there is certainly no mention there, that I can see, of the need for public involvement. There is certainly no indication that whoever is hired ought to have any ability or any experience in relating to the public.

Look at the qualifications: An honours degree, specialization in economics or geography or planning or political science or a social science; extensive experience in socio-economic research, analysis and planning; ability to prepare highly technical and complex reports with which to bamboozle the public; demonstrated technical and administrative ability.

But at no point is there any requirement that these regional planning managers—and look at the term, “managers”; as though this was General Motors going out to plan some industrial suburb outside Los Angeles—that these managers have any demonstrable ability to relate to the public, any sensitivity, any idea in fact that there is a public responsibility that the public should and must be involved. Oh no, that is not the way in which the government is concerned.

Oh, here is another one:

Official plans analyst who will promote the ecological approach to urban planning, co-ordinate the ministry specification of the official planning process in municipalities and review completed plans.

Well, this one job does carry the responsibility to “develop and maintain co-operative relationships with other officials and organizations.” At least, in other words, he should be able to get along with his fellow staff people within the ministry, and maybe the other organizations and good citizens groups. I don't know; but what is significant is that the only person on this list of job requirements who has got to relate to any other individual, even within the ministry, is the lowest paid of the three jobs—and he is only to get $12,700.

Mr. Speaker: Order please! I have a strong suspicion the hon. member is straying considerably from the principle of this bill.

Mr. Cassidy: No, I don't think so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I can't see anything remotely connected with it and perhaps the hon. member would speak to the bill? I have permitted him to continue for some considerable time—

Mr. Cassidy: I quite appreciate that.

Mr. Speaker: —with that very same suspicion and I would ask him please to speak to the bill now.

Mr. Cassidy: The point I was making, Mr. Speaker, is that this bill ought to guarantee the right of access to information to the citizens and to municipalities and it does not, and that is yet another failure—

Mr. Speaker: Well, the hon. member realizes, and it has been pointed out to the hon. members of the House, that you may not speak to matters that are not in the bill.

Mr. Cassidy: I realize that, yes, but I am saying that that is another defect in the planning process as it is laid out—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is being repetitious.

Mr. Cassidy: Okay. You know, Mr. Speaker, the country cousins of the Conservative backbenchers really expressed their view about planning the other week in the private bills committee. The city of Toronto—

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): Country cousins?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, country cousins — and there are one or two in the House right now. There was a request from the city of Toronto for power to delay demolitions for a period of time in order that constructive planning could go forward in particularly designated areas of the city of Toronto.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The member's party has a notice of motion on that; why doesn't the member debate that when the bill is called?

Mr. Cassidy: That was refused by the backbenchers of the Conservative Party. It was also refused by members of the Liberal Party who were there. That is the real attitude of both those parties toward planning, Mr. Speaker. They really wish it didn't have to exist at all; they wish they could do away with it; they wish that somehow a dream-like, laissez-faire society could continue to exist. And that is one of the reasons, Mr. Speaker, why the Conservative government does such a bad job when it comes to planning.

Let's face it, already there are enormous restrictions on the use of land within the province of Ontario through the zoning powers and through such devices as ministerial orders, and other things like that.

The government's own supporters don't accept that; the government's technocrats say it must be done. The minister comes forward with a bill, but he doesn't really know what to do with it—and that is why we get into the kind of mishmash that we have right now.

The minister says that he learned something from our socialist friends out in BC when he brought forward this particular bill. The fact is that he didn't learn anything at all. The fact is he has brought forward a bill which is far inferior to the bill which exists out in British Columbia. In fact, the bill violates a number of the principles which are respected in the BC land bill, which was passed just the other day.

The BC land bill gives a land commission power to zone—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member to return only to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Cassidy: I am talking about the ideology behind the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: He is straying too far from the principle as enumerated in this bill.

Mr. Cassidy: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. This Ontario bill effectively establishes the same powers of broad zoning that exist under the BC bill, Mr. Speaker, but this Ontario bill gives no power of appeal that exists under the BC bill.

This Ontario bill permits expropriation by the minister or by the cabinet for almost any purpose whatsoever. Those powers do not exist in the BC bill, which the minister is so prone to criticize.

The minister says he has learned from this side or from our NDP friends out in British Columbia, and the answer is that that is hogwash, if in fact, he intended to bring in a bill which he considered would be more moderate or more safe, or something like that, than the BC bill. We happen to be very happy with the bill out there. We are rather unhappy about this one, because we are unhappy about the people who are going to be administering it.

Let me tell you some of the specific reasons, or some of the specific objectionable features, Mr. Speaker, which are sufficiently gross as to be points of principle rather than points of detail in the bill.

One of them is the fact that this bill provides that not only may the government expropriate land as well as acquiring it for purposes of the development planning under this Act, but that it may also sell that land as well as lease it or dispose of it by other means. And we are opposed to the principle that the government should use powers of expropriation and then should go ahead and sell to its friends in the development industry for the purposes they see fit, in order to serve private profit instead of worrying about the public purposes which should be served under the bill.

We don't like that at all. We will oppose it when we get to the particular section. We believe that whenever the government acquires land, it should keep it. If the land is to be developed, then it should be leased for development and should never, under any circumstances, be sold.

We also find rather objectionable the powers without limit in the bill which allow the minister to give, not only to municipalities and to other government bodies but also to any private individual, funds if they are carrying out purposes under the Act.

That can be interpreted, Mr. Speaker, to mean absolutely anything. It could mean that if I am willing to give 10 ft of land for the purposes of a plan under this Act, the minister could recompense me with a little under-the-table payoff of $500,000. There is not even a relationship between the value of what somebody does to implement the plan and what the minister may recompense him for. There are no limits on it. And once again, it is an unusual and unjustified kind of power which should not exist under this particular bill.

Third, we find that there is a need for guidelines. Not the kind of guidelines the minister referred to—little land use things, setbacks, and that kind of thing—but some general specifications as to how this bill is going to work.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, how we would do it. I can't really say how the minister is going to use his powers because he hasn't told us. As far as the New Democratic government is concerned—

Mr. Sargent: What government?

Mr. Cassidy: —we advance the needs for an Ontario economic plan, and it is something which this government has never accepted, except through the back door, through the creation of the Toronto-centred region plan.

As part of that Ontario economic plan, we also need an Ontario land use plan, and that, as an instrument of government policy, has ultimately to be decided through the government, by the cabinet, and we would hope also would be ratified by or presented to this particular Legislature.

The Ontario economic plan and an Ontario land use plan however, Mr. Speaker, would be confined to some pretty general goals—growth goals, economic targets, an industrial strategy, a recreation strategy, an idea of the population distribution that we wish to see around the province. These are the major things that would be encompassed within a provincial plan, and that would set a framework for a regional planning in which you could have close, continuing and meaningful public involvement. Once the overall strategy exists, then there can be genuine consultation such as is not provided for here in this Act.

Mr. Sargent: Having said that—!

Mr. Cassidy: There would be the commitment to consult the municipalities, not in the meaningless way that is in this Act, but in a genuine way—in ways that made sure they were involved at every step of the process, from goals to forecasts, through alternative strategies to the choices of what had to be done. There would be the same kind of commitments to citizens' interest groups and citizens' groups in the regions or area in which it would be effected.

We would guarantee that there would be access to information for people who were involved during the process of plan formulation, and not just at the time of hearings or not just after the Act was passed.

We would guarantee that there would be a review procedure. It would either be through the cabinet or could conceivably be through a committee of this Legislature. Certainly it should not be that once cabinet has disposed of the matter, that is the end and there is no way—as there is no way provided in this Act—for any kind of review or appeal. We would see that there would be one.

We would guarantee that there would be regional or area planning advisory committees; that they represented a broad spectrum of the population, and that they were meaningfully involved, rather than simply being shoved into one corner. This can very easily happen under the minister's proposals.

We would ensure that there was genuine feedback right through the process, Mr. Speaker. If it appeared that the planners had made a mistake, then we would return it to the community or to the area or region affected. This is preferable to passing it, overriding municipal autonomy, and forcing municipalities to come in through the amendment process that is provided in the bill—that is, after the plan has become policy rather than before. That's a very significant kind of distinction.

Mr. Speaker, finally, we would ensure that within the provincial plan, which overlay all of the planning that we are talking about and possibly the minister is talking about—I do hope he'll bring us into his confidence—that the Toronto-centred obsession would be ended. This obsession is reflected in the government's Toronto-centred region plan. It cannot have failed to affect every regional or development plan which may be undertaken under this particular Act.

The government is obsessed, not only with centralizing its decision-making in the planning field, but with centralizing the growth of Ontario within the Toronto region. The population and other projections for the Toronto region ensure that there is no significant growth to be had in the rest of the province. That means that the process of provincial planning that the minister may be talking about is nothing but a sham.

We cannot support the bill, Mr. Speaker. I will have more to say about it when we get to the particular clause-by-clause discussion. But we feel that the government has totally missed the boat in its recent experiences with consultation and that it totally misses the boat with this particular bill. Therefore, the bill represents an unnecessary and undesirable assumption of power without sufficient check or curb to the minister and to his cabinet.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have further comments at all? Has he completed his remarks?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: All right, the hon. Leader of the Opposition then perhaps will move the adjournment.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I understand that we are dispensing with the private member's hour today by agreement. You may be the last to know.

Mr. Speaker: I finally have been notified that there is no private member's hour.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): We were all just notified.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: So, with your permission, sir, now that you have been notified, I would like to express some comments on the bill that is before us at the present time.

Mr. MacDonald: It was a part of government planning, that all those involved heard about it after it had been decided.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the Treasurer, as the planning representative of the executive council, has unlimited planning powers at the present time. He and his predecessors in the office have had those powers, and from time to time have exercised them. I recall on one occasion when Mr. MacNaughton, one of his predecessors, designated himself as the chief planner for Ontario. There was no doubt in his attitude and in his decisions that he understood that he had full and almost unre-served powers in the planning function.

There is not an official plan in any municipality in the province that has not had the specific approval by way of signature, stamped or otherwise, of the Treasurer or his representative. There is not a zoning bylaw which has not been approved or vetoed or amended, if not directly by the Treasurer, at least by those exercising powers that emanate from his position.

With this bill we are simply talking about another way of the utilization of those powers which are unlimited as long as they are supported by a majority of the members in the Legislature.

I would like to spend a moment—I don't intend to occupy a great deal of time in this debate—and recall to your mind, Mr. Speaker, some of the areas of planning authority as they have been exercised by the government leading up to this Bill 128, which appears to me to be the ultimate symbol of the untrammelled authority that this Treasurer and this administration feel is necessary in order to plan the development of this province.

It wasn't many years ago when we were criticizing the government for having a divided planning authority. The then Minister of Planning and Development, Mr. Randall, had very far-reaching powers indeed and under his ministry property was purchased and expropriated for a number of purposes not the least of which was housing and the development, ostensibly, of new communities. Much of that land is still lying fallow, not being used for any purpose, and it has been justified by a reference to something called a land bank.

The Treasurer of the province in those days had the authority to make very far-reaching economic decisions but it was the then Minister of Municipal Affairs who wielded the authority that the Treasurer now has in approving all official plans and in fact, exerting authority as the chief planner of the province.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: In those days there was a feeling, Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me to continue—

Mr. Sargent: How about some points of order here?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: —that the government was unwilling to accept the authority. As a matter of fact, it made it clear that the local reeves and councils, or mayors and councils, were the ones who should develop the official plans and say to their neighbours and fellow taxpayers that Mr. X's land could be developed while Mr. Y's could not.

Of course, this decision left the political responsibility at the local level where, in many respects, it should be but the final authority, the approval, the amendment, the power to veto, was still in the hands of the then Minister of Municipal Affairs. In other words, he evaded the political responsibility for making decisions which were often unpopular.

There are many reeves who found that their political demise was based on the fact that they had simply acceded to the urgings of the Minister of Municipal Affairs of the day and had gone forward with a municipal plan for land use because they felt that the ministry meant business. Then they found that their fellow citizens were not prepared to accept the plan and they were voted out of office; often the successor simply applied the official plan that had been approved. At least the local citizens had had their vengeance.

The chief planners at the provincial level sat back and said "Gradually, we are going to avoid the political opprobrium associated with making this sort of unpopular decision and we are heading toward a completely planned Ontario" — with planning authority based on the authority of the Legislature as wielded by the then Minister of Municipal Affairs, now wielded by the Treasurer, but with the political risks taken at the local level.

Mind you, Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are aware as a former reeve yourself, that not only were the political risks taken at the local level but that the individuals whose lands were being planned and who wanted to concern themselves with the goal of their own community did have ready access to the decisions made over their own land and the goals for their own community. While there was political risk, I believe it was a healthy risk. There are many reeves who were able to survive, let's say, these difficult circumstances either through their own acumen and by going forward with an official plan, or by simply saying to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, "If you want a plan you can impose it yourself. As far as I am concerned, we are not interested in it."

As the Treasurer well knows, there are many of the most prosperous townships and municipalities in this province which don't even have zoning bylaws. I think the most outstanding example is Chatham township itself where the minister's predecessor on the day he resigned, or gave up his portfolio, imposed a freeze order so that a $7-million shopping centre ostensibly could not go forward, because there wasn't even a semblance of an official plan approved in the area, although the local municipality had been working on one and it had been delayed for over two years by the former Minister of Municipal Affairs, the former Treasurer, the present member for Chatham — Kent (Mr. McKeough).

Mr. Speaker, I know that you would not want me to wander from the point, but if I can just simply to reinforce this. The authority for planning exists now in the hands of the Lieutenant Governor in Council and, specifically, the present Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, and it always has existed in that ministry or its precursors under different titles. We have seen the administration in years gone by more in different directions in an effort to bring some leadership into the planning of this province, without accepting what they feared was a deadly political responsibility. John Robarts in his Design for Development attempted this. The offshoot of the Design for Development, the strengthening of the regional development councils was another attempt.

Notwithstanding expressions that I myself have made in support of specific development councils — and oddly enough, the one around London is probably one of the better ones—I am prepared to say that the regional development councils have basically been a waste of money and a waste of the time of many good citizens who were prepared to accept the concept and the principle of the Design for Development at face value, not realizing that the government was using this as a political facade simply to postpone the acceptance of certain responsibilities having to do with a plan for Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill 128 has been referred to by some as the vehicle which will permit the government to move forward to some kind of a plan for Ontario. If that is so, then I, for one, at least approve of those goals. I have felt that for too long we have been forcing the municipalities to plan in a vacuum and that there had not been any statements of understandable policy as to where the growth nodes were expected to be and what the government's policy was for the maintenance of farmland for a reasonable period of time.

I have observed very carefully the government's attempt to exercise centralized controls in many areas of land use planning and other governmental decisions, while at least appearing to strengthen the decision-making at the local level. I'm sure, Mr. Speaker, you recall a survey that was made about five years ago which indicated that the various government departments, as they were then called, had established 33 different regional boundaries for the application of their own responsibility, whether it was agriculture or housing or education or welfare. Most of these had no coterminous boundaries at all.

Anybody who tried to draw a map of Ontario with these various boundaries realized that they had what politicians have for years been calling simply a patchwork approach to a policy which was well stated in Design for Development, but which, in effect, was meaningless folderol in its application in the province. Not only was it a waste of time for those citizens who were drawn into the endless meetings during those long winter nights, when they drove 20, 30, 40 and 60 miles to attend the regional development council meetings to discuss the numbers of telephone poles that had been counted in their township, relative to the numbers of telephone poles elsewhere. Numbers of municipalities often relied on the province to extend the financial support that was needed to pay the salaries for the executive director and his endless newsletters and the various other functionaries that over a period of time were expected to provide some kind of a voluntary development plan for an area and this has been a failure.

The ministry has now accepted the failure. Just today it introduced a bill which would repeal the regional development councils. I don't think that it has sufficiently accepted the responsibility for the fatuous statements that were made in the last five years in support of the concept. Particularly when it has asked the Legislature to continue voting money for the endless surveys and reports which in my office formed a nice stack about 10 feet tall, until I threw them out.

Well frankly, Mr. Speaker, I have also felt that the whole approach to regional government imposition, if the Treasurer will let me use the word while it's my speech, could have been avoided if there had been an acceptance of the need for regional planning involving urban and rural areas together. Interestingly enough, most people at the local level have accepted the necessity of plans with teeth in them. Most farmers I have talked to felt that in the past they have been put upon by various planning decisions, zoning bylaws and official plans. But now they have accepted the fact that it is not in their best interests or anyone's best interest to have strict development up and down the concessions with the centre cores reserved simply for agricultural purposes. While there has been a lot of reluctance in this connection and many feel that they have been dictated to by people who didn't understand the problems themselves, I feel there has been a considerable acceptance of the need for planning controls with teeth in them.

My second contention is that the local community is prepared to accept meaningful planning controls established locally, while the Treasurer and his predecessors have been forcing township councils into establishing official plans, and have not made an orderly nor meaningful approach to what we, as a community of Ontario as a whole, want.

Mr. Speaker, a third point is that I do not for a moment suggest the government of Ontario should not specifically make planning decisions involving the basic structure of Ontario. Leslie Frost was prepared to make a planning decision when he decided to build the Macdonald-Cartier Freeway from one end of the province to the other and it was not necessary for his government to accept any special planning authority to do that. But I'm talking specifically about certain planning decisions that have already been made. They were made without consultation but now that they have been made, in my view, they should be built on.

The Nanticoke decision of Ontario Hydro is a good case in point. I believe that it is an indication of the lack of adequate planning in years gone by that the government itself, according to statements made by the then Prime Minister, was surprised when the decision was made to establish Nanticoke as a multi-billion dollar electrical production facility. It was followed shortly after by a Stelco decision to establish a major new industrial enterprise in that particular rural part of the north shore of Lake Erie.

But once that decision was made—I believe it should have been made at the behest of the overall planning policy of the government, but it was made based on the good sense of Ontario Hydro and the good sense of Stelco—the government then could very well have made the decision that those facilities were to be available to any industry which could be persuaded to move into that part of the country.

In my view there certainly should be land set aside which is purchased by the government, serviced by the government and made available by the government for a substantial industrial complex—a centre, which in fact will be one of the operating planning centres for the whole part of the southern Ontario peninsula.

Now the same kind of reasoning would follow with respect to the Hydro establishment in the Bruce peninsula. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the member for Grey-Bruce, has been deeply involved in the development of these ideas and he is very much concerned that the planning responsibilities of the people in his area should not be usurped.

But surely if Ontario Hydro has decided to go in there, as they have in a big way, it may be one of the most important and undoubtedly will be one of the largest power centres in the world within the next 10 years.

Surely it should be a part of an Ontario plan that that is another area where industry can locate. It is right on the Great Lakes. The docking facility needed for Ontario Hydro and certain other facilities should be oversized so that it can be an industrial docking facility. The water intakes, the sewage disposal system, and all the rest of it should be built oversized at public expense, with the cost recovered from industries which over the next 20 years must undoubtedly locate there, rather than in the heart of what the government likes to call the "Toronto-centred region."

If we believe in the decentralization of development then obviously this is the sort of decision which in my opinion must be a part of a plan for Ontario. In my opinion the nodes of that plan, as far as industrial development, are going to have to be the power centres. It may well be that Lennox-Bath is another one. Obviously up on the Ottawa River is another one, with certain areas in the north fulfilling the same criteria. But in my opinion this does not require the special powers put forward by Bill 128.

The decision has been made in the past to go with local planning and give the authority to the local municipalities that obviously stems from the authority of this Legislature in the first place.

The minister and his predecessors have used every coercive means to get the local municipalities to plan, but there has always been the suspicion at the local level that it was window dressing, and that in fact it was not necessary to have a local plan. Chatham township is a good case in point. The reeve and his predecessor were entirely right; that while there should have been an official plan for such a well-to-do, rich, potentially-developable area, no plan was forthcoming.

In my opinion it would be quite proper for the authority of the Treasurer from this Legislature to require a co-ordinated, official plan in each of these municipalities; and if he wants to do it on the county level or the regional level, fine. But in my opinion he makes a serious mistake in the philosophy of democracy when he puts aside what I suppose has been a facade in the past and emerges as the single planner for the Province of Ontario.

Now, I've read the bill very carefully. Section after section refers to the establishment of advisory committees and the fact that there will be special hearing officers, who will go right into the area concerned and hear the citizens as to what they have say.

As the member for Ottawa Centre said a few moments ago, the hearing officer is just going to sit there and I suppose have a staff that takes down the salient points. They'll bring them back and say to the Treasurer: "Well, this is what they said." But of course the Treasurer is going to do what he chooses anyway.

There is no necessity for any local justification; just the kind of public relations activity whereby a pleasant person will go out with all the panoply of some sort of a paper given to him by the Treasurer, rent the halls, put the ads in the papers, and listen to the opinions of the people locally. The people locally will have no right, other than to express their views. There is no legal appeal. As a matter of fact, in the past the planning decisions which were made locally were in essence appealable finally to the minister and no further.

I understand that and I accept that, because after all the laws are made under our system of responsible government by the advisers to his honour. And as long as they have the confidence of this chamber then, in fact, the only appeal beyond this chamber is to the people at regular intervals. But, of course, that doesn't constitute the kind of appeal in which a specific issue can be considered or discussed.

But as I look at this bill, all the lines of authority do not lead even to a group. We talk about the nameless, faceless, bureaucracy. Well, I know the names of some of them. I know the faces of quite a few of them; and I know them to be pretty well directed individuals. Most of them have excellent educations and most of them have the very best interests of the community at heart. Not only have they got those interests to begin with, but they are well paid—I presume they are well paid; from time to time we hear about these things—to exert their best judgement in advising the minister. But at the centre of this particular lace curtain, or this doily, or this cobweb, or however you want to describe it, there is the minister himself. There is all of the—

Mr. Sargent: Web!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Well, I suppose you can call it that. There is all this lacework of committees and there in the centre sits a tarantula with a sting in his—let's say his teeth—whereby he can kill any proposal or he can give life to any proposal. So he has some powers that even the tarantula does not have.

I think the point has been well made by the member for Downsview, that with this bill we are going to remove all of the powers of the local planning boards, and if anything they do is deemed by the Treasurer to be in contravention, or in fact not in support of decisions that the Treasurer made, then those local bylaws will be deemed to have been changed, if in fact the local council doesn't change them fast enough to suit the power that sits in the centre of this fancy network.

The minister has talked about the possibility of a review of all of these planning functions in this very chamber, and yet I would like to ask him to consider the establishment of the Toronto-centred region plan as official policy.

We remember the presentation of the plan. That was one of the earlier public relations extravaganzas. I don't think the present Treasurer was directly involved in the coloured spotlights and that particular slide show, but still the people in the area were asked to give their views, and some of them did and some of them did not.

Finally, in a statement of government policy, it was indicated that the Toronto-centred region plan was now the plan for the area concerned.

There was never a bill presented to the Legislature. There was never any opportunity to debate it in detail. Whenever we asked the Treasurer for such an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, he said, "Well, make a speech in the Throne debate or on the budget and give us your views." You would be immediately reduced to talking about the second concession of Whitchurch township or something about the establishment of some industry in Orillia which, in my opinion, should not be the topic for a time-consuming debate here, but it should be the topic for very important and perhaps time-consuming debate in the jurisdiction which is affected.

So Mr. Speaker, we believe that the Treasurer is removing all semblance of democratic control of planning; that with this bill—which when it becomes law doesn't apply to anything until he decides on a certain plot of ground to which it applies—he is establishing himself as the land use tsar of this province; that we do not cotton to people establishing themselves as tsars of anything. We believe that it is obviously the thrust of the statements of the Progressive Conservative Party in the past to disseminate and disperse this responsibility, but now they show themselves in their true colours. The initiation of special planning, and all of the decisions associated with it are based, not even in this Legislature but in the mind of one man, the Treasurer of Ontario, who sits like a frog in the lily pad, right in the centre of the pond, dictating all decisions in this province of a land use planning nature.

I personally regret that instead of backing away from the often stated policies and principles of the Progressive Conservative Party in the past, that we have now seen that those statements are a sham and a facade and that the party is truly a centralizing party; that the government that accepts the philosophy of the Conservative Party is in fact a centralizing party and a government which is prepared now, through this bill, to accept unto themselves undue authority which admittedly has been theirs all along but which has very properly been dispersed at the municipal level—not as effectively as it might have been, but dispersed all the same.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, we find that we cannot support the bill; that we do believe in a plan for Ontario which does designate those growth points and certain aspects of transportation and service which go with them. We do believe in a plan for Ontario which may very well save the fertile farm lands from further development, as long as compensation for the present owners is understood and that there is a direct procedure for compensating the owners for the relinquishing of their developmental rights.

We feel this bill doesn't even come close to that. It is simply a Conservative assertion of naked central power and for that reason we cannot support it.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, this is keystone legislation leading on to a number of other bills and giving the general approach and orientation of the government in the area of overall planning. That being the case, the legislation may mean everything or it may mean very little. It depends, with the skeleton, upon not only the flesh and bones and the blood stream, but the clothing that is going to be put on the animal and nothing of that is spelled out. We have the bare skeleton to deal with and we can see right through it. That is not the way the legislation should have been introduced.

On that wide swath that the government has cut for this particular legislation—and I want to express this personally — I really deeply regret that there isn't, in my opinion, sufficient time given really to get into it. The legislation, introduced one day, has some very deep, even profound ramifications as to the life of the province and the democratic process itself; it was dropped on our laps. For instance, I would like to spend a little time looking at a friend of the minister's, Louis Mumford, who has done a good deal of work, which the minister deeply appreciates, with respect to the role of the highway versus the city and as to what the mutual weights and allocations ought to be given, even in that rather narrow demesne.

Or his friend and mine, too, Jane Jacobs, as to whether nodally-oriented regional concepts ought to be central; whether the city is king or whether an emphasis in this province ought to be given more to the rural or countryside. Nothing of this is spelled out.

In the committee, on which the minister and I sat for a number of years, there is a major chapter "Reconciling Structure with Function." The two central things of that particular concept at that time had to do with the idea of accessibility on one side and services on the other. Where, within the panoply of government, have we been introduced to his thinking in these regards, as to where he places his priorities, as to what attitude or mode of approach he takes with respect to overall planning? What is important to him and what is not important to him? Does he really go for the nodal concept of the major city as being that which centres a region, gives it its turn and builds around it a mutual interrelationship, or does he not?

The legislation, as I say, deus absconditus—drops like a god from heaven on to the desks of all the members without having any defined pattern, any mode of approach, or any indication of what the minister's philosophy is with respect to planning and over all government. We are left to guess as to whether his intentions are maleficent, beneficent or just what they are supposed to be. We are supposed to assume, of course, that under all designations the minister's kindness will emanate, will show itself and that the very best possible thing will happen. It is not the role of an opposition to accept any such nonsense but that is, nevertheless, what he in this kind of arrogant and supercilious manner seems to take upon himself.

It happened in the committee this morning, as the member for Downsview mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker. It was the same kind of thing; he shoves it down our throats; he shoves it down the throats of the municipality; he shoves it down with a little mascara and a little dressing up, making it a placebo for the throats of the citizenry at large.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am not queer—

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): I will vouch for that.

Mr. Sargent: I am not clear whether he is for or against, but he is not speaking to the bill, Mr. Speaker. Put him in order.

Mr. Speaker: You have no point of order. I think he is just building up to his point.

Mr. MacDonald: It is good to have someone in the Speaker's chair who can understand what the member for Grey-Bruce is talking about.

Mr. Lawlor: All I can tell members is that all the many girls I like wear mascara. It is the mascara that makes the difference.

Anyway, resuming in the same vein—what is the minister's approach to agriculture? Does he think it has a kind of high priority against, for instance, recreational uses? Against industrial uses? Against, again, residential? Against commercial? Where do all these things fit in in the general universe which he happens to inhabit and which he is seeking to impose upon us? It seems to me—and I am speaking more personally here than, necessarily, apart from party politics—that the recreational is focal; that one starts with a recreational concept, not necessarily with the agricultural one, although one might have been disposed to mention it.

There is a great deal in this province that can be turned to viable agricultural uses. And except in unique features, such as the fruitlands. Does the Treasurer intend to make his designation over the fruitlands? I think he should. I think that they should be protected and that if subsidization is to take place to retain that invaluable and irreplaceable resource in the overall planning picture, then he should be prepared to do that.

Sure there are offsetting and substitutional uses for the fruitlands which bring a better optimum return in sheer economic terms, but that isn't the only consideration. The cost terms and the economics terms should be third or fourth in the Treasurer's list of priorities, I suggest to him.

Recreation is the best place to zero in on in planning over all the province, with the leisured society just around the corner, with a population in the MTARTS region of six million people seeking some kind of outlet away from the congestion and the density concepts that are going to come into being—and promoted by the Treasurer's planning as thus far given to us, as far as I can see. With respect to Burlington, with respect to Oakville, and all the way along the line he has been promoting intense concentrations of population.

The Treasurer must give his priority to the areas of recreation. But what does he do? He sloughs it off. He backs away. Gertler gave him some teeth, he really gave him a purpose.

We'll get to it, of course, when we get to the Niagara bill. But it's the general overall approach that I am concerned with. Only hints and gestures—and even with Niagara the Treasurer takes it basically out of this legislation entirely and places it in another field.

Would he envisage the lakeshore properties fitting into an overall plan? I think he has to have a master plan. Half the difficulty with the regional government concepts so far has been that they are piecemeal. The Treasurer must have an overall picture as to where he's going to place the weight, as to where transportation ought to be. He can't do it in the void and he can't do it regionally. He must do it in a fairly universal and widespread way.

So I find the master plan has been the missing link, and has been an ill-defined influence throughout in seeking to bring in regional governments. And the Treasurer's regional government thing is haphazard and a little absurd, because, precisely, he wasn't moved into that particular area. Now, laterly, he's coming forward; having brought in seven or eight regional governments, he's now bringing in a thing which I thought should have been introduced at the very inception.

Of course, what is wrong with the legislation before us are the mechanics of that legislation—the modes of consultation, the participational aspects. That has been pointed out and will be pointed out, no doubt, ad nauseam in this House. And that's where the government basically fails.

It's with respect to unique attributes of all kinds in the topography, in the landscape, that must be protected and must be designated. Why can't we, when legislation of this kind is brought forward today, get some indication of precisely what designations are intended to be made, at least in the short term, to give some hint?

The Nanticoke region which was discussed earlier; is it to be designated in any particular way? Are we to include the Haliburton Highlands features? How are they to be protected? Surely, the Treasurer has some notion, he's studied the stuff long enough. It's four or five years now, maybe earlier than that, since the first whiffs or whims of this sort of legislation was bruited to the people of Ontario. Why can't we have some insight.

It all depends upon what you intend to do. More and more of the legislation coming before this House, Mr. Speaker, is framed in the most vacuous and vague of terms, and we are unable to judge the merit of the legislation in the void. It is so much placed in the ozone and is so lofty and obtruse that it is impossible to get one's teeth into it. And this is a typical instance of the same kind of thing.

I was looking at a report which was prepared in our office some years ago, giving some idea of how the matters might be approached. I won't spend a great deal of time at it although I'd like to read all 53 pages. At least it has some kind of meat on the bones. At least one can grasp something.

It says sufficient lands should be set aside within the region to provide for the space and locational requirements of the most important space using activities within that region. Because of the scarcity of lands suitable for particular kinds of activities, in setting aside land priority should be given to recreational land requirements; secondly, residential land requirements; thirdly, industrial land requirements; fourthly, commercial and institutional land; and lastly, road requirements.

It follows from this that agricultural land should be given priority only insofar as it provides either recreational use or makes possible the growing of crops which cannot be grown elsewhere in the province and are viewed as having to be produced within the boundaries of the province. To the extent that agricultural land is required for the latter purpose, its priority is on a par with the recreational priorities.

There are whole hosts of various types of approaches and weights to be placed upon the meaning of legislation of this kind if it is to have any meaning at all. In another document produced by the government, two focal points made were questions of order and pattern and working from one to the other.

The intention was to work out some kind of general overall approach. That's perfectly permissible. It can be placed on the basis of transportation routes, it can be given some emphasis to housing needs; any number of things, none of which we know, none of which we have been told. We don't know at what point they are going to zero in. We don't know what value they place on any particular head so far as the province is concerned as to their concepts in regional or in overall governmental planning.

We are kept completely in the dark. One suspects they don't know themselves. And if that would be the case then the bill ought not to be before us until they do know. And the minister, however he may have been harassed in his introductory statement, I don't think intended to stand up and tell us where they place their finger on what they feel are future developmental niceties and necessities. Not at all. I don't know how they mean to proceed. I suspect that instead of getting a master overall plan they are going to go region by region, kind of groping from darkness to darkness, in the hopes of coming out with something that is fairly palatable—

Mr. Sargent: That is the—

Mr. Lawlor: —not in terms of economics and economic planning of regions; not in terms of recreational use; not in terms of preserving vital agricultural lands and soils; not in terms of the best modes whereby human beings may live and how closely they may live together or in what density, but, as in the Halton and Peel situation, on purely political grounds. If that is the case, then this does become an effrontery, a piece of dictatorial claptrap as empty as most of the language therein contained.

If the Treasurer does not mean that, and he means to give it fulfillment and meaning, then let's hear from him. The bill may have far more efficacy than I am willing to accord it at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Well Mr. Speaker, the party on my left, the NDP, are the greatest simplists I ever saw in my life. They believe in government control and I don't know what kind of doubletalk we are getting from down there.

Mr. MacDonald: The member lives by mythology even when it gets so ancient and out of date that it is heavy.

Mr. Reid: Oh, come on. The NDP are the biggest centralizers the world ever saw. What do they think socialist theory is all about? Government control of everything. They know best.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Reid: They know what is best for the people.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Reid: They may end up like an amateur. The best thing you can say about this is that it is the Conservatives and not the NDP.

Mr. MacDonald: —down in that committee.

Mr. Sargent: So I suggest that the NDP right in bed with John White in most things.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Reid says we are centralizers. He says we are centralizers and that is it.

An hon. member: That's right.

Mr. Lawlor: —a little simple-minded.

Mr. MacDonald: He is just aspiring for leadership.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Local mishmash!

Mr. Reid: Well, after seeing what the NDP had over there for leadership, I feel I should be able to give it, too.

Mr. MacDonald: The greatest tribute to the Liberal Party is that no one is following the hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: If you heard the truth for a change—being in this business all my life, I'm—

Mr. Reid: The member for York South mustn't go.

Mr. Sargent: Nothing, I think, scares anyone in this business more than the arrogance of bureaucrats backed up by legislation and this bill is definitely a scary thing.

It will, I think, give nightmares to all of the people who are running municipalities. It will be a field day for land developers. It will create a new batch of millionaires, and, if it does nothing more, it will create, I think, a greater degree of frustration on the part of municipalities across the province. Certainly all of us are in favour of orderly planning but this bill with its absolute authority in the hands of one man, is unbelievable.

Three years ago a man in my riding in Bruce — his name is Angus Rolfe — bought three islands from a border developer who owned these islands off the Bruce Peninsula. All he has been allowed to do in the last three years is pay the taxes on those islands. He can't touch them.

We have thousands of people like this, whose lands are frozen. We say this is the land of opportunity, this is the place to stand—Ontario, we watch the invisible government unfolding in the United States—Watergate.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is an example of the centralization of power in the hands of one man which my leader spoke of so well moments ago. He has the power to tax, the power to assess, the power to destroy. Those are dangerous things, but now you have the power to tell a man what he can do with his land — whether he can sell it or whether he can't.

I think it is a scary situation. It is incredible, Mr. Speaker, that a member of this Legislature, any of the 117 of us, would believe that one man would grant these powers to one man.

I think this bill is the most important bill to come before this House for many years. It is the most important bill we will debate in this House for many years, touching on the lives of each and every citizen of this province, born and unborn. It gives absolute powers to the minister and into the hands of the developers and the people on the inside.

The minister says no one would think that anyone would do these things. Well, those of us who have had to deal with governments in the past 25 years know the complete frustration it is to walk in as an elected official, with your group with you, to these bureaucrats who have legislation to back them up. We all know what a rough time you get. This bill is a bill to supersede any other bill. It is a blank cheque as it were Mr. Speaker to ride high, wide and handsome over the average Ontario citizen.

What happens to families who have held land for generations in this province? Paid taxes on them for generations? They cannot dispose of their land unless they sell the whole kit and caboodle. They can't sell a piece of it or subdivide it off.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): This was done to save the peninsula.

Mr. Sargent: The member is being very unknowledgeable on what I am talking about. I am talking about a principle, a policy, for people of this province.

What freedom has a man left in this province? Giving this man these powers to say that a man can sit in Queen's Park and say what a man in my riding can do with his land. Who does he think he is?

I have had hundreds of phone calls this last weekend about this thing. A man rushed this letter down to me by taxi from the Thornbury area today. I won't read it to the hon. members, but he goes on to say: "Any veteran with property on the escarpment might wonder what has happened to the freedom he risked his life for, if he served in the last war." I could tell you at length of thousands of cases. He says in a clause here: "In the Grey county area, after four years and $40,000 or $50,000, the province has said, 'Scrap the plan. We will appoint our own lackeys in Queen's Park to tell us what to do with our land.'"

We have here in this bill in this Province of Ontario no official plan whatsoever. Harold Greer in his very able column in the Queen's Park View says—

Mr. J. R. Smith: Who?

Mr. Sargent: Harold Greer. And I don't think he writes anything that isn't true; you can say he doesn't. I'll quote what he says and the minister can say that he is printing untruths. But he says:

There is no official plan, there is no unofficial plan for that matter, which the minister must follow in making his decisions. There is no requirement that government regulations be passed setting out criteria he must use. There is no appeal to the cabinet, the Ontario Municipal Board or the courts from his decision.

All this is being done, believe it or not, in the name of encouraging more effective planning at the local level, particularly in regard to the control in use of land. That was how the Speech from the Throne of last March foreshadowed the legislation and that is how the government, aided by the surrealist efforts of its favourite advertising firm, has now presented it to the local governments and the public.

Further, Mr. Speaker, there is no time limit on the minister's enjoyment of these extraordinary powers. There are many sections where the ministerial ad hockery will not be necessary since satisfactory local unofficial plans exist to provide public access and use. But vast stretches still remain where there is no such protection and which have been frozen while the province decided on the policy. Thousands of property owners in these stretches will now individually attend the minister's pleasure. To call this planning, Mr. Speaker is, of course, a desecration of the language.

And I'm not going to talk to a vacant seat. I'll wait until the minister returns. The lives, Mr. Speaker, of thousands of people are tied up in this bill here and this minister, who would control by the stroke of a pen millions and millions of dollars, walks out of the House when I'm talking to him.

Mr. J. R. Smith: He is going to the wash-room—he is a mortal like the hon. member.

Mr. Reid: Not in this bill he isn't. He's God in this bill.

Mr. Sargent: He's been out of that seat about five times this afternoon when members have been talking. And I've asked the Chair to have, not only this minister, but the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Lawrence), the policy minister there. He is not in his seat. And my time is valuable—I know the time of all members is valuable. What the hell are we doing here if we can't get the answers and get to know what is going on?

Mr. J. M. Turner (Peterborough): Order!

Mr. Kennedy: Withdraw that!

Mr. Sargent: I don't know what democracy is coming to because these things are important to the lives of these people.

An hon. member: To the lives of all of us.

Mr. Sargent: On this bill—in the Bruce county area we have now spent $50,000 on the planning—cash moneys down the drain. In Grey county they have committed themselves to $150,000 in planning; that is down the drain now. The explanatory note to clause 1 says in effect: "When a development planning area has been designated by a minister he may cause a redevelopment plan to be prepared for such area."

I say: What happens to the moneys we've paid out which we can't use now?

Clause 3 reads, in effect: Provision is made for a consultation during the preparation of the plan, to which municipalities and other affected persons or organizations and hearing officers will be appointed to receive representations concerning the proposed plan."

The bill itself does not mention consultation. I will read the clause of the bill to you. It does not mention consultation whatsoever in clause 3 at all, and that has to be amended. The amendment should read: "The plan will not receive endorsement until full approval of municipalities is received.

Clause 6 goes on to say: "When a development plan is in effect, the municipalities in the area that are covered by it may not pass bylaws or initiate undertakings that conflict with the plan. In the event of a conflict between the development plan and any official plan or a zoning bylaw in effect in the same area, the development plan prevails to the extent of such conflict."

I say that is wrong. The government says in effect that anything they bring in will prevail against any existing plan. That should be amended to read: "If passed by a referendum of the people."

Clause 7 says, regarding the development of these plans, that provision is made for financial aid to municipalities. That should be changed to read: "financial payment to the municipalities." Why should the municipalities go in hock for hundreds of thousands of dollars—or, across the province for millions of dollars—just at the pleasure of this government to make changes in their plans? It should not read "financial aid," it should be "financial payment."

I suppose I am talking to the wind because this doesn't involve too many people here. I don't know whether or not the members agree with me but it is very important in the overall picture. This bill is kind of an omnibus bill. It covers the whole ball of wax. It isn't the escarpment or anything else. It is the complete power to control everything in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that it is boring to the House for me to read this message when the minister is not here, but I think it would be interesting in the record.

Mr. Speaker, in the minister's absence, I have talked about things I think he should consider in the amendments of certain clauses of the bill insofar as payment to the municipalities is concerned for changing their plans instead of financial aid. I think in each case where he walks into a municipality, instead of having consultation, he must have a referendum from the people. He should ensure that they approve of the plan and then he wouldn't have the power to foist any plan he wants upon any municipality. In the end, the people should have the say.

What happens when a government takes over some land? I will quote to you from this letter which came down by taxi today, Mr. Speaker:

Despite the fact that the government has largely been the architect of the Beaver Valley plan, this plan and planning board has been discarded in favour of a new provincial board with even more stringent controls imposed in the Grey-Bruce area. While these goals are laudable, the preservation of these two natural attractions may turn out to be the greatest curse ever visited upon the people of Grey-Bruce. The Ontario government's method of acquiring them will ultimately affect every taxpayer in both counties. It has already cost the taxpayers of Grey-Bruce thousands of dollars, both in wasted planning and loss of tax revenue on government-owned lands.

Many people fail to realize that the government has not paid education taxes on its land for years and has thus forced taxpayers to pick up its share. Some people may believe that by having the government purchase land, it will be quickly improved and become an asset to the area.

An hon. member: Take a look at Malvern!

Mr. Sargent: Yes, that's right!

We suggest you look at some of the 3,000 or so acres in Collingwood township and you will recognize it as the most run-down and neglected property in the township. Buildings are demolished and it is mostly unworked. Fishing streams have deteriorated. Beavers have built dams, creating swamps and killing valuable forest, warming the streams and making them less habitable for trout and better for suckers. In short their land purchases have been disaster in contrast to other purchases.

Mr. J. R. Smith: Back to nature!

Mr. Sargent: Well, that is what I expect from that member.

To continue:

People from the cities have bought land in Grey-Bruce usually at higher prices than the government. They have restructured the farm buildings and repaired them. And we need people in that area. They rented the land at low cost to the neighbouring farmers and have paid increased taxes. In short, most have proved to be excellent citizens, creating work for carpenters, plumbers, electricians, and adding to the cultural life of the community.

The fact that government planners have tended to approve only the city type of subdivisions with full services, has forced many would-be purchasers to buy larger acreages than would have been the case had they been able to purchase two to 10 acres as a vacation retirement site.

It is our belief that this type of development is much more compatible for Grey-Bruce. Years ago the population of Grey-Bruce was twice as large as it is today. Many farms consisted of only 50 acres. It is our opinion that today Grey-Bruce is capable of sustaining four times as many people as its present population. It could do this with more realistic planning and still retain its natural characteristics.

To achieve this, it is essential that the people of the area have a stronger voice in planning and that more than one or two people are represented on a board of 17 which deals with 40 to 50 per cent of the land involved.

The dictatorial tactics of the present government are unacceptable to the people of Grey-Bruce. We believe, to all the people of the Province of Ontario. If the present attitude of this government persists, we firmly believe that they will be properly dealt with at the next election.

The recent announcement on June 4 by the Ontario government is extremely distasteful and completely negates the principles of democracy, consultation and compromise. It makes a mockery of participatory planning and offers a prime example of an arrogant government which has lost touch with the people for whom it is supposed to govern.

It goes on to say many more pointed things that are bad for the whole area, but I want to get across to the minister this. We are not against orderly planning, but we want the people of the area to have the say of yes or no if they like the plan, and if they approve of it.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): And want to develop it.

Mr. Sargent: And want to develop it. But to the Treasurer I say, absolute power he's giving not to himself, but successive ministers, in effect he is giving it to the bureaucrats, the civil servants. I don't trust them for a moment. I want that power to be left in the hands of the people. And the Treasurer, as a man who has been in public life most of his life, should know that this is not democracy at work.

Mr. Stokes moves adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JUNE 11, 1973

The House resumed at 8 o'clock p.m.

ONTARIO PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT ACT (concluded)

Mr. Speaker: When we rose at 6 we were on second reading of Bill 128. The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder-Bay): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We were discussing Bill 128, An Act to Provide for Planning and Development in Ontario.

"Planning," to me, presumes that you are planning for something, you are planning for a goal, and in the process of planning you set out certain strategies whereby you might achieve those goals.

It also says "development in Ontario." My idea of development, for the length of time that I have been in this Legislature, goes back to the plan for development that was enunciated by this government back in 1954. There have been something like 55 plans of development in the span of years from 1956 until the present time in 1973.

As a result of all of the studies and the surveys that have been undertaken by this government since that time, only two regions in the province have reached the stage where Phase 3 of Design for Development has been accepted as government policy. And I refer to Phase 3, Design for Development: Metropolitan Toronto area, or the Toronto-centred region; and the other one is the Phase 3, Design for Development: Northwestern Ontario.

As a result of recent action and recent commitments made by the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, they have ordained that the 10 economic regions of the province will be reduced to five. The government has disbanded the regional development councils to be replaced by something else which has been announced, but as yet there is no implementation, no action.

I realize that most of the implications in this bill deal particularly with land use planning. Very little is said in this bill about development. I think it's either a misnomer or I have missed something in the bill. I am concerned with both planning and development. As a matter of fact, I recall the first major contribution that I made in this House in 1968. It was in my leadoff speech as the critic for this party for the Department of Lands and Forests. In that speech was something to do with land use planning.

Mr. Speaker, I see no plan in this bill.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Right; there is no plan!

Mr. Stokes: I see a collection of ordinances that are already on the books—here, there, and scattered all over throughout existing statutes. I see this as a pulling together of all of those, with no overall commitment for a plan of strategic land use in the Province of Ontario.

I don't know whether this minister is aware of what has been going on in northern Ontario for the past five years concerning strategic land use planning. We have been dealing specifically with orderly planning and use of Crown land in northern Ontario.

This planning has been under the aegis of the former Department of Lands and Forests, now the Ministry of Natural Resources. We've had advisory committees to the Ministry of Natural Resources and, latterly, advisory committees to the district foresters. I don't know what's going to happen to those committees now, with the reorganization within the Ministry of Natural Resources, but I'm assured there is going to be a continuance of this kind of planning and this kind of dialogue.

It's set up in this way, Mr. Speaker.

The government has closed zones in areas where there's not been sufficient data collected for the ministry to make a determination as to the best and the wisest use of Crown land in northern Ontario, whether it be for resource development, whether it be for recreation or whether it be for just ordinary public use. When they have made that determination they, in their wisdom, and we as members of that committee, suggest what we consider to be the best use for that land.

When we have got all the input from our resource people, mostly within the Ministry of Natural Resources, the planners, the timber supervisors, those concerned with fish and wildlife, those who, in any way, have any responsibility for the policies concerning natural resources or lands and forests, a plan is evolved and it's made public and the public is given an opportunity to voice their opinion pro and con. There isn't a determination well in advance without any consultation.

I'm wondering if the minister is aware of this process of orderly planning—strategic land use planning.

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I am aware of the principle. It's embodied in our bill.

Mr. Stokes: Well, it doesn't say so.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Nonsense!

Mr. Stokes: I'd like to assume that the kind of things I've been talking about for the last five minutes—I'm sure there are many more meticulous grammarians within the ministry and among legislative counsel that the minister could have come up with a much more lucid plan, a much more lucid bill. Then we on this side of the House would, and indeed in talking to some of the minister's own backbenchers they, too, would have been much more ready to accept this bill had the Treasurer been open-handed about it and come clean with just what he expects to do and what he proposes to do with the provisions of this bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, I will be.

Mr. MacDonald: I wonder what bill the minister is sponsoring? Has he got another one over there?

Mr. Stokes: We've had this ongoing consultation with people in northern Ontario for a good long while. My colleague from Rainy River and I sit on these committees.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Great talent!

Mr. Stokes: I sit on one in Sioux Lookout, in the city of Thunder Bay, in Geraldton and in White River. The area under the supervision of the four district foresters covers a wide swath of the geographic entity of this province. I like to think as a result of our deliberations over the past five years that we have come up with a fairly realistic plan for the strategic use of the land and resources that we have in northwestern Ontario.

In many instances we have said because of the unique and the particular characteristics of a certain area, and because of the flora and fauna, that it should be left as it is. Don't touch it; leave it there.

As a result of deliberations by the Quetico Park advisory committee, we have made recommendations to this government as to the future use of that particular facility. While it is pretty nearly 10 months now since we brought down our recommendations, the government for its own reasons has neither accepted nor rejected it. In many other areas where there seems to be a conflict we try to ameliorate that conflict by suggesting the kind of use to which a particular area should be put, whether it is best to be used for resource exploitation, or as a result of a particular characteristic, because of good beach property, or because of good potential for cottage lot development, we are able to come up with a concept of multiple use.

This is the kind of dialogue and this is the kind of planning that seems to have worked very well over the past five years. I am wondering why the minister wouldn't have come up with just such a bill. He says, "I am describing this bill." The minister himself can be pretty articulate at times and he can be very secretive at other times. I recall when this bill was introduced last Thursday evening we were given to understand by the House leader that there would be an extensive statement made by this minister, because this was considered to be an omnibus bill which would be a companion to others that the minister introduced as a result of proposed action on the parkway west and because of proposed action on the escarpment itself. We hoped for that. Indeed we feel the minister was given ample opportunity to stand up and articulate the kind of land-use planning he envisaged would be undertaken as a result of the tremendous powers that are given to him under this Bill 128. He hasn't chosen to take that course; so we can only assume that he is just playing around.

Mr. Sargent: We are not in committee stage!

Mr. Stokes: He is just playing around with land-use planning. He hasn't given any commitment that there will be the kind of consultation between other jurisdictions that will be responsible for the wise use of the land that we have in the Province of Ontario. He hasn't, as in the Design for Development programme that was initiated several years ago by this government, indicated that he has any overall development plan for the Province of Ontario. If he doesn't have a development plan for the Province of Ontario, how on earth is he going to ordain what the land-use plan is for the Province of Ontario?

Mr. Sargent: Right!

Mr. Stokes: So it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is faulty in two major ways. The fact is that he doesn't have any goals, so if he doesn't have any goals how on earth is he going to design a strategic land-use plan—

Mr. Sargent: He is going to retire next year.

Mr. Stokes: —as to how he is going to achieve those goals?

Mr. MacDonald: No guidelines to reach the non-existent goals.

Mr. Sargent: He is getting out; he is getting out.

Mr. Stokes: Yes; and if he doesn't, and let's assume that away back in the catacombs he does have a goal, that he is not prepared to confide in us at the present time, to what degree is there going to be any consultation?

We've been hearing that this is the age of participatory democracy. Indeed, in this pamphlet or this booklet that was put out, "The Background Paper on Planning and Development in Ontario," he mentions that a good deal of the planning that has been undertaken by the municipalities has been very worthwhile and he says:

There is no doubt that the government of Ontario has taken the initiative in the establishment of a working planning programme in this province, but successful implementation will require the full participation of local government. Municipalities in this province have an honourable tradition of land-use planning.

And yet—I think that the minister is being somewhat hypocritical when he suggests that they've had an admirable record—and yet there is no provision for any participation, or any meaningful consultation with the municipalities who have taken the initiative to evolve their own official plans. There is no indication that they will in any way participate meaningfully in the process to attain the goals this minister has set for himself—heaven knows what they are; we don't.

Going back, I remember reading two or three years ago, an article that was written by Professor Norman Pearson, who said: "The one thing that we need in the Province of Ontario"—and this was some three years ago—"is a provincial plan." Now, by no stretch of the imagination, Mr. Speaker, can this be called a provincial plan. There are no objectives at all outlined in this. Sure, we had in a presentation over in the Macdonald Block a few days ago some plans for parkway west and some plans for the Niagara Escarpment; but other than that this vehicle for planning and development in the Province of Ontario is absolutely meaningless.

He has set up subdivision controls in many areas of the province that simply tell you what you can't do. It doesn't say what you can do.

There isn't a week goes by, Mr. Speaker, that I don't get letters from groups of interested people who are very disturbed to find that they can't set up a mobile trailer home in certain areas because this ministry has set up road blocks for really no obvious or apparent reason; people who are being thwarted at every turn because they can't subdivide a farm or a wood lot so that the owner's son can build himself a little home where he might choose to raise his family.

It seems to me it is the same even in unorganized communities like Armstrong, where the government has imposed subdivision control. People in unorganized municipalities have just become so frustrated that they are beginning to think of this minister as the Karl Marx of 1973.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Hardly!

Mr. Stokes: They are!

Mr. Deans: Adolf Hitler maybe, but—

Mr. Stokes: They just seem to feel that this minister is just out of touch with reality and what is needed in the province by way of orderly planning and orderly development. And I don't see anything in this bill, Mr. Speaker, that will change the present situation one iota. Unless the minister is prepared to elaborate on the provisions of this bill and to expand on what he proposes to do once he is given these wide and extraordinary powers, I think that we'll have no alternative but to oppose this bill.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak to this?

The member for York Centre.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was rather disappointed when the minister brought in this bill in the form he did. I always had the idea that perhaps he was one member of the government who really understood the true meaning of consulting, of working with people.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): On what basis?

Mr. Deacon: Because I have had experience in the past where this minister has appeared to appreciate something that others have in the way of ideas and worked with those people in developing those ideas, even though those people weren't necessarily from his own party background.

Consulting doesn't mean bringing out a plan developed by your own experts and then trying to sell the people who are affected by the plan on what you have done. Consulting surely means working with the people who are affected, assisting them to develop their plan and then ensuring that their plan fits and co-ordinates in the total picture.

It seems ironical that my colleague mentioned the situation in Grey County where they have spent $150,000 in preparing a plan that is now thrown out because of this minister's bill, which refuses to recognize the excellent work that these local people have done in developing what they feel as the ultimate—

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Where did the member say this plan was to be—

Mr. Deacon: In Grey! The plan that Grey has done has been put to one side and there is no credit given to Grey for that work.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That's wrong! That's absolutely wrong! He shall have the answer.

Mr. Deacon: And Bruce is the same way.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That's wrong too.

Mr. Deacon: I didn't hear the hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I said that's wrong too.

Mr. Deacon: Well I don't know how. There is no provision in this bill for making use and recognizing—

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The member is trying to make political hay out of something he knows nothing about and he will get the explanation.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Deacon: Well, it's interesting that you have to have these things explained at the end and not at the beginning, as to how they are going to work.

Mr. Reid: That's their idea of consultation.

Mr. Deacon: That's right!

Hon. Mr. Winkler: It's a negative position he takes, that's why.

Mr. Deacon: It is not the position that we take. We are just looking at what was in front of us.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: It isn't? We'll see then, we'll see.

Mr. Deacon: I think the hon. minister should understand that the position we can take is only on what we read in a bill, and what we read in the bill here is that the minister will develop a plan. It doesn't give any indication in the bill that has been drafted that that plan will recognize the work that has already been done and the money that has already been paid out by the areas affected.

Surely what we as a province must do in this bill is spell out our broad goals. That is the provincial responsibility. What are we seeking as a result of the planning for the whole province that we have been asking for for years? We are asking for broad goals, and we should say as a province to the municipalities affected: "These are our goals. We want you to work out in your own way, with our backing financially and any leadership or co-ordination you want us to provide for you, the means of arriving at a plan that fits your aspirations in your local area; plans that fit into those broad goals."

Give a timetable to be met in order to arrive at a plan that they see they want for their area and then co-ordinate the plans so they are not in conflict in the adjoining municipalities or they are not in conflict of the basic goals.

Then we can make use of the common sense that prevails in local areas. Then we can truly recognize the priorities that they have, the aspirations they have, and know that those aspirations will certainly be met and can be met within the broad goals that we set to begin with.

People are not so parochial in their points of view that they will do something for their own benefit that is not in the long-term interests of the total provincial scene. They don't want to destroy the basic strength and the desirable aspects of this province by taking a petty position in their planning.

But unfortunately, in the way we have set this up in this bill it's all a Queen's Park-centred plan, drafted by Queen's Park experts to sell it to the local municipalities. It's not building on a strong local base. This bill is typical of the legislation that is causing the people of this province to be disenchanted with their provincial government. It is a bill that is based from the top down, and that is no way to build any solid provincial plan.

When he considers the amendments we bring forward to this bill, I would hope that this minister will recognize that this bill and his long-term plan will be far stronger, if he will introduce clauses and accept clauses that place the responsibility, the real base of planning, in the local areas and in the local jurisdictions within those designated areas. I say to the minister it is wrong to have in this bill an absolute open opportunity for the minister to designate any area he wishes, without going to this Legislature, as an area that comes under this legislation. It is vital that we don't have given to any single individual in this province the power that is sought for in this legislation.

So I urge the members of the House to join my colleagues and members on this side of the House in turning down this bill.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Algoma.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some comments on this bill.

Mr. MacDonald: I'll bet he is in favour of it.

Mr. Gilbertson: Before I do, I would like to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of the House that there is a class in the gallery up here that travelled 500 miles to come to see what we do down at Queen's Park.

Mr. Deans: We knew there was a good reason for the member getting up.

Mr. MacDonald: They must be pretty disappointed.

Mr. Gilbertson: I just thought I would bring it to the members' attention. They are from north of Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Reid: They are watching the member pretty carefully.

Mr. Gilbertson: I would like to make some comments on this bill and I couldn't think of a more appropriate time than at this time when I have some people from the home area who know the situation.

Mr. Deacon: Better than the member does.

Mr. Stokes: I'll bet they are from Searchmont.

Mr. Gilbertson: Well, not far away.

Mr. Stokes: They don't like subdivision control.

Mr. Gilbertson: I appreciate the minister's concern about planning and the land-use bill and all about the Niagara Escarpment. I think he does know the problem we have, especially north of Sault Ste. Marie in regard to trying to have some rhyme and reason up there so that people can build a home where they have been raised and lived all their lives. They have got to the place where they are now able to build themselves a reasonably nice home, but the way the restrictions are it seems almost impossible to get a permit. I would appreciate it very much if this government could see fit to try to get some type of planning for the people who live in the area and are involved.

Mr. Reid: Why doesn't the member go off to the Speaker in his office as he does when we speak?

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

Mr. Gilbertson: I would appreciate it very much if something could be done. This is a large area and it is under the planning board of Sault Ste. Marie at the present time. Naturally people who are raised 50 miles away from Sault Ste. Marie resent to a certain extent that the city is coming in telling them where they can build and what they can do and what they can't do.

I am sure that the people up there want to have some planning. They want to have some rhyme or reason to the development up there north of Sault Ste. Marie. I know we have had representation go from Queen's Park up there. I am looking forward to the ministry coming up with some plan that will be reasonably suitable that we can live with north of Sault Ste. Marie.

I just felt I should bring this to the minister's attention at this time.

Mr. Reid: While the member had some people up in the gallery

Mr. Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak to this bill? The member for Rainy River.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't really going to comment on this bill because I think we have covered the essentials fairly well. It is strange that the member for Algoma who just spoke had an opportunity on Saturday afternoon on Compass North on CBC radio to express the views that he is expressing this evening.

The member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa), and I, who had made a commitment to be on that radio programme along with the hon. member, were present. Yet the hon. member, for one reason or another, didn't see fit to show up and express his views on northern Ontario and these matters that affect us.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Shame!

Mr. Gilbertson: I had important things to do in my riding and that's why I wasn't there.

Mr. Reid: We all do and we all did, but those of us who made a commitment to be there were there.

Mr. Gilbertson: I couldn't think of a better place to express one's wants and wishes than right here in front of the minister.

Mr. Good: Well, what about telling the people of Canada, then?

Mr. Speaker: Order please! We are dealing with item 5 on the order paper.

Mr. Reid: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I want to review some of the matters in regard to the Planning Act. We have gone through all the great pronouncements, with the usual side-show effects, dating from 1954, through my time here since 1967, with Design for Development: Phase 1; and Design for Development: Phase 2.

Can you see, fellows? It is all right.

We have gone all through this charade over the years and the end results of all these great pronouncements and announcements of the government have been the same. All the power, all the decision-making has been drawn to Queen's Park.

My colleague from Thunder Bay spoke about the land-use planning advisory committees in northern Ontario under the aegis of the Ministry of Natural Resources. One thing that I thought he might have mentioned, and he did touch on it, was the Northern Ontario Development Council. Mr. Speaker, this was probably the most effective single body in northwestern Ontario. It didn't have that taint or tinge of self-interest that the Northwest Chamber of Commerce has or that might apply sometimes to the Northwestern Ontario Municipal Association. We probably had one of the best, most efficient, intelligent, interested, public-participating development councils in all of Ontario, with some very good people on that council.

That council was given the job of coming up with a development plan for northwestern Ontario which it did within the allotted time. It came up with a development plan which was acceptable to the people of northwestern Ontario because they designed it themselves. The government, Mr. Speaker, accepted that plan and said, "That is great. We wish all the economic councils across the Province of Ontario could have been as good and as efficient and as knowledgeable and as intelligent as the Northwestern Development Council."

Very shortly thereafter, Mr. Speaker, the minister responsible announced the demise of the Northern Ontario Development Council along with the development councils in the other nine regions of the province. We have yet to see what is going to replace that structure. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it was a deliberate murder done with forethought, done with full knowledge.

Mr. Deans: With malice!

Mr. Reid: Done with malice aforethought, or before thought, whatever it is. But done deliberately by the government because it was afraid that that development council was going to keep pushing the government and demand the kind of programmes that the government had accepted under that scheme and under that plan. There was no way that the then minister, the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough), wanted anybody telling him what the government should be doing. Rather it was that the government would tell them and tell us.

So the government, by edict, did away with the Northern Ontario Development Council and the other nine in the different regions of Ontario.

Mr. Stokes: It just withdrew the financial help.

Mr. Reid: Certainly, the government didn't murder it; didn't kill it. It just cut off the legs and arms and removed other vital organs out of the body and left nothing. The government wouldn't listen to the pleas and the requests of those people who had worked so hard within the region itself to do the planning for their own area.

Mr. Speaker, we see the results of all this in this bill before us. It has always been the tendency of this government to centralize the decisions, to draw all power into Queen's Park where one superminister could wield almost ultimate and god-like control over the affairs of this province, over planning and over development.

And the Treasurer got up Thursday evening when he introduced the bill, when we were going to begin to debate it, and said, as he is wont to, throwing his arms out wide: "Trust me. You can trust me. Once I make a decision it's infallible."

He has a short memory because, obviously, he would have remembered that it was less than a month ago that it was he, and he alone, who brought forth in this House an abortion called the seven per cent energy tax which he was forced to withdraw within two weeks, or less.

Mr. Speaker, I was speaking to some of my colleagues over the dinner hour in respect to Bill 99, the Police Bill, which I believe was introduced in this House of 1964. That bill, Mr. Speaker, you'll recall, would have given unprecedented power to the then Attorney General if it had been passed. It would have allowed the minister, the Attorney General, to incarcerate, to hold captive, a person in this province without due process of law, merely on the whim of that minister and that Attorney General and those advisers who might surround him.

Mr. Speaker, in this chamber tonight, we're debating a bill that, while it may not offend civil rights as much as that particular bill did, gives all power and all discretion to one minister.

I say, sir, respectfully to you, that there's a parallel in this case, that it again is symptomatic of the power-crazy, power-hungry centralizing people that sit across the floor from us.

May I digress for a minute, Mr. Speaker, and I don't want to get overly partisan about this, but my friends to the left, with that great unction they are known for, that great self-righteousness for which they are well known—

Mr. Deans: How can the member say something that makes no sense?

Mr. Reid: —the greatest centralizers of any political party that exists in the Province of Ontario, or Canada, get up and bemoan the centralizing tendencies of this government.

Mr. Lewis: The member should not forget he is fighting them, not us. He is forgetting.

Mr. Reid: Well, I want to make the hypocrisy on that side clear to the House, because they're very simple-minded, and I don't know whether they see the irony—

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): He does that regularly.

Mr. Reid: —and the hypocrisy in their position.

Mr. MacDonald: It's the member's ignorance, not our hypocrisy!

Mr. Reid: And the only fare we have, Mr. Speaker, the only thing that I can envision being worse than this minister, or some other of his ilk, having the power that is given to him under this bill, is that party over there.

What does this bill do? It gives one man and his advisers, who have no responsibility to the people of this province at all—they're not elected representatives—the advisers to the minister and the minister himself that God-like authority to direct the lives of the people of this province, their property, their whole being at his whim and his discretion.

I'm not sure the minister here has read McRuer on civil rights, civil liberties, and so forth, but surely McRuer's point is that there is already too much discretion in the arms, or in the tender hands or mercy of various government bodies, commissions and so forth, that are not responsible to any real group of people.

The minister stands in his place and promises us that there will be participation, that there will be consultation, when McRuer, who came down with one of the reports, Mr. Speaker, that all parties I think have philosophically accepted in this House, said that these wide discretionary powers should not be available to anyone, including the government. He went through, Mr.

Speaker, a number of ministries and pointed out specific instances where, in the legislation, wide powers of discretion were given to the minister, that at his whim, people's civil rights, economic rights, all the rights that are embodied in various statutes, common law and moral law in this province, are at the whim of one man or one ministry. He said that should not be so. And in direct contradiction to that, the minister brings forth a bill that I feel he is not even aware of himself, nor of its consequences and ramifications.

Now, supposing for a moment that we, on this side, had some kind of confidence in this minister, which I, Mr. Speaker, for one, do not have, to exercise this bill intelligently on behalf of the province and people of Ontario; what happens when this particular minister leaves this ministry? If we admit that this minister has the competence—when he goes, and he has already announced that he is going, which is probably the greatest thing since Canada's centennial, when he goes who are we going to be stuck with in that office?

Supposing the present Solicitor General (Mr. Yaremko), for instance, was exercising that authority. Doesn't that send shivers up and down your spine? Or some of the other members and ministers over there we could name, who are equally incompetent and equally insensitive to the problems of the people of this province. Where are we left then?

Mr. Speaker, others before me who have spoken on the bill have pointed out already that it is nefarious in its intent. It doesn't even pretend or begin to solve the problems of planning in the Province of Ontario. We are giving the minister wide open, carte blanche powers to do what he feels should or shouldn't be done in the Province of Ontario without any guidelines, without any idea of how this power, unlimited within this bill, is going to be used.

The people of the province have no idea what the minister has back there in the cobwebs of his mind—he, his advisors or his successors. And the minister, who a month ago made one of the greatest political blunders, as well as one of the greatest economic blunders, in trying to bring down an energy tax—which we understand he and he alone was responsible for—asks us to take on faith that he knows where he is going and what he is doing, when our experience with him less than month ago was absolutely to the contrary.

Mr. Gilbertson: Why bring that up now? Why not forget about it?

Mr. Reid: There's the great spokesman for the Conservative Party in northern Ontario. Where was he when this minister brought in a seven per cent energy tax which would have been to the detriment of everybody who lives in northern Ontario? Where was the member for Algoma? I didn't hear him speaking in the Legislature that night or that day or since that time about what kind of a scheme that was that was going to affect us in the north.

Mr. Gilbertson: We got it changed.

Mr. Reid: Oh, the member didn't get it changed at all.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! Order!

Mr. Reid: These members are like a bunch of trained seals. When the minister throws them a fish, they bark. Other than that, they are as mute as stones.

Mr. Gilbertson: You are just jealous of the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reid: I am sure the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, is not a fan of Shakespeare, but when I look at him and some of his colleagues back there, I think of that line in Julius Caesar: "You blocks, you stones, you less than senseless things." That quotation applies to members opposite, each and every one.

Mr. Speaker: Order; let's get back to the bill. Order! Back to the bill please.

Mr. Lewis: Will there ever be another like the member?

Mr. E. M. Havrot (Timiskaming): God help us if there is another like the leader of the NDP!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reid: Keep it going, I need a drink.

Now that I have made my introductory remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the principle of the bill.

It has been stated by my leader and others in this party that we will oppose this bill. We consider it one of the most important pieces of legislature ever to come before this House. It's far-reaching consequences, I don't think are appreciated at this moment by any of us in this chamber. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, it's a travesty of the democratic system that a minister in this period of time in the history of the Province of Ontario should even have the nerve or temerity to bring forth a bill like this before this Legislature asking for these powers in the Province of Ontario.

And I say to you most respectfully, sir, that it negates all the great speeches, all the great pronouncements, all the regional governments, all their designs for development, and everything else—all their great blandishments about participatory democracy and consultation, advisory committees, and the whole bundle. I say it negates all those things, Mr. Speaker. It is a fearful bill. My colleague from Grey-Bruce said it was scary. Indeed it is, especially in the hands of this minister who then has untrammelled powers in the Province of Ontario. I say, sir, that we cannot support this bill; nor will we.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak? The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Lewis: He's just warming up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't intend to take very long. I thought I might exchange with you some pleasantries in the absence of the minister in order that he might hear what I have to say since, in fact, I consider it important though he may not.

Mr. Reid: He got tired of listening to the member for Algoma.

Mr. Deans: No, I'm sure he didn't. Like the rest of us, he got tired of listening to the member for Rainy River.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Now, be generous!

Mr. D. R. Timbrell (Don Mills): I am. I only clapped once.

Mr. Deans: The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that the legislation before us is something which I find rather difficult to understand.

Mr. Reid: The feeling is mutual, that's for sure.

Mr. Deans: The member is absolutely right.

Mr. Reid: Reading a statement of the member's is—

Mr. Deans: I might say that the asides of the hon. member were far more to the point than the main theme of his speech.

Mr. Lewis: That credits the asides with more than they merit.

Mr. Deans: Maybe the member is right.

I can't help thinking, looking at this legislation, that it presents a very jumbled-up view of the ministry's thinking. I feel this legislation ought to have come at the end of a process rather than at this point. To put into the hands of this government the kind of power that this legislation obviously is intended to put there, leaves me just a little bit worried about the future of the Province of Ontario.

I wonder, for example, what kinds of goals the government has set and intends to set in terms of both economic and aesthetic values? I wonder whether government has given any real thought, right off the bat, to what it hopes to achieve by way of economic redistribution, by way of the preservation of the aesthetic values of the Province of Ontario and whether or not it has in mind some overall programme of development and preservation for the Province of Ontario that might well become the cornerstone or the foundation upon which legislation such as this is built.

When I stopped and thought about it, I couldn't help feeling that if there had been any broad goals that the government had had in its mind, it would have enunciated those in guidelines, both in terms of the way the province might be affected and how the provincial government might involve itself in the financing and the general backup support measures that are required in order to ensure the guidelines are brought into force. Secondly, it would have enunciated the government's own intentions with regard to its own programmes and how those programmes would be integrated into an overall plan for the Province of Ontario.

It worries me when I think of the dismal failures of this government in the areas of greatest need. I think about the way that it has failed to come to grips with proper planning of airport development, for example. I wonder whether in this overall plan the government is talking about, it has even given any thought to how and where and under what form and within what jurisdiction the kind of air transportation policy of the government might be formed. That is a key to any overall development plan that the government might begin to bring about.

In the Hamilton area I wonder how the government brings into context its inability to deal with something like the jurisdiction of the bay with regard to the kind of planning that the city of Hamilton wanted to undertake. This government cut the feet out from underneath it when it made an attempt to plan the landfill in some areas of the bay.

I worry because I can see the government not being able to come out with programmes of development and programmes of planning which are going to be of any value to the Province of Ontario. I wonder how the government is going to deal with the very broad and important area of the preservation of the fruit belt? How does this government view that and how is it going to integrate the various official plans which it talks about into some kind of overall policy that will preserve the fruit belt and recognize its worth and the way in which it must play a role in the future development of the Province of Ontario.

I wonder what the government intends in the development of an official development programme for the Province of Ontario for the lakefront properties? How this government views access to and the preservation of the lakefronts in the Province of Ontario. And whether or not we could expect to see guidelines, in order that municipalities and planning areas, when they're doing their planning, would have an idea what the government has in store for them, so that their plan doesn't conflict one with the other, or for that matter, at all with the government's plans.

Or I wonder what the government has in mind by way of guidelines for a redistribution of job opportunities in the Province of Ontario. Because that too falls within the very broad confines of this bill: the Act to provide for planning and development in Ontario. And it is very much a part of section 6. I wonder also just when we're going to hear what the government guidelines, goals and policies are in regard to trying to reallocate and redistribute the economic opportunities across the province, so that everyone has a chance to take part. Because that's all part of developing an overall plan of development for the Province of Ontario. And no small region, no municipality, no planning area, can possibly come to grips with the responsibilities that are being thrust upon it by this government, unless there's a very clear understanding of what the government has in mind in these areas.

What is the government's view of inhibiting the unrestricted growth in the large municipalities these days? Does the government have a policy of trying to maintain some reasonable size to municipalities and stopping the topsy-like growth that's been occurring over the last 10 or 15 years?

Before any area can come to grips with a development plan, it has to know where the government stands in that regard. What is the government's intention in regard to a consolidation and an implementation of some kind of a social policy to meet the needs of the many hundreds of thousands of people who are trying to struggle through in this province? Because that too is part of any kind of development plan.

And it's about these things that I worry. Because to come in here at this point and to introduce legislation which grants all kinds of powers, but which, in fact, doesn't set out clearly for anyone to see the objectives and goals the government has in mind, is to ask us to vote blindly. It is to ask us to place faith in a government in which we have no faith. It is to ask the people of the Province of Ontario to accept the goodwill of the government when, in fact, the government has shown by its very example over the last year and a half, that it has no goodwill towards the people of the Province of Ontario. It has shown this government is not a government of consultation, but is rather a government of implementation, implementation with or without the support of the people of the area. And that's evident both east and west of Toronto.

And it's about these things that I worry when I see a bill like this coming up. I have difficulty imagining this government going out and involving the average man on the street and getting his views of what would be best for the municipality he lives in, or for the area immediately surrounding the municipality. And the reason I have difficulty in imagining it is because during the last while, I haven't seen any examples of it. That's why I have trouble imagining it.

And so, when you ask us to support this kind of legislation, you're asking us to support a blind policy. A policy that we have absolutely no idea of, other than that the minister, on behalf of the government, is asking that he be given extremely broad powers. But the purpose of those broad powers and the general direction of the government has to be spelled out much more clearly before I can bring myself to support this kind of thing.

I suggest to you that before you brought this legislation in there should have been established for the next 10 years a set of goals in the Province of Ontario. Goals on what you're trying to achieve in economic growth, economic development, growth of municipalities and in things that affect people. You should have, at that point, set out broad guidelines. And those guidelines should have encompassed things like the preservation of the Niagara Escarpment, the preservation of the fruit belt, a guarantee that the lakeshore properties were going to be preserved and given an opportunity, that people of the province were going to be given an opportunity for access.

And beyond that, there are additional things that should have been done. And then once having set out those broad guidelines, the government should have set out, in very broad terms, its plans. The plans, not only of what it wanted and how it wanted that achieved, but how it was prepared to involve itself in trying to achieve those things. It should have set out what kind of participation it intended to provide, how much financing it was prepared to provide, how it was prepared to engage in meaningful dialogue—not only with the average man on the street, but with the many corporate giants in the province—to try and ensure that there was more equitable economic development across this province. And that should have been the third step.

And beyond that, having once set out those three steps, there should have been then the beginning of the implementation through an amalgamation of the bylaws that are already in existence; the local neighbourhood plans that have been developed; the official plans of the various regional governments that are being set up across the province. These then should have been incorporated into one overall plan. There would have to be a little bit of sorting out to make sure that they were complementary one to the other, rather than abrasive, one fighting against the other. That should have been the fourth step in the minister's programme.

Then finally there should have been general implementation of all this, once you got it under way. There should have been clear direction from the government of how it intended to involve itself, both financially and morally. This would ensure that this plan, once it had gone through the four or five steps that I mentioned, reached a point where a person in the province would be able to tell, if he moved from point A to point B, exactly what the conditions were going to be there. He would know whether it was possible for him to develop industrially or to locate in a residential site in that area. He would know what the chances were for his children, what the opportunities for education were, what kind of social and recreational facilities were available there for him.

This is the kind of thing that is important in a development plan of the kind that the minister talks about. And it isn't here. Not in the statements of the minister, not in the slides that were shown in the MacDonald Block, not in the statements of any of the other ministers.

There is no co-ordination from one ministry to the next. There is no clear indication that there is even any dialogue between ministries. Therefore it is absolutely impossible for anyone sitting outside the management board of cabinet to clearly understand the direction the province is going to take, or the way it will be directed by this ministry or any other.

Until you do those kind of things, until you set out what your policies are in the areas of greatest need and greatest concern, the areas where you are getting the greatest number of people across the Province of Ontario asking for assistance and guidance, there is no point in bringing in this kind of legislation. This kind of legislation can't work until people clearly understand what the government's intentions are.

For those reasons and many others that I don't intend to take up the time of the House with, I'll oppose the bill.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to add my voice to all the others on this side of the House who have expressed considerable dismay with this planning and development legislation, and to make some comment, some brief comment in passing.

Mr. Speaker, as we understand it, this bill flows from the Throne Speech emphasis on land use, land reparation. It is an effort on the part of the government to retrieve what has been lost in land use planning for the last several years in southern Ontario. This piece of legislation is the centrepiece of the three bills which were introduced about a week ago, along with the major audio visual presentation in the MacDonald Block. It was meant to say to the Province of Ontario, I think, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservative government has a major commitment to reverse the patterns of folly which have characterized land use in southern Ontario over the last generation.

For a great many of us who heard the Throne Speech or read it afterwards or wanted to believe in its substance, the bills were anticipated with some enthusiasm. It obviously has struck the Treasurer strange, and others strange, that the opposition should not rush to embrace that which they finally disgorged.

Hon. Mr. White: I have not heard anyone talk yet who has understood the bill.

Mr. Lewis: Well then, sir, you are a trifle presumptuous—which is perhaps one of the problems of this government.

Hon. Mr. White: Although the member wasn't here to hear it.

Mr. Lewis: I was here to hear much of this debate, and took the trouble to go upstairs and get the instant Hansard to read that which I hadn't heard.

May I go further, Mr. Speaker, and say that what we found in these bills—in this bill in particular—both bitterly disappointing and fundamentally flawed—were two factors in particular. One is that the so-called process of consultation in this planning and development bill is weak and ineffectual. It's a weak masquerade for arbitrariness on the part of government.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I think that the minister and his colleagues view this kind of legislation as fashionable legislation rather than serious legislation. You think there is some kind of modern, contemporary value in having some rules and guidelines for land use planning, but you pay it no adherence whatsoever in substance. Mr. Speaker, if I can draw your mind back to the presentation at the MacDonald Block, there was barely any reference given whatsoever to this, the single most important bill that the Treasurer pretended to bring forward. All of the emphasis was on the parkway belt, another fundamentally flawed bill and the Niagara Escarpment Act for which there is no redemption as a bill, I may say.

But in terms of this bill, almost nothing. Then when the minister stood to speak the other night, I guess it was Thursday at about 10 o'clock, he spoke for seven or eight minutes on the entire package, giving the most cursory overview of this piece of legislation.

Hon. Mr. White: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I didn't speak for seven or eight minutes. I shouted over continuous heckling from the other side. I think not a single word that I said was heard by anybody in this chamber. So if one thinks I am under some obligation to shout for three-quarters of an hour, they've got another think coming.

Mr. Lewis: I may say that I have never known you so deferential, so timid, so diminutive a man, that you wouldn't shout over opposition heckling. Has your skin become so thin since the problems of the last few months that you can no longer cope with the cut and thrust of debate? Is the Treasurer so weak, has his timidity overcome him thus, that he stands in the House and says: "I only spoke for eight minutes, because I was obstructed by a vociferous opposition?" Who is he kidding?

Hon. Mr. White: Cut and thrust?

Mr. Lewis: Who is he kidding? You, my man, my friendly man, I say to you, through the Speaker, you spoke for eight minutes—and he was fighting to fill that much time, because he had nothing to say, he had not a blessed thing to say.

Mr. Reid: He was finished in 30 seconds.

Mr. Lewis: He brings in a pretentious piece of puffery and calls it legislation. Then he tries to justify it for three or four minutes; and when the opposition takes him on, he talks about opposition heckling. Come now; he loves heckling, he thrives on it, he dreams about it; and God knows what he would do without it. So let's not use that as a pretence.

The minister's bill is flawed, I say through the Speaker, because the consultative process is a shambles. It is surprising that after all this time, the minister wouldn't have realized that.

But the bill is also flawed, Mr. Speaker, in another equally important respect. The bill has no application, in the minister's own words, to all of the areas of land use planning in southern Ontario—which are surely critical. As a matter of fact, in the minister's own words, the only area to which the bill has application is to the parkway belt. That's all. Just that one proposal. Even that proposal will be very difficult to defend when we get to it a little later on this evening.

But that the bill should not have been introduced to apply to all the other contentious areas in southern Ontario, is unforgivable. It demonstrates how laughable is the content of the bill. Because if the government introduces planning and development legislation in 1973, then it must use it to apply to those areas under greatest development pressure and areas of greatest public debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Before 1984!

Mr. Lewis: Presumably before 1984! Perhaps even before the year 2000.

Let me tell you something else, Mr. Speaker, as I know you would wish to hear it from me, sir. I appreciate your passionate nod of agreement.

Mr. D. R. Irvine (Grenville-Dundas): Don't presume too much.

Mr. Lewis: I want to look at those two points in reverse order. I want to point out to the Treasurer, through you, sir, that under his aegis and under the aegis of this government, we have succeeded in destroying the Toronto-centred region plan—a plan which was supposed to have some primary application to southern Ontario. Instead of bringing in this bill to rescue that plan and to intrude principles of democratic land use planning so that the Toronto-centred region plan would again be viable, we don't apply it to the areas of greatest pressure. May I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that in the area of Cedarwood and the airport, what we have done is not move development to the east, as the plan indicates it should be done, but we have extended the boundaries of Metropolitan Toronto in a way which simply adds to the urban contagion that already besets this metropolitan area.

Mr. Timbrell: That's not right.

Mr. Lewis: That is precisely what has happened with the Toronto-centred region plan and the development of Cedarwood and the airport.

And the provincial Treasurer says that this Act does not apply to Cedarwood. How can he possibly defend that?

He had an Act, which comes in. He has Cedarwood, where he is going to acquire a vast acreage of land in the public sector. He has the single most ambitious development he has undertaken in I don't know how many years; it is tied directly in with the absurdity of a second international airport in the western part of Metropolitan Toronto.

He has problems of leasing land back to builders. He has problems of subdivision development. He has problems of commercial-industrial balance. He has problems of agricultural and recreational preservation. He has every single planning problem there could be and he says with positive enthusiasm that this, the Planning and Development Act, will not apply to Cedarwood.

What utter nonsense! How can one have any faith in this kind of legislation if it has no application to the most crucial area of southern Ontario?

And, Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer then says, as did the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Lawrence), that the plan had absolute application to the parkway belt. The parkway belt manages to deliver the final blow to the Toronto-centred region plan. The TCR said development should be to the east of Metropolitan Toronto, so this extraordinary cabinet and planning board introduces a parkway belt to attract development west of Toronto; to build highways and transmission lines west of Toronto; to encourage Burlington, Oakville and Mississauga to expand north, yet again to increase urban sprawl west of Toronto and to destroy whatever modest remnant may have been left of the planning principles that John Robarts introduced several years ago. Of what use then is the Treasurer's Planning and Development Act, coming in as it does as a fait accompli in the parkway belt and without any application to Cedarwood and the airport?

It is worse than that, Mr. Speaker. It doesn't have application, as it now stands, to the escarpment. The escarpment is under ministerial order; the escarpment is under zoning bylaws; the escarpment is clearly open to the kind of principles which are embodied in this bill, and the Escarpment Act talks about analogous principles which will govern the escarpment commission. But the escarpment commission is setting out on an entirely new path, something called development controls. And that will be judged and exercised in isolation from this bill. So again we have the absurdity of a major piece of legislation which manages specifically to exempt the Niagara escarpment except by association rather than by direction.

And, Mr. Speaker, may I call your attention to Haldimand-Norfolk? The minister stands in the Legislature, and in order to prevent the private developers from acquiring land in areas where the new town might be built, places a vast area of townships under control—under subdivision control, under ministerial order. He then says, with a sigh of relief, although impish self-congratulation is all over his face, that the developers made a mistake and bought the land in a township which in fact will not be the township designated for the development of the new town—and he leaves it there. He has an area under ministerial order. He has a whole vast Haldimand-Norfolk development plan. He has Nanticoke; he has Texaco; he has Stelco. He has all of the ingredients for major development in the province, and Haldimand-Norfolk has not yet come under this planning and development bill.

Perhaps the minister would explain that to me.

Hon. Mr. White: It hasn't been passed yet, for one thing.

Mr. Lewis: Pardon? Oh, I see, a little chuckle, a little cherubic chuckle: "It hasn't been passed yet, for one thing."

Let me tell the minister something, through you, Mr. Speaker. If he was going to have Haldimand-Norfolk under the purview of this bill, he would have announced it by now. He was very quick to say the parkway belt was included, but he is very quick not to say that Haldimand-Norfolk is included.

So he has Cedarwood at one end and Haldimand-Norfolk at the other. The two areas of greatest developer pressure in the province. The two areas which obviously and urgently cry out for some scheme of land-use control. Yet the Treasurer brings in the bill and his introductory remarks he makes absolutely no reference to its application to these areas at all.

Well then, Mr. Speaker, the bill is a farce. Why else does the government bring in a bill if not to control the single greatest economic and social undertaking that it has in southern Ontario? Perhaps, the Treasurer will be embarrassed. Perhaps he will be subjected to sufficient public pressure in these areas that he will one day try to extend the bill to cover the Haldimand-Norfolk planning area or to cover the airport in Cedarwood or maybe even to cover certain of the regional plans emanating from the regional governments. Let me tell the Treasurer that his refusal to bring them under this bill at the point at which it was introduced speaks volumes about his intention and his motive.

Let me go to the other point I want to make, Mr. Speaker.

The Treasurer is amiably waving to my former colleague in this House, Walter Pitman, in the gallery. He finds his only comfort in the galleries these days, I may say. But you will be pleased to know, Mr. Speaker, that without advance consultation, but with that extrasensory perception which characterizes New Democrats, I know that Walter Pitman agrees with every word I am saying. I know that and I don't have any qualms about it at all.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): That would make Walter Pitman nauseous.

Mr. Lewis: As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the former member for Peterborough spoke often and feelingly in this House about land-use planning throughout this province and in the southeastern part of the province in particular. He would also, therefore, agree with the next point I want to make about the nature of the consultative process.

The minister has no right to ask us to believe uncritically in the consultation process which this bill constructs because there is not a thing in his short tenure as minister that would suggest he believes in the consultative process except as some kind of intellectual exercise. The Treasurer is a very cerebral man. I refuse to abuse him the way some people have abused him. He is an intellectual man, but he is steeped in it. He has lost perspective entirely. He doesn't understand what normal, common, working people in the Province of Ontario believe in any more, what they are involved in, how they feel about their own lifestyles, their own regional governments, and all of the decisions which affect them. It is the patrician view of plebeians.

That's the minister's problem, and it is inherent in the consultative process set out in this bill. There is not a thing that we have experienced in the last several years, or the last several months under his particular tenure, which could point us in any other direction.

The minister announces arbitrarily that he is going to build Cedarwood, a city of a quarter of a million people. I would like him to stand in this Legislature and tell us by way of his reply on second reading what advance consultation there was in that case.

Tell us about the advance consultation for moving Cedarwood from a community of 50,000 in the first Toronto-centred region report to a community of 250,000 now, and what public participation there was in the process. Stand and tell us what public participation and consultation there was in the process of Ontario's joining with the federal government in the decision on the airport. Tell us about what public participation there has been of a meaningful kind in the Northwestern Design for Development plan, subsequent to phase 1, in which people other than certain of the members of this Legislature have played a basic part.

Hon. Mr. White: Others have played a part.

Mr. Lewis: Not at all!

Mr. Stokes: Barely discernible!

Mr. Lewis: One can barely find what has happened in either the northwest or the northeast under Design for Development in terms of major public participation. Look at the shambles that falls—

Mr. Stokes: As a matter of fact, the fellow responsible is sitting over in the Frost Building since the government dumped the North-eastern Ontario Development Council. The Treasurer hasn't come up with the advisory committee. The Treasurer has one man in the Frost Building who is responsible for the Design for Development, phase 3, for north-western Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: That is intelligent heckling, my friend. I will make room for that always.

Look at the regional government plans that lie in shambles at the minister's feet with all of the four plans that he just introduced for west and east of Metro, clearly insupportable in several areas and obviously provoking tremendous antagonism from local people. As a matter of fact, the member for Oshawa (Mr. McIlveen), just knowing that I would mention regional government, fled the House before I got to it because of the feeling in his own city.

Mr. MacDonald: Otherwise he would—

Hon. Mr. White: I observed most of the member's own supporters did too.

Mr. Lewis: Well, if my members fled the House they're discerning; he fled in fear!

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: He fled in fear. There is a different quality to the two.

What about transportation? What about the government's transportation policy? These fatuous exercises in public approval of expressways in London and expressways in Brantford. The minister calls that consultation? This government, whether it's regional government, or the airport, or Design for Development, or modern expressways, doesn't understand what the consultative process is.

And the minister, is bewildered and outraged by the degree of public disquiet and discontent, just as he was bewildered and outraged by the energy tax response and the sales tax response.

Mr. Stokes: They are going to pave 403 green and call it the green belt.

Mr. Lewis: That's the problem of being detached from mortal man. You lose touch with what it is that people are largely concerned about. And the minister can huff at it and laugh at it all he will, but he must admit that things are not exactly on the rails for the Tory party, and certainly not for his omnibus ministry.

Mr. Stokes: It's on the skids, not the rails.

Mr. Lewis: Now, that surely is the crux of it. This piece of legislation, as my colleagues have shown—starting with the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) this afternoon and ending just before me with the member for Wentworth tonight—what my colleagues have shown to the minister is a very simple proposition.

For this government consultation occurs after the plan is placed before the people. There is no such thing for the minister as consultation in advance of the plan. He has total contempt for the consultative process except as a tool to confirm what is already dictated by his ministry. That's his view of consultation; confirmation after the event. It's a terribly manipulative view of consultation. It means that the minister takes the consultative process and manipulates it through information officers, through public hearings, through all of the elaborate processes of government to emerge with the plan, with almost no amendment, that he initially introduced.

That's a total inconsistency. It has no place in public planning. It has no place in the consultative process. And in this total piece of legislation the proposition that community groups, that local authorities, that individuals should be given support by way of skilled personnel or planning consultants, or advisory boards to formulate a plan in advance, or to participate in the initial formation, has no place in his bill. His bill simply exists as a way of providing approval to a fait accompli.

Well, that's absurd! The minister can't ask us to support that kind of thing. That's not consultation. That's not planning. That's a masquerade for a kind of smug, bureaucratic authoritarianism. I don't like it. And none of the New Democrats like it either.

Now, for us there are very difficult considerations in a bill of this kind. We look at a bill of this kind and we can see that at some point in time someone makes a decision in this province. And obviously the government has to take upon itself, at some point in time, the right to make a decision about basic planning in Ontario.

And with that we agree, particularly when we view some of the atrocious planning experiences of the last several years. But that the minister should take it unto himself in this bill to make the final decisions on planning for all of southern Ontario and then show total contempt for the right of people to consult at the point where the plan originates, that, sir, is indefensible.

And that kind of planning we will not support. That is a perverse centralizing influence and it becomes the minister not.

Now maybe he wants to amend the bill. Maybe he wants to alter it profoundly, clause by clause. As it stands now, whatever positive attributes it may have, it has the fundamental flaws that we've indicated. It pretends to apply to a great area. It applies to only one. It leaves out all the controversial and significant planning developments in southern Ontario.

It makes a mockery of the consultative process. It is a masquerade for fashion rather than for substance. It is brought in by a ministry whose collective self-infatuation about planning and policy has gone too far. It is an extension of a kind of propaganda philosophy about the way the government manipulates people which is insupportable.

Therefore, on every score we will oppose it on second reading, as we will oppose the parkway bill, as we will oppose the Niagara Escarpment Commission bill, for many of the same reasons.

Mr. Good: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise to say a few words regarding the bill before us. In my view, it's important that we admit at this time that many of us have been very much concerned about the lack of provincial planning concepts put forth by the government opposite. Over the years we have talked a great deal about the need for the government to designate, in its view, what the broad-brush planning concepts should be for the province.

Certainly this bill will not accomplish what we in the Liberal Party think should be government policy. Therefore, we have no alternative but to oppose this bill as it now stands.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, we recognize the lack of government involvement in broad planning concepts and planning goals in the Province of Ontario. We've talked about the need for this for many years. The government has never indicated what its goals were for the province. Never has it indicated where the real growth centres should be; where the communication routes should go; where the recreation areas should be designated; where heavy industry in the province should be located so that it's in the best interests of the province as a whole and not just in the interest of a few select areas in southern Ontario.

Never has the province indicated what its plan is for a watergrid, for the provision of services, which is one of the basic—the first, the principal—concept which has to be grasped before one can direct proper growth and planning within the Province of Ontario. No growth can take place without services.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's only fair that we review for a moment what type of planning has been done in this province. Over the years, government policy has allowed such things to happen as the OHC assembly of land in Waterloo county—3,000 acres for which no particular use was designated when it was purchased. In my view, I believe the government took a private land assembler, who got in over his head, off the hook.

The government said: "We'll take your 3,000 acres, although we don't know what we're going to do with it." They spent $712,000 putting a plan on the area and they still haven't decided what's going to happen to it, but there it sits. All it's ever done is drive up the price of surrounding land.

This is the kind of planning the government has done in the past. We admit it hasn't been adequate but this bill will not solve the negligence and the procrastination of the province over its planning concepts in years gone by.

Who else has done the planning in the province? The former Minister of Trade and Development boasted that eventually there would be wall-to-wall factories from Oshawa through to Niagara Falls. This was the type of planning which this government talked about years ago.

Mr. Lewis: I forgot about that. That was Stanley Randall.

Mr. Good: Stanley Randall, Minister of Trade and Development.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It was all motherhood in those days.

Mr. Good: This was the mentality of the planning that came from over there. Now, suddenly, the province finds itself in a turmoil. It's reached the 11th hour deathbed repentance. The government finds that it has to do something about planning in this province.

Well, the bill is inadequate. It's deficient and it's completely out of touch with the people in the Province of Ontario. It's centralized, and in my view it is nothing but a power-structuring bill. That's all this bill wants to do—completely disregard the people of the Province of Ontario.

The planning has been done, Mr. Speaker, by the former Minister of Trade and Development, with his shotgun approach to ODC grants across the province, putting in industries wherever they felt disposed to give money. The planning has been done, Mr. Speaker, by industry, deciding where they are going to buy land to develop. In fact, it has been said—and I think it aptly describes the planning process of the past years—that the dollar bill has done more planning in this province than the government has ever tried to do.

An hon. member: That's right!

Mr. J. P. MacBeth (York West): At government expense!

Mr. Reid: The only thing they understand is dollar bills.

Mr. Good: I was over in the community planning branch about five years ago, and on the map for southern Ontario, in the place which we now call Nanticoke—Norfolk-Haldimand county—there were a couple of red pins. We asked Mr. Taylor, the director of the community planning branch at the time, did the government put those pins there as potential growth centres for industrial development, or did they just happen to be there? We were informed that the pins were put in the map there because Texaco, Stelco and Hydro had decided that's where there was going to be future development in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Reid: Shame!

Mr. Good: Immediately that happened, the province should have started to make decisions on what had to be done in that area. We in the Liberal Party admit that something has to be done in these potential growth centres. The Douglas Point area in Bruce county, with Hydro's future expansion programme on top of what they already have;

Norfolk-Haldimand which has potential growth areas; and Hydro areas in eastern Ontario, the Lennox Hydro plant; will all be future growth centres. We admit that planning has to be done; but in no way are we going to support a bill which puts forth the principle that the minister and the Lieutenant Governor in Council or the cabinet is going to decide what the planning will be in that area without what we feel is adequate public participation.

Planning, Mr. Speaker, has to come from the bottom up. It cannot be imposed. This government is finally and very reluctantly learning the lesson that you cannot impose regional government, nor can you impose regional planning development on areas, without proper consultation. This bill is too all-powerful. It deals with the centralization of power.

The minister, in a speech in Peterborough a week ago at the tri-level conference, stated that the regional development councils were done away with because—and this I remember for sure were his words—"They got in the way of provincial planning."

All right, just for a moment let me elaborate on what my leader said this afternoon. The regional development councils were brought into this province with great fanfare. They followed the 10 regional areas of the old Wartime Prices and Trade Board from the last war. The planning councils were set up; many of them, after a few years, called upon the province to fund them because the cities dropped out. They realized that there was no future in expressing their views to the regional development councils, because this very government didn't know why they had really set them up.

They changed the whole direction and the whole scope of the regional development councils midway through the course. They said they were now setting them up as agencies for input to the province. Then finally they decided they were getting in our way because they have to listen to what people say. As the provincial Treasurer said in Peterborough, they got in the way of the provincial ambitions for provincial planning and they are no longer in existence. Actually, Mr. Speaker, in my view what really happened at that time, and these were the years when there should have been some very realistic provincial planning, was that there was a conflict between the community planning branch of the Department of Municipal Affairs and the planning and development section of the provincial Treasurer. We used to ask many times in this Legislature: "Who is the official provincial planner? Is it Dr. Thoman in the Treasury, or is it the director of the community—"

Mr. Stokes: He's long gone.

Mr. Good: Oh, he's gone, long gone, yes. They finally saw the error of their ways.

"—or is it the Department of Municipal Affairs and its community planning branch?" And no one seemed to know which department had complete and ultimate responsibility for planning in the province. With the result that no planning of any consequence was done.

The government, of course, did fund certain planning boards around the province, area planning boards. It funded one in my own area. But it made the mistake of not giving that area planning board any authority. The planning board had no teeth to it. It was funded, but with the result that no provincial concepts were ever made known to the areas in which planning was done.

Section 2 of this bill, Mr. Speaker, says: "The minister may by order establish as a development planning area any area of land in Ontario defined in the order." This is my personal, ultimate and greatest objection to this whole bill. It gives the minister powers to do whatsoever he wishes concerning the planning of the Province of Ontario without what I think is proper involvement of the municipalities.

Section 10 says that: "No municipality that has jurisdiction in such areas shall pass a bylaw for any purpose that is in conflict with the development plan." So the power given in this bill would, I suppose, give the minister power to say: "The regional government in Waterloo, the regional municipality of Waterloo, is hereby designated by the province as a dormitory community to take the overflow from Metropolitan Toronto."

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Who said that?

Mr. Good: Well, it could possibly be said. Under the provisions of this bill Waterloo regional municipality would have to accept that and there's nothing which could be done.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Good: Well, there is no way that the people of this province are going to accept the imposition of provincial plans without the plans developing from the grass roots up and then ending up with provincial approval.

And there is a way, Mr. Minister, that the province can work with the municipalities to develop goals which in the long run will be for the benefit of all the people of the province. We have been talking about this for years—that there have to be provincial goals—but this ministry has gone ahead blindly, it has talked about its complete development from Toronto through to Niagara Falls, which is the direct route that the whole branch plant economy is based on; it follows the Queen Elizabeth Way, the shortest route to the United States through Niagara Falls, or the 401 which is the shortest route down through Detroit to the United States. And that's where all the development has taken place in this province. It has given lip service to the Design for Development in the Toronto-centred region plan and says that there's going to be development east of Toronto.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister to give me one instance of a single thing this province has done to encourage development east of Toronto. It has done nothing!

Mr. J. M. Turner (Peterborough): The member has got to be kidding.

Mr. Reid: What has the government done?

Mr. Good: The new municipality in North Pickering is nothing more than an adjunct to Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Reid: Absolutely nothing!

Mr. Good: All it will do is compound the problems that now exist.

It has given no incentives, it has given no encouragement, it has not even had the intestinal fortitude to designate areas in eastern Ontario as potential industrial areas, potential growth centres, and say: "We will give this, we will put in services east of Toronto to encourage development."

Mr. Young: Oh, boy!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Good: The government has sat here on its collective hands and done nothing to encourage development around this province.

Mr. Speaker, there is no way that we in the Liberal Party can support such a power-structuring bill as this.

Mr. Turner: Has the member read it?

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Have you?

Mr. Good: In my view, the matter of consultation as mentioned in section 5 of this bill is merely a statement of intent that there will be consultation. There is really no way that the municipalities are going to be properly involved in this; no way. There is no legal provision whereby they even have to be listened to. There is no provision under which the government is going to have to say: "What do you people in that area want?"

But the thing that frightens me most about this bill, Mr. Speaker, is that there is no designation where it will be applied. It can be applied in areas that badly need some provincial direction. It can also be applied in areas where the planning has been done very well up to the present time. But there is nothing in this bill that says it will be done in an area where there is a problem any more than it will be done in an area which has good planning principles.

Mr. Speaker, we would ask that the minister give serious consideration to withdrawing the bill. Unless he does, there is no way we can support it.

Mr. Lewis: We will support his withdrawal.

Mr. Speaker: Any other speakers on the second reading of this bill? Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, you may recall Thursday night when I attempted, without success, to introduce this bill and provide a rational, reasonable, quiet explanation, I was hooted at all the time I was on my feet. I think the only time I was heard was when I predicted that the Liberals would say it was too radical and the NDP would consider it far too conservative. And this is the theme I observe running through the debate, although much of the debate was on something other than this bill.

Mr. Deacon: Too dictatorial!

Hon. Mr. White: Sometimes the bill was followed, sometimes industrial development, sometimes transportation.

However, the small amount of substance in the debate which focused on the bill itself was largely uninformed.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): One had to be Nostradamus to do that, one had to be politically astute; a pure case of mint julep!

Hon. Mr. White: And I am inclined to blame the fact that I couldn't offer a more detailed explanation when this debate commenced last Thursday evening.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh nonsense; the Treasurer has had lots of opportunities.

Mr. Lawlor: Why didn't he give us time to give a decent debate? I need another 24 or 36 hours.

Hon. Mr. White: Now I would like to sum up first of all by reasserting the provisions of the bill and then by dealing with certain queries and complaints that were made. So let me start by saying, Mr. Speaker, that in 1966 the government of Ontario began a programme of planning within the various regions of the province. The programme was a result of an intense growth in population and urbanization pressures during the post-war period. The government realized that without a programme of large-scale regional planning these pressures would produce uncontrolled urban sprawl leading to the destruction of good farm lands, overloading of essential services and unrealistic costs associated with unplanned, chaotic development patterns.

In addition, economic inequalities between the various parts of the province were becoming more obvious and would no longer be tolerated by a modern society dedicated to the principle of equal opportunity.

To meet these issues, the regional planning programme was designed to enable each part of the province to attain its full potential within an overall framework of provincial policies and economic realities. To do this, the programme sets out plans for each region of Ontario, the northeast for example; and in particular cases for areas much smaller than regions where issues are of critical importance to the province, the parkway belt or Haldimand-Norfolk for example.

In setting out these plans, we are concentrating on those things which are of prime concern to the province. In most cases, these would be large-scale issues with an impact spilling across municipal boundaries.

Mr. Lewis: Some concepts!

Hon. Mr. White: Examples of these, which would be part of a provincial development plan include, population allocations to existing and new communities, general land-use designations for agriculture, recreation and urban development, standards for major services such as main sewer trunk lines and main highways and the nature and location of major governmental facilities such as colleges and other institutions.

The Planning and Development Act now will provide a process for the designation of areas where such plans are to be prepared and a means of ensuring that these plans are formulated with input from individuals, municipalities, ministries and others who will be affected.

Mr. Cassidy: The Treasurer had better explain that one a bit better.

Hon. Mr. White: For example, in the past few years the government has issued policy statements indicating broad concepts for the development of the central Ontario region.

Mr. Lewis: Some concepts!

Hon. Mr. White: Examples of these include the Zone 2 area, where urban growth is to be restricted; the population allocations for existing communities and the concept of new communities in north Oakville and north Burlington.

Projects that have got past the conceptual stage are the parkway belt west and the Norfolk-Haldimand planning study. All these things are a part of a regional development strategy which cannot be accomplished by individual municipalities, or indeed by regional governments. They are, in fact, reflections of overall provincial policies related to very large areas of Ontario. Provincial development plans are, therefore, broad in nature and set in a framework under which municipalities can then develop their own more detailed land-use plans to suit their own particular needs.

I've had occasion to say it several times in different settings in the last few months, that we want to concentrate our resources on provincial plans and leave to the municipalities the detailed planning. And I'm very hopeful that in the months that follow we can very largely vacate the detailed work that is a source of complaints from certain municipalities and certain of the members here.

Mr. Singer: If the minister believes that, why doesn't he put it in the bill?

Hon. Mr. White: It's not possible to arrange that a provincial development plan will always leave all the decisions within the authority of local councils. There must be overlap between the two. Obviously, a parkway belt cannot become a reality unless local zoning bylaws are compatible. Conversely, a provincial development plan must take into account the needs and aspirations and existing land-use policies of the municipalities in the area. The municipalities will continue to determine the kind and mix of development within their boundaries. In other words, decisions that impact only on the people within a municipality will be made by the council of the municipalities.

Mr. Cassidy: There is not a guarantee of that.

Hon. Mr. White: These decisions, however, will be subject to the provincial development plan which deals with the impact on people in a much larger area.

Mr. Cassidy: That is not stated in the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: The parkway belt—

Mr. Cassidy: We have no protection.

Hon. Mr. White: The member for Ottawa Centre is a great little talker.

Mr. Singer: Well, the minister is not a very good one!

Mr. Cassidy: Sort of loquacious.

Hon. Mr. White: The parkway belt is an example of a provincial plan that will determine the use—

Mr. Lawlor: In three years' time the minister will be in the south of Ireland somewhere. God help him!

Hon. Mr. White: —to which certain particular lands can be put in the interests of the inhabitants of the whole region.

In other cases the maximum population of a community may be set out in the provincial development plan.

Mr. Lewis: Well, all of this hypothesis is very nice.

Hon. Mr. White: The reasons for this may be cost of servicing, as for example in Haldimand-Norfolk—

Mr. Singer: It means trust us.

Hon. Mr. White: —and in other areas the overall policy of the government to contain urban sprawl.

Mr. Lawlor: What did Mr. Buckminster Fuller say about being the best of all possible worlds?

Hon. Mr. White: It should be noted that before the plan is adopted, other ministries, municipalities and the general public will be involved; so that while the ultimate decision on the development plan lies with the government, a substantial measure of agreement on the plan shall be possible before the final decision on the developed plan is made.

Mr. Cassidy: It is not provided in the bill.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: I hope members will listen to this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The minister has the floor.

Hon. Mr. White: I don't think it's fair to the members who want to understand this to interrupt continuously, if I may say so.

Mr. Lawlor: We are working at it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Now, sir, dealing with municipal official plans for zoning bylaws. Under the Planning Act there is provision—

Mr. Lawlor: It's threadbare.

Hon. Mr. White: Listen, please, the member will learn something.

Mr. Lawlor: I'm working on it.

Hon. Mr. White: Under the Planning Act there is a provision for an official plan to be referred to the OMB upon request. Such a request may be made by any person or by the municipality. When this happens, the matter is taken out of the minister's hands entirely. The OMB holds a public hearing and makes a final decision on disposition of the plan.

If no request is made for referral of the official plan, the decision, on its approval, is made by the minister. The Planning Act requires that all municipal zoning bylaws must be approved by the OMB. There is no other approval authority. Copies of the bylaws are sent to all affected persons and anyone may appear at the public hearing to make representation. The board then makes a decision on whether the bylaw should be approved and what changes should be made to it.

Mr. Lawlor: The minister's legislation is super.

Hon. Mr. White: I contrast this with provincial development plans. There is no provision in the Ontario Planning and Development Act for the OMB to be involved in the process of approval of a provincial development plan.

Mr. Lawlor: The minister is telling me.

Mr. Singer: Right!

Hon. Mr. White: Instead, public hearings that are necessary will be conducted by a hearing officer appointed by the minister who will then make his recommendations—

Mr. Cassidy: They may not be held sometimes, is that right?

Mr. Singer: Who hears only one side?

Hon. Mr. White: Who will then make his recommendations in public on what action should be taken.

Mr. Singer: But he hears only one side.

Hon. Mr. White: There is a distinct difference between the implications of the approval of a municipal official plan or bylaw on the one hand, and a provincial plan on the other. It can be argued therefore that it's appropriate for an administrative tribunal, such as the OMB, to arbitrate disputes related to municipal planning documents and make the final decision.

In the case of a provincial plan the situation is quite different. It would not be appropriate to put the final decision-making power on matters of provincial development policy in the hands of an independent agency. Moreover, there would be the very real problem of having a decision of the minister or of the cabinet on a matter of policy subject to reversal by such a body. I think that will give some clarity to the uncertainty that seems to have been evidenced in some of the questions and in some of the debates.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Now, sir, I would like to describe for those who are interested the steps provided for in this legislation in obtaining approval of a provincial development plan. One, the minister defines by order the boundaries of the development planning area for which a provincial plan is to be prepared.

Mr. Lewis: That's right. The minister is the first step. That's what we object to.

Hon. Mr. White: The minister appoints one or more advisory committees, if deemed appropriate, to advise on the preparation and implementation of the plan for the development planning area that has been defined.

Mr. Lewis: The minister appoints the committees he deems appropriate.

Hon. Mr. White: The minister directs a survey of all or part of the development planning area be carried out and that a provincial development plan be prepared.

If I may illustrate, this has now been done for the parkway belt west. Please don't misunderstand. This is not a plan; this is a proposal. This proposal now goes to the municipalities, perhaps before a hearing officer, perhaps to be scrutinized by one or more than one advisory council and so on.

Mr. Lewis: The minister directs. That is the way it begins at every step.

Hon. Mr. White: Each municipality within the planning area is consulted about the proposed contents of the plan during the time it is being prepared.

After the proposed plan has been prepared, a copy of such proposed plan is sent to each municipality within the planning area with an invitation to make comments thereon within a specified period of time, which shall be not less than three months. A notice is published in local newspapers, indicating where a copy of the plan may be examined and inviting comments thereon from any interested person within a specified period of time, which will not be less than three months; that is from the notice in the newspaper. A copy of the proposed plan is sent to an advisory committee that has been appointed, with a request for comments.

Then, sir, after the expiration of time for making comments, one or more hearing officers are appointed who shall conduct one or more hearings as determined by the minister.

Mr. Lewis: By the minister; appointed by the minister, determined by the minister.

Hon. Mr. White: After the hearing or hearings have been held the officer prepares a summary of representations and submits this together with his recommendations and modifications that should be made to the plan. This report of the hearing officer with a summary of findings and with recommendations must be made public.

Mr. Singer: Why doesn't the Treasurer justify the plan?

Hon. Mr. White: After considering the report of the hearing officer, the proposed plan, with the minister's recommendations, is sent to cabinet for approval. The cabinet may then approve the plan with such modifications as it considers desirable.

Mr. Cassidy: I don't think the Treasurer was listening to the debate.

Hon. Mr. White: An amendment to a provincial development plan may be initiated by the minister or by any person or any municipality. The same procedures on consultation and hearings apply as apply in the case of the processing of the original plan.

Mr. Singer: Great speech!

Mr. Lawlor: Francisco Franco came up with a similar plan.

Hon. Mr. White: Once a development plan is in force, no public work shall be undertaken by the province or a municipality and no bylaw may be passed that does not conform therewith.

Mr. Lawlor: CORTS may as well not exist.

Hon. Mr. White: Moreover, the provincial plan prevails over local official plans and bylaws, and these must be made to conform with the provincial plan within a time specified. Where a municipality fails to submit an amendment to a local official plan to bring it into line with a provincial plan, the minister may amend the local plan by order.

Mr. Lawlor: Darn right, he may.

Hon. Mr. White: Grants may be made to municipalities for the purpose of revising local plans and bylaws to make them conform to the provincial plan. The minister may make grants to any municipality, person or organization which is undertaking any programme that would have the effect of implementing the provincial plan.

Mr. Cassidy: Thanks for reading the bill to us.

Hon. Mr. White: Now then, sir, let me turn to some portions of the debate here today and see if I can bring a little bit of enlightenment—I'm not optimistic about that—the opposition members.

I'll start with the hon. member for Downsview, who indicated that the hearing officer had no real responsibility; but in point of fact he has the responsibility—oh, the member for Downsview has left.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): He will be back in a minute.

Hon. Mr. White: The hearing officer certainly has responsibility.

Mr. Lawlor: The member for Downsview is a quasi-honest man.

Hon. Mr. White: He has to accept representations from any municipality advisory committees, from any person affected.

Mr. Lawlor: I can't stand this form of pettifoggery.

Hon. Mr. White: He has to weigh those arguments and on the basis of those arguments make recommendations which will no doubt in many instances lead to modifications before the plan proper is approved by the government.

In this way, I must say, it is completely different from the hearings called for under provincial or federal expropriation legislation. In particular the federal hearings of necessity would simply call for the hearing officer to provide a summary of the points of view offered; I contrast that now with the hearing officers appointed under the Planning and Development Act, who have the responsibility to make recommendations altering the proposals.

Mr. Cassidy: What about Earl Berger, eh?

Mr. Lawlor: Thank God, three years from now the Treasurer won't be here.

Hon. Mr. White: The member for Downsview said he was afraid of—

Mr. Singer: I am back.

Hon. Mr. White: —the minister's power in this matter and more particularly the power of overriding municipal development plans.

Now, this criticism I think is based on an incorrect assumption; namely that the proposal is a plan. The proposal is simply a device to initiate consultation, consideration by affected municipalities, by citizens in those areas and so on.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: That's nonsense! Absolute rubbish.

Hon. Mr. White: The assumption that a proposed plan is finished before an area is designated is simply not correct. Under normal circumstances, the Treasurer designates an area where a plan will be prepared.

Mr. Good: Where?

Mr. Lewis: The Treasurer should ask the member for Oshawa about his proposal for regional government.

Hon. Mr. White: In the parkway belt and Haldimand-Norfolk plan proposals have been prepared, but these will be subject to municipal submissions, open public hearings, before they become policy.

Mr. Singer: Without any justification of the Treasurer's proposals.

Mr. Lewis: His proposals are plans, and what is more they are nearly final when they are introduced.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: The member for Ottawa Centre made a reference to restraint of municipalities without, I think, having understood what I attempted to say here Thursday night, namely that the provincial government will use this power in those instances only where the plan is beyond the horizon of a municipality or a region.

Mr. Cassidy: There is no such thing.

Mr. Singer: You can trust us;

Hon. Mr. White: As illustrated, I think perfectly in the parkway belt legislation—

Mr. Lewis: Thank God for the parkway belt.

Hon. Mr. White: —and as may be well illustrated in the CORTS' report on the Trent-Severn system, where I understand there are 70 municipalities, most of them small, which will require some encouragement, some direction and I suppose one could say some leadership to bring these plans to fruition.

Mr. Cassidy: Why doesn't the Treasurer put some guidelines in the bill to make that clear?

Hon. Mr. White: So that, as my colleague the provincial secretary has pointed out several times in the last week or so, is an area which may find this legislation extremely useful.

And as I mentioned earlier, as indeed I said in the House here on Thursday, May 31, we intend to use the procedures of the new Ontario Planning and Development Act, which I will introduce on Monday, to process any proposals which we adopt from the land and development reports for Haldimand-Norfolk. This will provide an opportunity for the municipalities of Haldimand and Norfolk and those from adjoining counties which may be affected by our actions, to review and recommend changes to the report before any government policy is developed from it.

Mr. Singer: Without his having to justify it!

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on!

Hon. Mr. White: So in the first week or 10 days, we have a direct application of this Act insofar as the parkway belt west is concerned.

Mr. Singer: He's got somebody up in the corner.

Hon. Mr. White: We have an indirect application—

Mr. Lewis: Yes, very indirect.

Hon. Mr. White: —in the Niagara Escarpment Commission legislation, which borrows most of its sections from this overriding Act.

Mr. Singer: We just don't want to appoint him God.

Hon. Mr. White: We have announced the likelihood of utilizing this legislation in the Haldimand-Norfolk matter.

Mr. Lewis: Let the Treasurer make a commitment that this legislation will cover Haldimand-Norfolk.

Hon. Mr. White: We see the possibility of using it in the Trent-Severn system. We will certainly be using it for the parkway belt east—

Mr. Lewis: Which is where?

Hon. Mr. White: —and so in the first week —yes, just one week after the introduction of this bill—

Mr. Lawlor: What does that mean?

Hon. Mr. White: —we have five possibilities in sight.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, but one is real.

Hon. Mr. White: And the reason the socialists are so enraged, if I may say so—

Mr. Singer: Why doesn't the Treasurer talk to the Speaker instead of saying—

Hon. Mr. White: —is because they would have us crashing down all over this province in a way that we Conservatives think would be entirely inappropriate—

Mr. Singer: Oh, no it is not.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: —and this we do not propose to do—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: —until such time as there is a well-formed support in the areas concerned.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, there is more important support; the Treasurer hasn't even got his backbenchers.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: None in sight. There is nobody here.

Hon. Mr. White: Now the member for Ottawa Centre made the point that people should be involved from the beginning in setting regional goals and objectives.

At present the regional planning programme puts forward schematic, impressionistic descriptions and forecasts of trends to generate public discussion and get feedback on goals and desires and so on—for example, Phase One reports for eastern Ontario, the Lake Erie region and so on. This will continue, under the legislation, as a technique for public involvement during plan formulation.

Mr. Singer: Rip that page out; it wasn't so good.

Hon. Mr. White: I am now ripping the member's page up.

That wasn't so good either!

Mr. Lewis: At least it is symbolic, if nothing more.

Mr. Singer: Yes, the divine right of kings and the divine right of governments.

Hon. Mr. White: The member for Ottawa Centre said that municipalities are not consulted, or something to that effect. In fact, my ministry has talked with every municipality directly affected by the parkway belt west to explain—explore alternatives before recommendations.

Mr. Lewis: An interesting slip. Very interesting.

Hon. Mr. White: This will not substitute for the municipal consultations and hearings which are yet to be undertaken and which will give additional opportunities to municipalities and members of the public to express their views on the proposals and enable us to receive worthwhile modifications.

Mr. Singer: That's what their statutes do away with.

Mr. Cassidy: That consultation has the same calibre as the officials of the ministry—

Mr. Singer: Yes, a bunch of balderdash.

Hon. Mr. White: Several members, including if I am not mistaken the Leader of the Opposition, have expressed enormous fear about the powers given to the minister. But, in fact—

Mr. Singer: And he's so right!

Hon. Mr. White: —these powers are given to the government, and the government holds itself responsible to the Legislature—

Mr. Singer: Oh, that's a comfort.

Hon. Mr. White: —and the government holds itself responsible when we take our case to the people.

Mr. Cassidy: There is a process around this place.

Hon. Mr. White: When we have an agency, whether it be called a Liquor Licence Board or the Ontario Municipal Board or some such other agency sitting in a quasi-governmental role, we are criticized, and I think quite rightly so, for hiding behind the Judge Robbs of the world, fine as they may be, and in the process abdicating our direct, obvious responsibility to the Legislature.

Mr. Singer: Next week we won't have any debates on second reading. It would save so much time and so much more—

Hon. Mr. White: Now in this instance, it would have been very easy, no doubt, for us to—

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The member is not in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. White: —protect ourselves with some kind of intermediary. But I think this is not the parliamentary way. I think this is not the democratic way. I think this is not the way that any one of the members would like to see us do it if we weren't in the middle of this debate here tonight.

Mr. Cassidy: He has missed the point again.

An hon. member: There is nothing in this bill—

An hon. member: Put the boards to him.

Hon. Mr. White: Now, my dear friend from Lakeshore, one of nature's gentlemen, has said he hasn't had enough time.

An hon. member: Is there any other kind?

Mr. Lawlor: That's right. I do a decent job.

Hon. Mr. White: But in fact we have taken whatever time it will take.

Mr. Lawlor: How about Louis Mumford?

Hon. Mr. White: We can debate this as long as members wish, and as members know, I propose for the—well, let me say the first step in the consultative process so far as this bill is concerned, is to take this bill into the standing committee—

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, what a generous concession!

Hon. Mr. White: —and to consult with all members of this Legislature—

Mr. Singer: He's just all heart, all heart.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: —with the assistance of my very competent staff members.

Mr. Lawlor: If he had brought it in two weeks ago, we really could have given him a bad time of it.

Hon. Mr. White: And we will take, sir, just as much time as it takes.

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. Lawlor: Ah nonsense.

Mr. Cassidy: The Treasurer needn't talk—

Mr. Lawlor: They railroad these things through—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: They do it every time.

Mr. Singer: A bunch of baloney.

An hon. member: Oh, come on!

Mr. Lawlor: Really important legislation.

Hon. Mr. White: I was very grateful to my hon. friend from Algoma—

Mr. Lawlor: Debilitating.

Hon. Mr. White: —I hope I can say this without giving offence to members of the opposition—he made the only really sensible suggestion of the evening.

Mr. MacDonald: That's one way to create a revolt in the back benches.

Hon. Mr. White: And I want to assure him here and now that I will consider a separate planning board for that area north of the Soo.

Mr. Singer: If St. Joseph's Island needs two bridges, we'll build them.

An hon. member: That's right!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: And if these considerations indicate that it is feasible, then we'll go ahead with it. I'd like to accommodate the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister learned his lesson after the energy tax.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: My hon. friend from Waterloo North made a mistake when he said—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. White: —I had asserted that the economic development councils got in the way. I said no such thing. I was—

Mr. Good: That is exactly what the minister said.

Hon. Mr. White: —criticised by Reeve Williams for the action of the government exactly a year ago. And I said that's a strange thing for me to hear now, because I have heard for years from the municipal councils that the economic development councils got in the way. That was not my assertion.

Mr. Good: It was the minister who said it.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, I can prove that very readily.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: I have checked with one witness already.

Mr. Singer: If the member for Waterloo North said it, he's right.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Now, when I stood up, sir, Thursday night to be howled down by the mob as I was—

An hon. member: Nothing could be more simple.

Hon. Mr. White: —I said this is a very simple concept. Even that very simple statement was misinterpreted by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Singer: Dictatorship forever, if that's a simple concept.

Hon. Mr. White: A very simple concept—

Mr. Singer: Dictatorship forever.

Hon. Mr. White: —which can be expressed in a few words.

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Hon. Mr. White: Where there is a requirement beyond the powers or the horizons of a municipality or region, then we, the province, are prepared to accept the responsibility for planning for a wide variety of purposes.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister forgot to put it in the Act.

Hon. Mr. White: The bill which we will be debating shortly is a perfect illustration of where you have a wide variety of uses; the service corridors for roads, sewers, Hydro lines and such like; the parkway belts proper, which broaden out to encompass hundreds and hundreds of acres—a total of 55,000 acres, I think it is—

Mr. Lewis: Private golf courses!

Hon. Mr. White: —but which could never be attempted by one of the regions affected or some number of municipalities affected; an absolute impossibility.

I contrast this with a story I heard today about the way the QEW was built back in the 1930s. Each municipality was asked to draw a line where it wanted it and if there were a few jogs at the boundary lines of municipalities, well that's the way it was. Well, that's not the way we are going to do it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Boy, you have come a long way.

Mr. Cassidy: We will put these sayings down.

Hon. Mr. White: Now, this gives us the power to plan on a regional basis, on a much broader basis.

Mr. Cassidy: What a break-through.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: We accept that responsibility. We will be working with the municipalities affected—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. White: —with all of the citizens affected who are interested in making submissions.

Mr. Singer: Why does the minister bother to come here?

Hon. Mr. White: And I see this, Mr. Speaker, if I may say so, as one more very important advance in systematic planning for the future good of our people—

Mr. Good: Centralization of power!

Mr. Singer: Systematic dictatorship!

Hon. Mr. White: —involving all of their talents, energies and desires during the consultative process, ending up with a co-operative plan to benefit our people now, and indeed for many generations to come. I invite you all to support this great legislation.

Mr. Singer: Destroying democracy. Shame!

Mr. Speaker: The question to be decided is a motion for second reading of Bill 128.

The House divided on the motion for second reading of Bill 128, which was approved on the following vote:

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the “ayes” are 54, the “nays” are 23.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the bill be ordered for third reading?

Mr. Singer: No, no, no!

Mr. Speaker: Committee? Standing committee or committee of the whole? Standing committee?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order and before the minister gets too far out, could he anticipate when it might hit the standing committee? Will it be 9 o'clock tomorrow morning or could we have a few days' notice?

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Tonight!

Mr. Singer: I wouldn't be surprised.

Hon. Mr. White: Not until tomorrow afternoon. Mr. Speaker, I am the servant of the committee; I had hoped to be able to take Bill 129 and 130 through second reading and then take all three, presumably. I don't feel keenly about the other two but I would like to take Bill 128 before the standing committee. I'm at the disposal of the committee is what I'm saying. But my personal preference would be to debate Bills 129 and 130 tomorrow and Wednesday if that is necessary.

Mr. Singer: So we are looking at a week's time?

Mr. MacDonald: No, we are looking at Wednesday or Thursday.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Solicitor General): It won't be Saturday or Sunday.

Hon. Mr. White: It's up to the committee, surely.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister's trouble is he can't plan.

Mr. Singer: Stop spoiling my plot, will you?

ONTARIO TRANSPORTATION DEVELOPMENT CORP. ACT

Hon. Mr. Carton moves second reading of Bill 144, An Act to establish the Ontario Transportation Development Corp.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have some introductory remarks.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, if the minister wants to make some introductory remarks we will be happy to hear him.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the Legislature on May 11, it is the intention of the government, and we are doing it by this legislation, to provide the necessary research and development capabilities to fulfil its policy and programmes with respect to urban transit. The aim of the bill is to create a corporation that will establish a continuing research and development capacity in Canada of the highest technological order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. While the hon. members are leaving the House perhaps they could do it quietly so we can hear the hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Carton: —and ensure the production of these transit facilities to Canadian municipalities.

Mr. Singer: Particularly cabinet ministers.

Hon. Mr. Carton: The role of the company will be to co-ordinate and promote the development of new advanced technology of all types relating to the public transit field and to provide for the successful integration of these innovative developments with the design and production of much needed conventional transit facilities.

The company will be capable of funding research into a number of transit rated areas. As pointed out by the Premier (Mr. Davis) on May 11, the basic licences that were obtained from the Krauss-Maffei contract signed on May 1 will provide the first building block of the company's assets.

It is our intention that the company will always seek to exploit its research and development programmes and to market them through the private sector in Canada. The purpose of creating the corporation is to firstly ensure that all of the intermediate capacity technology to be known as GO Urban is transferred to Canadian engineers and scientists and that the Canadian industry is capable of producing full-scale intermediate-capacity systems for the Canadian and for the international markets; and, secondly, that continuing research and development in this and other transit applications are undertaken in Canada.

Historically, within Canada our major research and development programmes in the areas of large public involvement have been disappointing, in our view, because they have not concentrated on areas where we have a sizable domestic market and because private industry has not had a sufficiently attractive future market potential to continue to fund major research and development work. It is the intention of this company to provide that research capability to Canadian industry on the basis that Canadian governments at all levels require greatly expanded transit facilities. Therefore, a sizable domestic market exists from these facilities.

Our intention is to provide the leadership and motivation to start and continue in these research and development programmes. It is, therefore, intended the company will have the capability to ensure continued funding of research and development and will be capable of ensuring the exploitation and delivery of these developments to both the domestic and the international marketplace.

It is our intention to bring the full weight of the Canadian industrial, commercial and academic sectors behind our urban transit programme. This company will have a prime role in co-ordinating and developing the activities of each of these sectors in transportation.

It is also our intention to achieve a pooling of national, scientific and technical talents to co-operate in the solution of present and future transit problems. Further, it is necessary for the government to provide such an instrument to ensure that the municipalities of Ontario and of Canada will have a competitive supply situation facing them and are not subject to monopoly prices for research and development work, financed by other levels of government.

Failure to obtain the rights to this technology and any innovations brought about by our research and development programmes might leave the municipalities facing a single supplier when they seek to implement these various innovations in their municipalities. A goal of this corporation will be to ensure a highly competitive supply system by sub-licensing a number of competent companies to engage in the production of highly specialized components for these systems.

It is not our intention to engage in the production and manufacture of transit equipment in competition with the private sector, but rather to ensure this competition by creating a broad distribution and availability of the technology to as many competent firms as possible. These private companies will provide royalties to the special Act companies, in return for the right to utilize and exploit these developments.

It is our expectation that through skilful management of the contract rights to this technology a continuing funding mechanism can be established to ensure the ongoing development of transit innovations. In this way, it is possible for the public to achieve a substantial return for its investment in research and development in this field.

The company will seek to satisfy these intentions through: Entering into industrial licensing agreements with the private sector for selling and manufacturing of new technology transit systems and components; contracts with private industries for research and development in the transit field; contracts for universities for similar research and development; direct contracts with consulting groups for ongoing evaluations of the commercial and technological prospects of various systems and facilities; direct sales contracts with other governments for the provision of transit systems, both domestic and international sales; and sub-licensing arrangements with the private sector for marketing and financing of the various new technology transit systems.

It is our intention that the company will have a sufficient staff of highly skilled technical expertise, such that the technological transfer of the GO-Urban intermediate-capacity system is assured; and that it will have an ongoing capability to evaluate and manage other research and development projects. It is our intention that other developments in the transportation field will be handled in a manner similar to that of Krauss-Maffei where this special Act corporation would receive royalties and income benefits from the development and distribution of the innovations as they are exploited by the private sector.

It is intended and expressly provided for, sir, in this bill that the company has sufficient powers of finance, marketing and production to ensure the development and exploitation of its products. However, generally, the government anticipates that the private sector will acquire the marketing rights from the corporation. Where such commercial exploitation is assured, it will be possible for the corporation to sell these developments to the private sector for continued exploitation.

Mr. Speaker, this government has recognized that in order to solve our urban transportation problems, we must have a continual research and development programme. This research and development programme must occur in Canada. The company's purpose again is to provide a vehicle for continued research and development and to co-ordinate and harness the massive power of our commercial, industrial and academic communities to deliver the transit systems needed by all levels of government. This is the basic rationale behind the introduction of this bill.

I would like to explain some of the specific aspects of this bill. First of all, the corporation is not intended to be a Crown corporation for the following reasons: (1) The company will operate beyond the borders of Ontario; (2) It is anticipated that there will be shareholders other than the government of Ontario and therefore the company is not to be an agent of the Crown; (3) Other shareholders might include the governments of other provinces and the government of Canada and private industry; (4) It is intended that as much private capital as possible be attracted to fulfil the objectives of the company.

Secondly, in order to ensure that the initial public funding in this corporation is protected, the government of Ontario will, as provided in the legislation, hold 51 per cent of the outstanding equity.

Further, the bill restricts the outstanding equity in non-Canadian ownership to 10 per cent of the total outstanding equity. It restricts the equity owned by any individual, with the exception of various governments within Canada, either provincial or federal, to five per cent of the total outstanding equity.

Mr. Singer: Did the minister say 51 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Carton: The purpose of this provision is to ensure that the corporation is always under direct control of Canadians and that no single entity gains undue influence over its programmes.

The corporation's head office is to be in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. However, it is anticipated that most of its activities will have a very broad geographic influence through its distribution of contract and licensing agreements. The head office component will be a very small element in the total geographic influence of the company. It is the intention of the government to bring as much commercial influence into the operation of this corporation as possible. For this reason it is our intention that the nine-man board of directors will be comprised of three members from government and six members from the private sector.

The majority of this board must be Canadian residents—

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): This is a sellout, really a sellout.

Hon. Mr. Carton:—and through the appointment of the board of directors I anticipate that we will be able to bring a wide-scale commercial viewpoint to the management and operation of the corporation.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with some care to the comments of the hon. minister. There's very little that he said that has justified, to my thinking, the reason for the establishment of an Ontario Transportation Development Corp.

It would seem to me that since we are putting out a very substantial amount of public money that there is no reason in the world why the responsibility for the expenditure of this money should not rest with the ministry and should not be palmed off, or parcelled off, to a private corporation.

I heard the minister say it is the intention of government to hold 51 per cent of the shares. Not unlike another piece of legislation we were talking about earlier today, I wonder why, if this is the government's intention, we can't find that in the statute.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): It is in the statute.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Section 15.

Mr. Singer: One has to be suspicious, Mr. Speaker.

Pardon?

Mr. Young: Section 15.

Mr. Singer: Does it say 51 per cent control?

Mr. Young: Majority.

Mr. Singer: The majority should be in the hands of the government?

Mr. Cassidy: Hasn't the member for Downsview read the bill yet?

Mr. Singer: I've read it. I may have misinterpreted it. "Shares of the corporation . . . shall be registered . . . in the name . . . The minister shall from time to time subscribe . . . and such holdings shall at all times be a majority . . ."

I'm sorry. I withdraw that one, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: We want to keep the member within reaching distance of the truth.

Mr. Singer: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre is, in fact, correct. What I continue to query though, Mr. Speaker, is the necessity for the establishment of a corporation and the very few details that we get insofar as this corporation is concerned.

I listened to the breakdown of the directors, with three representing government, and I notice there is an exculpatory clause insofar as members of the Legislature are concerned. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the minister has paid any attention, or even passing attention, to the remarks of Mr. Camp and his associates, which indicated that members of the legislative assembly should not have extra jobs over and beyond their legislative responsibilities.

I think it follows from that and from what Mr. Camp and his associates had to say, that there should not be any extra pay. I don't know—well, the minister nods that there won't be any extra pay—I would suggest that if he is going to call on three of his colleagues to serve on the board of the Ontario Transportation Development Corp., unless he gives them a salary, and probably an office and probably a secretary and probably a car with a driver, it's unlikely that he is going to get many eager volunteers.

I just wonder who is going to be an officer of this corporation and who will be a director. Is the minister, for instance, going to be an officer and director? Is his deputy going to be an officer and director? If, in fact, the minister is, is he going to get extra pay and emoluments, and is the deputy minister? Who is going to be and why should they be? Why is it necessary? Or even forgetting about the three from government—whatever that may mean; what the three from government are, I don't know how we define that—but some of them must be members of the legislative assembly, perhaps all of them. Does this exclude civil servants? Do we have some directors, perhaps, from the Krauss-Maffei firm in Germany? Is that a part of the understanding, because the details of the purchase were rather vague? All we got, Mr. Speaker, was an announcement that arrangements had been made to obtain certain patent and merchandising rights. It was only after some questioning, and I note that the minister didn't volunteer it, that we found the government had agreed to pay some $500,000, I think that was the figure, for the availability of those rights. I am not sure that the minister ever went on in detail and said what continued kind of direction might come from the Krauss-Maffei firm.

Substantially, Mr. Speaker, what disturbs me is that the government, for some reason that is not apparent in anything the minister has said—either tonight or in his previous pronouncements in connection with the kiddy car ride at the Exhibition grounds—for some reason that he has not chosen to disclose to us, is making a great big and complicated commercial production out of this.

If it's any good—and I hope I am wrong, but I haven't seen any merit coming out of it. If it's any good, why shouldn't it be run solely by the minister out of his department, as so many other things have been organized? Why should it be necessary to set up yet another body, and to set up a body that apparently is going to be several steps remote from government; to set up a body over which we are going to have very little, if any, control; to set up a body that, well, whose directors we don't know? Whether they are going to be paid or not, we don't know.

In fact, the whole thing is so vague and so peculiar, Mr. Speaker, that I just can't bring myself to vote in favour of this peculiar Act. I think it's a sellout. I am not quite sure who we are selling out to. We are perhaps selling out to the original people who had this idea, who have sold the minister a bill of goods. Or maybe we are selling out to some commercial people in the Province of Ontario or in the Dominion of Canada or in the USA, I don't really know.

But if any merit is to emerge out of this plan, which is going to be of substantial value to the people of the Province of Ontario, then why shouldn't the people of the Province of Ontario be able to benefit from it? The minister has given us no excuse. In fact, what he is doing is flying directly tonight into the face of the recommendation of the Camp commission. Yet another body is going to be set up, yet another carrot is being dangled in front of the noses of his colleagues, and perhaps even in front of the noses of the civil servants. More offices, more civil servants, more pay, more emoluments, more drivers with cars, more airplane trips, and so on.

I just don't see, frankly, Mr. Speaker, how we can possibly support this bill.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): It should be renamed a bill to provide more emoluments for backbenchers.

Mr. Cassidy: I would move the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Before I move the adjournment of the House, tomorrow—

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if I might put the motion first for adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Tomorrow we will deal with item No. 6 and item No. 7 and at 8 o'clock, p.m., tomorrow, because of a prior commitment of the Treasurer (Mr. White), we will return to the consideration of this particular bill and Bill 145. For Wednesday, if the accomplishment takes us that far—

Mr. Singer: Bill 45?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: No, Bill 145, item No. 22. Then I would say following that the House should prepare itself for the bills standing as items on the order paper numbers 10 through 20.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 12, 1973

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today, we are pleased to have visitors with us: In the east gallery, members of the Women's Institute of Wingham and students from St. Theresa's School of Beardmore; in the west gallery, the Middlesex North Progressive Conservative Ladies' Association; and in both galleries, students from MacKillop Public School of Richmond Hill. We will be joined a little later in the west gallery by ladies from the riding of Halton East.

Statements by the ministry.

RECREATION TRAILS SYMPOSIUM

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that Ontario's first recreation trails symposium will be held in Toronto, here at Queen's Park, on June 27. The symposium will be sponsored by the Ministry of Natural Resources under the auspices of the Hon. Leo Bernier, Minister of Natural Resources.

In recent years, the people of Ontario have witnessed substantial growth in the popularity of such recreational trail activities as hiking, bicycling, horseback-riding, canoeing, cross-country skiing, snowmobiling and motorcycling. The provincial government is aware of the growing need to provide more and varied linear recreational opportunities and is most interested in initiating a definite course of action for the planning, development and management of recreational trails in the province.

After meeting with representatives of various trail interest groups during the past few months, I have received enthusiastic support for the government to conduct a symposium on trails.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): What you call vertical recreation!

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: The trails symposium will serve as the first step in the formulation of a province-wide trails programme by bringing together, for an exchange of information and ideas, people having widely varied backgrounds and experiences, but sharing a common enthusiasm for trails. The aim of the symposium is to give interested citizens representing trail interest groups, industry and the government an opportunity to advise the government on initial trail programme dimensions.

Various discussion papers prepared by the division of parks, Ministry of Natural Resources, will provide workshop topics, such as programme co-ordination, trail planning and development, the role of trail interest groups and legislative issues. In order to encourage maximum discussion through manageable workshop groups, there is limited registration for the symposium. We have invited approximately 200 interested citizens to participate in the symposium.

INTERPROVINCIAL CONFERENCE ON CORPORATE AND CONSUMER AFFAIRS

Hon. J. T. Clement (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I would like to report to the House today the position that was taken by the Ontario government at the June 1 interprovincial conference on corporate and consumer affairs in Quebec City. As members no doubt agree, there is a pressing need for greater uniformity of provincial legislation on corporate and consumer matters. This need was recognized at the conference and a number of substantive resolutions were passed to increase co-ordination between provincial jurisdictions.

The delegates were particularly concerned about collecting and storing information on credit, health and personal characteristics. One of the resolutions calls for legislation in all the provinces that is uniform as to principle and methods. A number of provinces indicated willingness to follow Ontario's lead and to make changes in their legislation which would be complementary to the provisions of our consumer reporting Act, when it has been passed by this Legislature.

In a similar manner, delegates resolved that legislation on warranties should have basic uniformity throughout Canada. The conference also indicated that it was looking to Ontario and Quebec for leadership in this area. Ontario agreed to make information and resources on warranties available to the sister provinces as it becomes available.

Credit abuse continues as a major source of consumer complaints at the provincial level, although the responsibility for credit lies in large part with the federal government. The conference emphasized the inadequacy of the Small Loans Act of Canada and the Interest Act of Canada in meeting consumer needs and recommended that these Acts be reviewed by the federal government in consultation with the provinces. At the same time, delegates recommended that codes to regulate consumer credit advertising be related more closely to codes outlining consumer credit disclosure requirements.

In our discussions on corporate affairs, we placed particular emphasis on the need for standardizing business information returns to governments. The question of registration of companies doing business in one province while incorporated in another province was also raised, and both disclosure and registration were referred to a newly created committee of company registrars with representation from all the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, the Ontario government intends to support strongly all attempts to achieve greater uniformity of commercial law across Canada. We believe that if forthcoming provincial legislation, such as that on warranties, is not co-ordinated with the other provinces, the basis of a nation-wide Canadian market may well be destroyed. Nor can we adequately inform the consumer of his rights, if those rights change every time he crosses a provincial border.

Fortunately, progress was made at the Quebec City conference and a spirit of co-operation has been achieved. I look forward to the next interprovincial conference in the spring of next year, at which time I hope that I will be able to report to the House further progress toward uniformity of consumer and commercial legislation at the provincial level.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

SENIOR CITIZENS' WEEK

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Community and Social Services): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to officially inform the House that Senior Citizen's Week, 1973, will begin this Sunday, June 17. This is the third consecutive year that Ontario has set aside a special week to focus attention on our elderly citizens. Preparations within municipalities, public libraries, churches, homes for the aged, Ontario and Metro Toronto housing apartments, elderly persons' centres, senior citizen clubs and a wide variety of groups and organizations indicate that this year's activities are going to be even more ambitious and more adventuresome than in previous years.

This year, we have a second and equally important objective. Ontario is the first province to introduce a province-wide pre-retirement campaign. The campaign is designed to encourage people 40 years and over to begin to plan for their own retirement.

Our theme this year is "living can be ageless"—vivre n'a pas d'âge.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That's the Premier (Mr. Davis) running on that.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: It not only portrays the energy of our senior citizens but it also indicates the need to prepare plans for retirement. Hon. members have already received copies of our colourful poster and the information kit.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Why didn't the minister use that money for that programme of development?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Experts tell us that with our trend toward earlier retirement, most people will spend one-third of their lives in retirement. According to the most recent Canada census in 1971, people 40 years and over represent 33.7 per cent of the total population. With realistic and thoughtful planning, retirement years can be as active and challenging as any other time of life for these people.

Mr. Lewis: Did the minister mean to say 40 years?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: The homes for the aged and the office on aging branch of my ministry are highly encouraged by the co-operation we have received from the private sector, including the insurance industry, libraries, churches, banks, trade unions, the post office, Liquor Control Board, Brewer's Retail, the Boy Scouts and many more.

Mr. Lewis: Surely that is a typographical error?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: How is the Brewer's Retail involved?

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): With the Boy Scouts.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Response from the general public has been overwhelming. Our organizing committee has been receiving an average of 700 inquiries a week over the past month, the majority of them from people concerned about their own retirement. We have also been receiving a substantial number of requests from community colleges, industry and labour for information on how to set up pre-retirement courses. As members may be aware, my ministry was the first to establish pre-retirement workshops for our own employees.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): If the Camp commission came today they would cut our salaries in half.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: With this kind of co-operation and support, we are confident that Senior Citizens' Week, 1973, will be a meaningful experience for both young and those not so young, and we are optimistic that the spirit created within this week will carry on through the coming months.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): The second one from Barry Lowes.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: We have already received commitments from the corporate sector that they are interested in becoming involved in our long-range pre-retirement programme.

Mr. Speaker, I am asking for members' support for Senior Citizens' Week and urge them to participate in the many activities planned by the senior citizens in their home constituencies.

FRENCH LANGUAGE INSTRUCTION

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I would like today to announce the establishment of a ministerial committee to develop improved curriculum and techniques for teaching French to the English-speaking students of Ontario—

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): Well, finally!

Hon. Mr. Wells: —and at the same time to review the aims and objectives of French-language courses in our schools.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Barry Lowes can't have another minute available.

Mr. Roy: The minister is a year and a half late.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The teaching of French to English-speaking students has long been a matter of concern to many people. There is a considerable misunderstanding of what has been done and what can be done with this aspect of bilingualism.

The statistical evidence of our present effort is worth noting. The figures for English-speaking children taking French in the elementary schools of Ontario are quite striking. In 1969, there were over 462,000 English-speaking children taking French, or about 32 per cent of all children in these grades.

Three years later, in 1972, the total taking French had risen to 580,000, or about 41 per cent of the elementary school population.

In our secondary schools in 1970, over 252,000 English-speaking students were taking one or more courses in French, amounting to over 45 per cent of the total enrolment. In 1972, the ratio dropped to about 37 per cent, involving just over 218,000 students. This trend at the secondary level is due in part to the fact that universities no longer require French as a prerequisite.

The province provides additional funds to school boards offering French-language programmes. Under the federal-provincial programme of co-operation for the development of bilingualism in education, Ontario received $15.5 million in 1972, and paid $17 million in additional grants to school boards.

Interesting as the statistical record is, Mr. Speaker, there are some larger questions which deserve thoughtful answers concerning the whole area of bilingualism, particularly as it relates to Anglophone students in Ontario schools.

In his report on French language secondary education, Prof. T. H. B. Symons proposed a ministry task force to determine how the needs of the English-speaking community in the field of bilingual education could best be met.

Mr. Roy: He said he wanted a report in 1972.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The subsequent review conducted by officials of our curriculum branches has indicated that much remains to be done.

It is evident that many people assume that the teaching of French to English-speaking pupils, in periods running from 20 to 40 minutes a day, will result in fluent bilingualism—or that the mere introduction of some form of instruction in the French language fulfils our commitment to a bilingualism programme.

There are misconceptions.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That is not what it says.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Our experience tells us that all the schools can do is establish a sound basis for language skills.

The objective has been well expressed by the federal royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, which states that the schools provide, and I quote:

An introduction to the language which would make it possible for the students to further develop or reacquire the skills after leaving school. The school is the place where the capacity for bilingualism can be established. After graduation the individual will have the choice of which skills, if any, he wishes to develop, and the degree of perfection he wishes to acquire.

Learning a new language, Mr. Speaker, can be a complex undertaking for a child. There are no simple solutions to the teaching of a second language. It is greatly facilitated both before and during the learning process if the student can talk, or wishes to talk, to a person able to speak the language being studied.

There is another problem arising from the social environment that exists in most parts of Ontario. In our English-language schools there has been a scarcity of teachers whose first language is French, as these teachers have been needed in the French-language schools.

It is certainly true that there are many hundreds of teachers in this province, whose native language is English, doing a first-rate job of providing quality instruction in the French language. It would be ideal if we could supplement their efforts by enabling our students to have increased contact with teachers whose first language is French; but attainment of this goal seems, at the moment, to be beyond our reach.

Similarly it is very difficult for all but a fortunate few English-speaking students to meet and mingle with French-speaking compatriots, and thus use the language skill acquired in school. Without constant practice, Mr. Speaker, under normal conditions of human relations, an immature language skill soon is lost.

These matters, Mr. Speaker, are practical problems which should be faced with realism and patience, but I say to you today, they should be faced.

While there may be difficulties involved, and even a little inconvenience, my belief is that the preservation and strengthening of our Canadian nation and our unique Canadian character largely depends on the opportunities for English-speaking Canadians everywhere—and perhaps most notably in Ontario—to acquire and retain an appreciation and understanding of the French component in our society.

There is no better starting point than the French language programmes in our schools provided that these programmes are devised and presented in a lively and imaginative manner, designed to capture the lasting interest of our young people, and provided that they are supplemented by other programmes, notably social studies, history and music.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, having reaffirmed our statement of belief in the ideal of bilingualism in this province, we need to chart a positive course for the schools. The need is to lay out some realistic and attainable goals with regard to French instruction for English-speaking students, and then to offer guidance and practical aid to schools and teachers in helping them reach these goals.

Now recently an important step was taken in this direction. Our ministry has just concluded an arrangement with the office of the Secretary of State in Ottawa, whereby $2.1 million a year for the next two years will be provided by Ottawa through our ministry to the four school boards in the national capital region for a pilot project in increased teaching of French as a second language.

The cost of research involved in the experiment, as well as its evaluation, will be borne by the Ministry of Education, and we expect the results from these programmes to be very helpful in charting our future directions.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we are announcing the creation of a ministerial committee to reach through the problems and difficulties that I have mentioned on a province-wide basis. The chairman of this ministerial committee will be Mr. Robert Gillin of the London regional office of the Ministry of Education.

Because of the technical nature of the assignment, the other members of the committee will include ministry, school board and university representatives who are knowledgeable and articulate in the field of second-language teaching. We are also asking the Ontario Teachers Federation to name four persons to this committee.

Now the full membership of the committee, together with the specific terms of reference, will be announced and tabled in the House within a few days.

Mr. Speaker, I am very confident that the work of this committee will lead to a more viable programme of French teaching of greater benefit to the students of Ontario—and to the bilingual character of Canada itself.

Mr. Roy: This is just about a year and a half late.

EXPERIENCE '73

Hon. M. Birch (Minister without Portfolio):

Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that Experience '73, the special summer job programme which the youth secretariat has been co-ordinating, is under way. In making this announcement, Mr. Speaker, I would like to highlight some of the activities the young people will be involved in and the effects these activities will have on communities in the province.

There are 17 job projects in Experience '73 which cover fields of interest ranging from environment and social services to municipal planning and education.

In addition to providing a source of income for those employed, the programme will provide employment experience—experience which will allow many students to apply directly what they are learning in high school, college or university.

Some young people in Experience '73 will be working with residents in the Ontario facilities for the mentally retarded as in the RSVP—retardation student volunteer programme. Others are working with local planning departments in the IMA—involvement in municipal administration programme. And others are working with local historical and geographical societies in the PEOPLE project, which will explore and preserve Ontario's heritage while developing field study kits for use in schools.

These are but three examples of Experience '73 projects which can assist young people in making their future career decisions.

Mr. Speaker, through the efforts of the young people involved in Experience '73 concrete benefits will be rendered to communities in the province. Our conservation authorities will be maintained and improved through SWEEP. Our roadsides and streams will be made cleaner through SWEEP environment. Residents of nursing homes will experience the vitality and enthusiasm of the young people who will assist them with recreational and social activities through SNAP—our student nursing home activity programme.

As well as those who are employed in Experience '73, Mr. Speaker, the programme will enrich the summer for thousands of young people who will be participating in some of the job projects.

For instance, the urban-rural exchange will enable young participants from the city and the country to spend a week of their summer in the opposite environment to their home. And the Ontario youth summer enterprises project will give young people a chance to set up and to operate their own small businesses.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that we have met our original expectation and have placed just over 7,000 young people through Experience '73.

The programme met with a very enthusiastic response from the youth of Ontario and some 30,000 applications were received. Since each applicant had an opportunity to express two choices, approximately 60,000 applications were processed.

I would like to add, Mr. Speaker, that where possible the youth secretariat has directed the unsuccessful applicants in our programme to the private sector.

I am confident that the efforts put forth by the young people in Experience '73 will provide relevant learning situations to the participants, will bring youthful spirit to communities where projects are in operation and will provide an opportunity for the sponsoring ministries to accomplish worthwhile tasks made possible through this special summer programme by the government of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions. The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

FRENCH LANGUAGE INSTRUCTION

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A question of the Minister of Education further to his statement today, and I congratulate him on it.

What finally persuaded him, after 10 years of criticism from the opposition and other aspects of the community of Ontario, that second language, French language education in the English community needed some upgrading, when one of his predecessors, the Premier, used to defend the system violently if not valiantly, saying that it had reached practical perfection?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Premier): I am never violent.

Mr. Lewis: He's not a violent man.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): No.

Mr. Lewis: He's not even a valiant man!

Hon. Mr. Wells: As in all things, it's an evolutionary process.

Mr. Singer: Yes, we have evolved away from the Premier.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The Premier of this province—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The Premier of this province had the great courage to introduce this programme—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The teaching of French?

Hon. Mr. Wells: —into the system in a meaningful way.

An hon. member: Yes, yes!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): It took a lot of courage?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think that when members look at the statistics that were quoted in the statement I made, they can see the fact that the programme has caught on in the schools. What we're trying to—

Mr. Singer: The minister was doing better when he was explaining to the school boards.

Hon. Mr. Wells: It's certainly accepted in the schools. What we're trying to correct now are the misconceptions that some people have of what the programme in the schools really can do.

Mrs. Campbell: The elementary level is a start.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think that's what we want this technical committee to look at, to look at the curriculum, to look at the expectations for the programme and to map out the goals.

Mr. Stokes: The minister should dazzle them and answer them in French.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think, actually, the fact that my predecessors started the programme in this province, we have to give them full—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Started what programme? The teaching of French?

Hon. R. Welch (Provincial Secretary for Social Development): Elementary!

Hon. Mr. Wells: The teaching of French in the elementary schools as a second language.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Wells: And making it become an important part of the curriculum. What we're now doing is—

Mr. Lewis: The only misconceptions were in the ministry.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The members don't know the objections we had at the time.

Mr. Lewis: The misconceptions didn't exist in the public mind.

Hon. Mr. Wells: No, I don't think that—

Mr. Lewis: They existed in the minister's mind.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I don't think that the member realizes the climate that existed at that time and the courage it took to take the steps that were taken by my predecessor.

Mrs. Campbell: That's the courage that is going to kill—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Is the minister aware that under the provisions of his directive HS1 fewer and fewer students are opting for the French language as a subject in the secondary school system? Is he going to amend HS1 to correct that fault?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I am aware; indeed in that statement I indicated that fewer students are choosing French now that they are given a free choice to choose French. There are several reasons for that; it represents a world-wide phenomenon in that the learning of languages is not as popular as it was. This, I am told, is occurring all over the world.

It is caused because universities now no longer require French as a prerequisite for entrance to university, and therefore this influences the young people's choice.

Certainly the whole matter of whether or not there be compulsory subjects in the HS1 credit system is something that will be decided when the review committee has finished its review at the end of this summer.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary. As the Minister of Education in the major English-speaking province in a nation which has accepted enthusiastically the concept of bilingualism—

Mr. Singer: Except for Diefenbaker!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: —does he not believe that the school system ought to take more initiative and leadership in the teaching of the French language rather than simply to give it to this committee, no matter how well it might be constituted, to fulfill criticisms that have been leveled at the ministry during the terms of the past four incumbents?

Mr. Singer: Courageous or not!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I thought the member had congratulated him?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I don't quite understand the hon. member's question, because I think the statistical evidence shows that the number of elementary school children taking French is increasing.

Mrs. Campbell: They get 15 minutes a week.

Hon. Mr. Wells: We now have about 41 per cent.

Mr. R. S. Smith (Nipissing): How many of them are learning though!

Hon. Mr. Wells: These programmes were established under our guidelines—

Mr. R. S. Smith: None!

Hon. Mr. Wells: —by the autonomous school boards that my friend likes to talk about.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: We're not talking of the school boards, the ones the minister cut the budgets for.

Mr. Singer: Scarborough, North York, Dovercourt, city of Toronto—

Hon. Mr. Wells: The fact of the matter is that I, as minister, and this province, are committed to a programme of developing French as a second language in our schools. This province is committed to a programme of supporting bilingualism because of its necessity for the Canadian nation. I think that we have underlined this over the years. We have done it despite some of the carping and criticism that comes from Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nickel Belt.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

How many of the minister's appointments to the technical committee are going to be from northern Ontario and how many of them are going to be women?

An hon. member: Say, he's got this thing about women!

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, that will be very evident to the hon. member when we table the membership of the committee in a few days.

Mr. Roy: As a supplementary question to the answer the minister gave to my leader, what possibly took so long when his confidant, Prof. Tom Symons, in his report which was produced here in March, 1972, I think it was, clearly stated what the minister has just stated in the House today, that a commission should be established in 1972 to bring in a report in 1972, according to recommendation 76? What took so long to bring in the minister's report?

Mr. Lewis: A year's delay is positively speedy.

Mr. Roy: A year and a half!

Hon. Mr. Wells: My hon. friend has not listened to the statement and fails to remember what Prof. Symons recommended. His recommendation suggested an inter-ministerial committee, in other words a committee of people completely within my ministry. On an informal basis this has happened. Based on the kind of documentation and the kind of things that I have got over my year as Minister of Education, I have come to the conclusions that I have reached in this statement.

Mr. Singer: Another courageous move!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Foulds: Does this committee have the authorization to examine the question of the use of federal funds given to the ministry for French teaching and which is given to boards, sort of carte blanche, and often is not used for that purpose?

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, when does the minister expect this committee to have its report in to him?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The answer to the first question, Mr. Speaker, is no. It is not a witch hunt committee to look at the spending of funds.

Mr. Foulds: Who introduced the words "witch hunt"?

Hon. Mr. Wells: But it can certainly look at the costs of putting in the kind of French-language programmes that it thinks should be put in.

The answer to the second question is I would expect it would be reporting next spring.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, in view of the significant courage exemplified by the Premier in undertaking the teaching of French in Ontario in elementary schools, I wondered if the minister could give us any statistical help as to what percentage of Anglophones graduating from English-speaking elementary schools are bilingual?

Mr. Lewis: In the 20th century?

Mr. Singer: None!

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member illustrates one of the major problems that faces us today, that is—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —what are the goals and expectations of teaching French as a second language in the elementary schools? Somehow people expected that by the 20- or 40-minute programmes we would be producing bilingual students.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Now the minister is getting the point.

Hon. Mr. Wells: That is precisely what my ministerial committee's report said, that if that is what is expected, the schools are not doing their job.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The report dealt with the school system, not just elementary schools.

Hon. Mr. Wells: He said elementary.

Mr. Lewis: Those are the misconceptions of the ministry.

Hon. Mr. Wells: That is a misconception. If the hon. member will recall the quote that I read from the bilingualism and biculturalism commission—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Reid: Suddenly it is completely lost on the minister.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The quote stated that the best that the schools could probably do was to develop the interest and facility for students to want to further their studies in bilingualism and then to develop how they would do that, but that the schools' programmes certainly to date will not produce fluently bilingual students and I don't think that it ever was intended to do that. It was intended to do something different. What we want this committee to delineate very carefully for all the people of this province and those in the school system is just what are the goals and objectives of our bilingualism teaching in the schools, because it is important.

Mr. Bullbrook: Recognizing that the hon. minister didn't have the benefit of growing up in a French-speaking community with other French-speaking children, as this member did, would he agree with me that he doesn't need a technical committee to tell him that the most efficacious way of teaching children French is to teach them in kindergarten and grade 1?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Some say so.

Mr. Bullbrook: They are crazy if they say no. That is the time to teach them French, right then.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Interjections by hon. members.

BRANTFORD EXPRESSWAY

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I have a question of the Premier, Mr. Speaker: As the author of the original "Stop-the-Expressway" policy for which he is continuing to take a great deal of credit, can he explain to the House why the representative of the government, Dr. Berger, hired to hold hearings in Brantford regarding the expressway there, is being paid, it is reported, on the basis of $50 an hour. And for the convenience of the many citizens of Brantford who want to give their view to the commissioner, or the hearing officer, he has been persuaded to have evening sessions and is probably being paid at the rate of $500 a day, even though the government is not asking him for any opinions whatsoever but simply to convey to the minister—who is absent today—the views of the local residents. How can the Premier justify that sort of an expenditure on top of the commitment to build the expressway, which was signed by the previous Minister of Highways? Surely the waste of money in this connection has got to be stopped?

Mr. Singer: Oh, no. The signed contracts don't mean anything to this government.

Mr. Lewis: Mind you, I know Earl Berger; but he's not worth $50 an hour.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I still say that I'm right, that the leader of the New Democratic Party did on occasion quote Dr. Berger here when he was writing on matters educational.

Mr. Lewis: Sure, on many an occasion. He was a Globe and Mail reporter for goodness sake!

Hon. Mr. Davis: To reply to the Leader of the Opposition's question, which obviously reflects a certain interest, perhaps of a somewhat parochial, but understandable nature—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Yes, $500 a day is coming from the consolidated revenue fund—

Hon. Mr. Davis: —I would only say to the Leader of the Opposition, related to the function of Dr. Berger and the hearings, that really we've heard a great deal in this session, certainly in the past three or four months, related to the need for this government to consult with the people that we have been elected to serve—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Ask the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Beckett) what he thinks about it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and surely, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the Leader of the Opposition supports the concept.

As it relates to the amount of money being paid to Dr. Berger per hour, or per day, I am not familiar with the mathematics. I will discuss this with the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. Winkler) and the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Carton). But, Mr. Speaker, I say that I think there—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He won't know.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —is great merit on matters of this kind in involving the public in some form of dialogue or discussion.

Mr. Singer: Dialogue?

Mrs. Campbell: That's not dialogue!

Hon. Mr. Davis: This is mentioned to us very regularly by members opposite when it suits their purposes to do so. Of course, when it doesn't suit their own personal likes or dislikes or preferences, then of course the government should take precipitate action and not involve the general public in the discussion.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it is fair to state, Mr. Speaker, in that there was some reference to the Spadina and my authorship which—on occasion I have questioned, I mean I have been questioned by others as to the authorship—but the decision, yes, was that of the government. I think it is fair to state that if the hon. member for Downsview had had his way, or if the hon. member for York-Forest Hill (Mr. Givens) had had his way, there would have been no consultation, there would have been an expressway because of a decision by cabinet without any involvement of the public as far as the provincial government is concerned.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The Premier was part of the cabinet that decided to build it!

Hon. Mr. Davis: So I say, Mr. Speaker, let's be consistent. If the people across the House want consultation, then say so. When an issue arises where they think the government should move unilaterally, well then let's be frank and no hypocrisy and also say so.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): It isn't consultation, it's manipulation.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary question: We were talking about the $500 a day and the consultation of the good citizens of Brantford, some of whom want the expressway and some of whom don't; surely it would be the better part of any kind of a management exercise to ask Dr. Berger—who has these marvellous qualifications and who is worth $500 a day—for his own opinion after he has consulted with the people in the Brantford area? After all, the hon. member for Brantford is paid to consult with them, too, and he has an opinion which has been expressed in the past. Why not listen to him on occasion?

Mr. Lewis: Or the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. McIlveen). The Premier might learn more from his backbenchers.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would say we listen to the hon. member for Brantford quite regularly, and I would make this observation: It might be that the hon. member for Brantford is, in economic terms—if one wants to put it on this basis—worth every bit of what is being paid Dr. Berger.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Far more!

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't question that at all. But I would say, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transportation and Communications answered this aspect of it yesterday. If the hon. Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He said he would get the information.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —wishes me to get further information and take 10 or 15 minutes of the House time, I could do this to further expand upon what the minister said yesterday. If he wishes this, I will attempt to do this some time later on in the week.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The Premier's answers are lengthy, but not informative.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Doesn't the Premier feel that the time to initiate the consultative process is in advance of the determination of the expressway and construction being under way? And second, does he really think that it's worth paying that kind of money to this public relations outfit for a simple propaganda job in the process of the development? Surely, he can't defend that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister made it very clear yesterday that it was not a question of a propaganda job at all. I would agree with the leader of the New Democratic Party—we are all blessed with hindsight—that there is great merit, if one can do it, in arranging the consultative process in those issues where it is necessary in advance of the event.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier has the power.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't quarrel with this concept whatsoever.

Mr. Lewis: It is not in the bill the government introduced yesterday. It is not in the Planning and Development Act.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would also make this observation to the leader of the New Democratic Party, that there are some occasions where it is not possible to have some form of dialogue prior to certain decisions having to be made. I think it is fair to say that. I will give the leader of the New Democratic Party an example, and he can relate it to the Planning and Development Act. I think if the Treasurer (Mr. White) determines that an area should become a development area and there is some form of consultative process prior to that determination, then you run into—if it's to be, say a housing development or something where the escalation in land costs could become significant, there is merit in determining the development project and then going through the consultative process.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier is confirming everything we said yesterday.

Mr. Singer: He is beyond belief.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether I am confirming what the leader of the New Democratic Party has said, but I am saying that there are situations—and I think this must be abundantly clear—where the consultative process—

Mr. Lewis: The government can freeze it.

Mr. Cassidy: The government did that at Pickering, why can't it do it anywhere else?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —if this is part of the question, cannot be held in advance of certain determinations that must be made. I think that must be obvious to us.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary—

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, does the Premier mean that he is saying that the consultative process could not have been undertaken in advance of something like parkway west, or a major housing project, or any of the major economic projects for southern Ontario? Does he realize what he is saying about the way he views the consultative process in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am just making this very simple, I hope, observation. That when it comes to certain decisions, say the question of a transportation corridor, to make that a public area for discussion prior to the determination of where a ministry or municipality wishes this to be, and prior to there being some way to see there is no major escalation or speculation in land, I am saying with respect—

Mr. Lewis: The government can freeze it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —that I think the consultative process may have to come after certain other determinations or suggested determinations are made. To me it only makes common sense.

Mr. Lewis: It doesn't to me.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary and relating to the Premier's remark directed to my colleague from Forest Hill and myself, and a certain express called Spadina.

Would the Premier not agree that it gets a little late to consult after one of his ministers has signed a contract, after over $100 million has been spent—

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): And after 20 years of consultation!

Mr. Singer: And after 20 years of planning and consultation, and after a hearing by the OMB, that it seems more than a little stupid to, at that point, initiate a consultation process? And isn't the government doing the same thing in Brantford where money has been spent, where a contract has been signed, where a minister has approved of it, where the government's highway engineers have approved of it? To start a consultation process after the thing is half way down the road, isn't that really stupid?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I guess this is where one can mark a very definite difference between the party that governs this province and the party that would like to.

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That will.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That would like to! And I guess that very distinct difference is, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Singer: That's one of the reasons.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —that this government is prepared to acknowledge that things took place 20 years ago, 10, five or even a year ago—

Mr. Singer: Four!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: How about five?

Mr. Singer: A $100 million!

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Davis: —which, if this government determines were in error or should be reassessed, it is prepared to do. It is quite obvious that the party opposite would, even if the ultimate results 10 or 15 years from now were horrendous, would be prepared to, in a very reactionary way, move ahead with any existing programme.

Mr. Lewis: That's right, I agree!

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will say, Mr. Speaker, this is one of the very distinct differences between this government and the party that would wish to be the government and will never become the government.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Singer: Let the Premier establish policy and stick to his commitment.

An hon. member: Yes, he would.

Mr. Lewis: The difference between authoritarians of the right and authoritarians of the left. That's the difference, that's the difference!

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: And socialists in the centre.

Interjections by hon. members.

EFFECT OF SALES TAX INCREASE ON COST OF LIVING

Mr. R. F. Nixon: And meanwhile Dr. Berger gets his $500 a day.

Okay, Mr. Speaker, a question of the Treasurer. Is he now prepared to admit the truth of the contention put forward in the debates from this side of the House on the sales tax in reference to the findings of Statistics Canada that the cost of living has moved forward directly as a result of the imposition of the seven per cent tax?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: As predicted in the speech of the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman).

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I think I have made it pretty clear, Mr. Speaker, that the additional sales tax would be very quickly reflected in the cost of living index, while the widespread reductions in property tax would not be so reflected, but that I myself would not let the imperfection of the index stand in the way of reforming taxes in this province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: Is the Treasurer then calling into contention the veracity of the information from Statistics Canada which specifically said that the increase in the cost of living measured across Canada was significantly affected by the imposition of this additional 40 per cent?

Mr. Lewis: Specifically by the Treasurer.

Mr. Roy: Not a plugged nickel!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Does the Treasurer remember the member for High Park's speech on second reading and the minister laughed at him for the suggestion of inflation?

Hon. Mr. White: No, he said—did he say it was going to be deflationary; or was that the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) who called it deflationary?

Mr. Lewis: He said it was going to be inflationary.

Hon. Mr. White: I can't keep the players straight in that caucus. Dr. Sylvia Ostry, who is a very clever woman and the first woman of deputy status in Ottawa, who is the head of Statistics Canada, and a—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The minister is not going to tell us that elaborate story about the percentages?

Hon. Mr. White: And a very clever woman whom I myself had an opportunity to appoint to the Committee on University Affairs.

Mr. Lewis: She was the first woman appointed to the Committee on University Affairs.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No she wasn't.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: She is a fellow economist who thinks along the same lines as I do.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. White: Dr. Ostry would be the first to agree with me—

Mr. Lewis: She would not. Don't impugn Sylvia Ostry.

Hon. Mr. White: That the imperfections of the index have resulted in this report.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Imperfections? Part of the cost of living.

Hon. Mr. White: But that the facts, the reality of the situation is this shifting the burden of taxation from property to retail sales tax has no real effect on the cost of living, but does have a very real effect on the progressivity of our tax system here.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Not a dime, not a plugged nickel!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

SEWER CONTROL PROGRAMME

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the provincial Treasurer, now that he has got zoning bylaws and official plans and ministerial orders on development controls, can he explain to the House his new programme of land use in Ontario called sewer control?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: The minister remembers sewer control for southern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, does my hon. friend not recall the Toronto-centred region, the zone two, the limitations to be imposed on the sprawl which would otherwise take place? The need for establishing upper limits in the satellite communities?

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Hon. Mr. White: And is he not aware that the only way in which this can be rigorously enforced—

Mr. Lewis: Is by controlling sewers.

Hon. Mr. White: Is by limiting the size of the pipe. Yes.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Oh come on! Talk about coming down the pipe, my hon. friend. There has been a lot in this House, but never anything of that—

Hon. Mr. White: The member should be careful or I am going to pull—

Mr. Singer: It is the same kind of reasoning.

Mr. Lewis: I know this is the kind of thing the Treasurer can cope with. It is manageable for him. Has the minister yet, in his vast dedication to the consultative process, revealed to all the people in municipalities concerned these population figures which his tightly knit provincial policy group has measured in advance without letting anyone in on it so far?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, sir. There have been a number of consultative meetings.

Mr. Lewis: With whom?

Hon. Mr. White: With a wide variety of politicians and party officials.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Like whom?

Hon. Mr. White: I think the most recent meeting I had was a month ago with Garfield Wright, with Ab Campbell, with a number of people from Toronto. I think there were 25 at the meeting altogether. We decided on a review process and we decided that the subcommittee established for the purpose would report back to us at 11 a.m., Thursday, June 14.

Mr. Lewis: With what?

Hon. Mr. White: With recommendations.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary; with recommendations on what? On the size of the pipe or the size of the population?

Hon. Mr. White: On the population per municipality, thereby enabling Environment or the OWRC to set the size of the pipe.

Mr. Lewis: Why wasn't that mentioned?

Hon. Mr. White: While I am on my feet, I'm glad these ladies who are friends and neighbours of mine had a chance to witness this absurdity. Take the message back to Middlesex.

Mr. Lewis: That accounts for the note I got, Mr. Speaker, which said: "Those of us from Middlesex county are converting to the NDP", and I didn't know its anonymous origin.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: They tried it once and they didn't like it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bullbrook: Do they use bigger pipes there?

Mr. Lewis: Leave my pipes alone.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West has a supplementary. I forget what the original was.

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): With the minister's so great concern with the size of pipe and population, is he not also concerned about the size of lateral pipes and the efficacy of their connection to the size of his pipes?

Mr. Lewis: He just made a statement on lateral recreation.

Hon. Mr. White: I feel as if I am having a pipe-dream here.

Mr. Bounsall: The Treasurer started it.

Hon. Mr. White: Yes. The regional government certainly will have the authority or the county governments or the municipalities, wherever the responsibility lies, to decide upon the size of the lateral pipes.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): What is in the pipe?

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): What is the minister smoking?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I made a mistake when I said the meeting was this Thursday at 11; it is actually this Friday at 11.

Mr. Lewis: Oh well, thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West, a supplementary.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary; all right!

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, since this question is about consultation, will the minister honour his commitment to consult with the Peel county council before the second reading of that bill?

Hon. Mr. White: I certainly fully expect to do this. It was mentioned to me yesterday by my parliamentary assistant, and we have yet to set a date.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The minister is not going.

Hon. Mr. White: That is my expectation.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The Premier doesn't want to go, either.

Hon. Mr. White: I never break a promise.

Mr. Singer: He is going to be busy drawing up the schedule of the size of the pipes. A very important document!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Ours are in the ground.

INTEREST PAYMENT ON GERMAN LOANS

Mr. Lewis: I have a further question of the Treasurer. Now that the federal government has indicated that Canada had to pay $24 million more than it borrowed five years ago from West Germany, $24 million on an original loan of $67 million, what is the upward revision in cost to Ontario on the various loans that we have negotiated which have been affected by the revaluation of the mark?

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park). He doesn't know.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I'll have to take this as notice.

Mr. Lewis: That is what the Treasurer did last time.

Hon. Mr. White: What I would like to do is provide an up-date in the information. We've had certain capital losses in Germany.

Mr. Shulman: The government was warned about them ahead of time, too.

Hon. Mr. White: Just a minute, we've had very decided operating savings in Germany.

Mr. Shulman: Oh nonsense!

Hon. Mr. White: We've had tremendous capital gains on American loans. All in all, we've saved the people of this province tens of millions of dollars,

Mr. Cassidy: Look at them! They will believe anything.

Mr. Lewis: The Treasurer is putting on a little show today for his constituents. He is not usually like this. He is always quiet.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: In connection with the savings on the loans from Germany, is the Treasurer aware that in testimony before the select committee dealing with the Hydro building, Hydro officials indicated they could not contact Mr. Gerhard Moog on one occasion, because he was in Germany "assisting the officials of the government of Ontario in meeting the financial community?" Did, in fact, Mr. Moog travel with the Treasurer's officials and assist in, let us say, finding the money for the original loan?

Hon. Mr. White: I have never heard of it before in my life. The Premier says the answer is no.

Mr. Roy: The Treasurer doesn't read the papers, eh?

Mr. Lewis: Moog!

Mr. Shulman: Is the minister seriously suggesting that the international loans that have been made by his department have saved the people of Ontario tens of millions of dollars, or was that a jest?

Mr. Lewis: It is not possible.

Hon. Mr. White: I will bring the details in, Mr. Speaker, as I've undertaken to do. I'm saying we've saved money on interest on the German loan. We lost money on revaluation.

Mr. Lewis: On revaluation, right!

Hon. Mr. White: We have gained a great deal of money through several revaluations involving the Canadian and US dollar respectively. We will have to put these all together and we will come up with a figure showing how these transactions will save the people of Ontario many millions of dollars.

Mr. Shulman: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister not aware that the saving in the interest rate was only one per cent while he has already lost over 16 per cent in the capital loss? Is that what the minister considers as saving tens of millions? Is the minister not aware that the true loss is well over $100 million?

Mr. Lewis: Is the Treasurer going to get Mr. Clasky to tabulate it for him?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will be bringing in the proof and this conjecture, I think, is not helpful.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, the Treasurer's figures are proof.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, as a further supplementary, will the minister, when he brings in the proof, give us the effective rate after all these calculations have been completed as to the actual interest we are paying on the loan?

Mr. Lewis: It is 13.2 per cent.

Mr. Shulman: Higher!

Hon. Mr. White: If possible, I will.

Mr. Shulman: It will be over 16 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West. The hon. member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Bullbrook: May we have one more supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, all right.

Mr. Bullbrook: I wonder if the Treasurer would clarify for me, since my leader's question had to do with direct involvement of Mr. Moog; is the minister giving us an undertaking that Mr. Moog had no involvement, direct or otherwise, in connection with the borrowing by this government in Germany?

Mr. Lewis: Carefull!

Hon. Mr. White: Well, I have never heard the subject raised before in my life.

Mr. Shulman: And he is sorry to hear it right now.

Hon. Mr. White: I am certainly not aware of any such assistance, no.

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of one final supplementary, would the Treasurer ascertain whether Mr. Moog had any involvement, direct or otherwise, with any minister of the Crown or any official of the government of Ontario in connection with acquiring any borrowing by this government in Germany?

Hon. Mr. White: I will certainly inquire about it.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Is it not a fact that the Hydro building contract is his finder's fee?

HATE LITERATURE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General. I have just brought to his attention what I call hate propaganda which has been distributed across my riding. I would ask the minister to make an investigation and launch a prosecution in what I consider to be a breach under section 281(2) of the Criminal Code as being hate propaganda. I wonder if the minister might look into that?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Attorney General): The member has just delivered a folder to me and there is no identification as to where it was published or by whom; but he tells me it has been published across his riding and I will look at it in that sense.

Mr. Roy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker, in the light of the fact that a prosecution under that section of the code requires the minister's consent, and in light of the fact that these posters were distributed yesterday in my riding in the capital—and apparently there has been one arrest in Ottawa—would the minister look into the situation with a view of investigating and making appropriate prosecutions?

Hon. Mr. Bales: As I said before, I will look into the matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South.

TIMMINS SECONDARY SCHOOL

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education. Is the minister aware that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Guindon), in representing him at the opening of Ecole Secondaire Theriault in Timmins about two weeks ago, went on record as saying that he would become a strong advocate for the building of a new high school in Timmins—the Timmins High and Vocational School?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the House the other day, my colleague, the Minister of Labour, who is a very strong advocate of the French-language school system in this province and who has done more I think on behalf of Francophones than most people in this House, has spoken to me and mentioned the plight of the Timmins high school, and he carried the message very well.

I had to thank him for that message and tell him that with the constraints under which we have to operate—just as his ministry has to operate—and with the money that's available to the school boards, our original suggestion to the Timmins Board of Education has to stand. In fact, I am waiting for their proposal for a renovation of that building and I am told that it will be arriving down here very shortly.

Mr. Ferrier: As a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Labour when he was there got first-hand information as to the pressing need for a new school, would the minister try to work into his schedule a visit to Timmins so that he could see first hand and perhaps get a little enlightened perspective such as he got when he was there?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope that sometime in the near future I will be able to visit Timmins and see. I don't think I need to visit every school firsthand to get complete knowledge or just what that school is like. I know there are all kinds of school boards in this province which would like to rebuild schools in their jurisdiction.

As I indicated to the hon. member a large percentage of that school is barely 10 years old and it is pretty hard to justify scrapping those buildings and replacing them.

Mr. Ferrier: If the minister saw it for himself, he would see it needed to be replaced.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister of Education has the answer to a question previously asked.

FUTURE OF MUSEUM SCHOOL

Hon. Mr. Wells: This is an answer, Mr. Speaker, to a question that the hon. member for St. George asked me about the museum in Toronto. I would like to tell her that the Royal Ontario Museum has received a grant of $60,000 each year from the Metropolitan Toronto School Board; in addition the borough boards supplied, in rotation, two teachers to work in the museum to serve classes visiting the museum. It is understood that the Metro Toronto School Board has withdrawn the grants to the museum and the teachers are to be retained in the borough schools.

The Royal Ontario Museum has its own educational staff consisting of a head, six permanent teachers, one person supported by Indian Affairs, the head of the children's department, and 12 occasional teachers.

It would appear that the staff of a school, with help from the museum staff, will in future be expected to provide assistance to pupils from Metro Toronto visiting the museum. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that this is the case with all schools and children visiting from outside Metropolitan Toronto, so it should be no hardship.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville is next.

SANITARY SEWERS

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Treasurer and Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs. When does the minister intend to introduce legislation that would make it mandatory to have sanitary sewer connections?

Hon. Mr. White: This matter was raised not long ago. I have no firm date in mind. I have some further inquiries to make and advice to receive before recommendations are made to my colleagues.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware that the city of Windsor refuses to call for tenders on a $600,000 sanitary sewer until the time legislation is introduced making it mandatory to connect to sanitary sewers?

Hon. Mr. White: I don't think that I was in possession of this fact, but it certainly is troublesome. As I say, there are certain complexities here which I want to understand—

Mr. Singer: That's because they don't know how big the sewers are.

Hon. Mr. White:—and come to grips with before a final decision is made.

Mr. Lewis: It is a matter that they have to measure the size. It is so big in Windsor.

Hon. Mr. White: I understand this aspect of the problem and I would like to move it ahead.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Don Mills.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary? All right.

Mr. B. Newman: Could the minister be a little more specific as to the date? Will it be before the House recesses for the summer break?

Hon. Mr. White: I shouldn't think it will be that soon. I don't think so.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Don Mills.

EDUCATION OPTIONS IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS

Mr. D. R. Timbrell (Don Mills): Mr. Speaker, my question is of the Minister of Education. I wonder if he has had drawn to his attention the results of a brief survey in the North York secondary school system indicating some concern on the part of some secondary school teachers about the availability of options and the way in which they are chosen by students? Does he have any comment on this, if this has been made known to him?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I presume that the hon. member is talking about the survey reported in the newspaper today, which said that North York high school teachers were critical of the pick-your-own credit system now in effect in the high schools of Ontario and in the high schools of North York. I haven't had an opportunity to see that report; it hasn't been presented to me.

I would like to tell the hon. member, as he well knows, and this House, that last Friday when I met with the presidents of all the students' councils of high schools in North York, I received a very well-thought-out brief about our ceiling policies and one of the statements in that brief was this, and I'd like to just read it. This is from the North York Council of Student Presidents and it says:

We would like at this time to express our full support and belief in the credit system as outlined in principle by the Ministry of Education's HSI plan and would be deeply disillusioned by any attempt on the ministry's part to decrease the flexibility and imaginative aspects of the credit system.

Now I would hope that the teachers in North York who took this survey would get together with the student council presidents and perhaps talk over things.

Mr. Singer: By way of a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell us what the North York association of student presidents said about the ceilings in that same brief? Could he read that?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would be glad to send the hon. member the total brief but—

Mr. Singer: Read it out loud. Don't deprive the rest of us of that information.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —the North York Council of Student Presidents said that it disturbed them that perhaps some of the flexibility and course options might vanish because of tight budgetary restrictions.

Mr. Singer: Why doesn't the minister read it? Read it the way they wrote it.

Hon. Mr. Wells: All right, I'll read it. It says here:

Regretfully, we believe that the imposition of the budget ceilings by the Ministry of Education for the current year has, in effect, set the tone for further reductions in the flexibility of the educational system.

We explained to them in a very well thought out meeting and in a very well handled meeting on the students' part, I thought, exactly what the whole rationale for the ceilings were, and I think that while they may not have completely agreed with us—

Mr. Singer: And they withdrew their brief.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Wells: —they certainly better understood what everyone was trying to do.

Mr. Singer: The minister nearly got away with that sneaky thing.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I actually wanted the member to have it in the first place.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

Presenting reports.

Motions

Introduction of bills.

GRAIN ELEVATOR STORAGE ACT

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Grain Elevator Storage Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, this simply brings the Grain Elevator Storage Act into line with the recommendations of the McRuer committee for the structure of an appeal board.

WEED CONTROL ACT

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Weed Control Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, the simple explanation of the bill is to bring the Weed Control Act in line with the Assessment Act for matters of appeal on assessment for weed cutting.

CHILD WELFARE ACT

Hon. Mr. Brunelle moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Child Welfare Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, the main purpose of this bill is to clarify the circumstances in which a different judge may deal with a child under this Act in subsequent proceedings after the child has been brought before the provincial court, family division, for a preliminary hearing.

HOMES FOR RETARDED PERSONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Brunelle moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Homes for Retarded Persons Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, the main purpose of this Act is to enable payment of an operating subsidy for residential services provided by corporations under this Act. That could include services provided in other than approved homes.

DAY NURSERIES ACT

Hon. Mr. Brunelle moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Day Nurseries Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, the main purpose of this amendment is to enable the government to implement changes, in response to new policy initiatives, in the number and kind of corporations eligible for grants and subsidies under the Day Nurseries Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

SAFETY GLAZING ACT, 1973

Mr. Shulman moves first reading of bill intituled, The Safety Glazing Act, 1973.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): It has nothing to do with agriculture. The minister may relax.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to protect persons by reducing the high incidence of accidental injuries and deaths resulting from the use of ordinary and neo-glass in hazardous locations.

This is a model of the bill that was drawn up by the co-operation of state governments in the United States which they and various governments have passed, suggesting it be made law across North America.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

PARKWAY BELT PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT ACT, 1973

Hon. Mr. White moves second reading of Bill 130, An Act to provide for Planning and Development of the Parkway Belt.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): This is the second of the three bills that the Treasurer (Mr. White) is putting before the House in an attempt to fulfil some of the promises and commitments made over the last 10 years to bring some order out of the growth of the large Metropolitan area around Toronto.

In the presentation given in the Macdonald Block a few days ago—a most impressive presentation indeed—I had the distinct impression that the minister, probably a few months ago, had hired a couple of students with a detailed map of the Metropolitan Toronto area and, with all of the information available to the ministry, they had coloured green all lands that were presently publicly owned or owned by public emanations.

He had all the golf courses coloured in and all of the cemeteries. He then was able to, by means of a very crooked ruler, to draw a line through and around a number of the rapidly growing areas of the Metropolitan Toronto community and say those will be our parkways, because, unfortunately, many of them are only a roadway wide. The minister has tried to justify their efficacy by saying that they planned to extend them 100 ft on each side so that they will be a real green separation, perhaps between growing communities but not always.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that particularly in the area north of Oakville and Burlington there is a real possibility of public acquisition of further lands. Even under those circumstances they are, in fact, in the present outlying reaches of the urbanizing area of Metropolitan Toronto, if not of the Toronto-centred region which, as members know, extends as far as 60 miles and even further from the city itself; that is from the city of Toronto.

We feel the approach to a parkway separation of municipalities is a good one, but when we see the procedures which have been used by the present administration, they appear to be ad hoc in the extreme. They appear to be simply a haphazard fulfilment of certain commitments made in the Speech from the Throne and made, politically, even before that time.

There has been no attempt to consolidate nor co-ordinate the needs of Ontario Hydro and the tremendously large rights of way needed to connect not only Nanticoke but Lakeview with the Pickering sources of electricity. The minister has indicated that further information from the Solandt commission work in that connection will be forthcoming. Obviously that will, I suppose, provide another green pathway up through the present urbanizing areas to the west of Toronto.

It seems also unrealistic that the parkway belt is restricted only to the area north and west of Metropolitan Toronto. We feel that if the government was going to take this rather superficial approach to the need for parkway designation it might have, in fact, been extended to the east as well, with the idea that the parkways might be amended and expanded as the government felt its new Planning Act and certain designations, particularly under its approach to developmental control, came into force and would have specific application under these special circumstances. It appears more and more that the parkway designations are largely meaningless.

In fact, the number of new parks, or the acreage associated with new parks, is vanishingly small and present only in those areas where government policy had already been announced even before the last election. I am referring specifically to the so-called Jim Snow park at Bronte. I am not sure that is the name it is eventually going to have after it is established! At the present time the Bronte park is simply a large purple sign propped up next to the Queen Elizabeth Way which indicates that the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Snow) is taking the action that was promised in the 1971 election campaign. Here comes the park master now.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): That increases the Tory representation from one to two for this very important bill.

An hon. member: A 100 per cent increase!

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Government Services): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would like to advise the hon. Leader of the Opposition that the park is very well under way as it was promised it would be on the date he said it was promised. One contract has been awarded and is, I believe, about 50 per cent completed. I believe we now have some 95 per cent of the land purchased.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear that the contract for the Jim Snow memorial washrooms has been let, and that the linear recreation which was referred to by the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Lawrence) is probably already staked out on those lands which have been acquired.

Believe me, Mr. Speaker, I am not critical of the acquisition of land or public purposes particularly for park purposes. The Conservative government is not the only one in Canada which, from time to time, announces its park policy in the heat and interest of an election campaign. I hope one of the other park announcements is going to be carried forward as the political promise made by the hon. Minister of Government Services has been carried out effectively.

Hon. Mr. Snow: The member hasn't too much grasp of the point.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: My point is this; that if we are talking about this as, in fact, a collection of parks, of course, it is a substantial disappointment and in that connection the title of the bill is a misnomer. If, in fact, this parkway concept is going to divide municipalities so that residents of the municipality will be able to establish a community of interest, then once again it is a serious disappointment.

Mr. Speaker, the same minister who is concerned with this bill has introduced the regional government bill for Peel county, where there is every indication that one of the municipalities, Mississauga, with a population of 175,000, is ridiculously unwieldy in its size. If the minister had any commitment to the use of a parkway—whether it is made up of parklands or just a green line on the map to divide municipalities so that they are a manageable size and could develop a community of interest—then obviously it is in the Mississauga area where it should have been used, if there was any philosophical and idealistic commitment to the concept.

Instead of that, we believe that this is a superficial approach to an ideal which had merit when it was first announced many months, in fact years ago. I believe it was the presentation of the MTART study where the researchers and those people who had done the development of planning concepts for the then Minister of Municipal Affairs and for the government as a whole, made the sort of recommendation which I am sure they now find substantially disappointing if this bill is indeed to fulfil it.

In case there is any doubt in your mind, Mr. Speaker, we in the Liberal Party cannot and do not intend to support it. We believe that it is misleading in its concept, that in fact it is a kind of window-dressing which is going to be substantially disappointing for the areas surrounding Metropolitan Toronto which—

Hon. Mr. Snow: Not at all.

Mr. R. F. Nixon:—believe in the preservation of sufficient park lands and which also believe in small manageable communities, whether or not they are grouped together under some form of regional government.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Not at all, not at all!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It is also quite apparent, Mr. Speaker, that when the government accepted as policy the provisions of the Toronto-centred region plan some years ago, they did this to some extent with tongue in cheek, that whenever it suits their purpose—whether it is to fit in with the application of a friend of the government for approval of a subdivision in an area where the density recommendations under the Toronto-centred plan would not permit, or whether if in fact the Toronto-centred region plan requirement stands in the way of certain green colorations that they want on their maps and projections—then of course they set the Toronto-centred plan aside for their own purposes, and simply for the inadequate provisions of the green belts and parks which are presently before us in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether you were present at the presentation in the Macdonald Block, that situation which—in fact we can talk about under the escarpment bill as well—where, with as much force and panoply as could possibly be mustered by the public relations officers with considerable expense, no doubt about it—nothing much compared with the regular day-to-day expenditures from the Treasury for information officers and all the superfluity which apparently has been gathered by the new minister—

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): Caucus research.

Mr. R. F. Nixon:—in support of his policies and decisions, which are largely insupportable—that we were shown the slides and the verbal presentation indicating the usefulness of this parkway. With the very best advice that was available to the minister and with the very best and strongest audio-visual presentation, it still had the hollow approach of the kind of policy which is no policy at all.

There was every indication that the so-called parkway west was simply a superficial approach to a concept which could have, in fact, been used by this minister, who has been designated as the chief planner for Ontario, as a way to strengthen the community spirit in the municipality.

Hon. Mr. White: Could I interrupt at this point? I infer from what the hon. member is saying that he thinks the plan is not bold enough, and I think it is appropriate for me to remind the House that this bill embraces a proposal only, which will now go to hearings conducted by hearing officers, with the help of advisory committees perhaps; that the recommendations of the hearing officers must be made public, that everyone can participate—the municipalities, the ministries, citizens, members of this Legislature—through a consultative process that must be not less than three months long and which might be very much longer than that.

The point I am making, sir, is this, if we could deal with the principle of the bill, which is to say the idea of a parkway belt, I have undertaken to take this bill to the standing committee on natural resources where we can sit down with maps and see if we should have 14 parks as now planned, or 15, or 13, or 20, or 10. I think, sir, that if this debate could be confined to the principle of the bill we can make a lot more sense out of the lines, and how thick or how thin the various belts and mini-belts are, when we have data, including maps, in front of us at the committee stage.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the interjection of the hon. minister. In fact, if he had taken his planning bill—which got second reading in the Legislature last evening—and had used that as the vehicle for the discussion of the parkway belt, it might have been more comprehensible to the people in the area rather than to bring the parkway belt in independently. Because in fact the parkway belt is an indication of the view of the ministry, and particularly the view of this minister who has the total authority under the planning bill passed yesterday and under the parkway bill which is being discussed today, to single-handedly make the final decision associated with the plans, with the zoning bylaws, and whether in fact they are even needed for the parkways under construction.

We can only consider the recommendations in the bill that is before us and the elaborately prepared ancillary documents to be the policy of the government. It is our view that all of the lacework and periphery of advisory committees and hearing officers, in fact, do nothing to remove from the Treasurer the authority that he had taken onto himself to designate, direct and establish the parkway as it is presently described.

I wouldn't for a moment, Mr. Speaker, say that the hon. Treasurer cannot change his mind. We have seen an indication under the sales tax that when sufficient pressure is applied to him he can change his mind. He backs down even, on occasion, with some grace. I would say he moves backward more gracefully than he moves forward. But, Mr. Speaker, the bill that is before us and the ancillary documents indicate quite clearly what the government policy is.

Hon. Mr. White: It's a proposal.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: But we are not prepared for a moment to suggest that there should not be all sorts of consultation and in fact that there hasn't already been multitudes of studies and consultations associated with this. We feel that the principle of the bill is basically inadequate in this regard, and as I have said at the outset, there is no way that we can in all conscience or in any conscience support the programme that is put forward by the Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. White: It is simply a proposal to start the conversation.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, this bill is subject to exactly the same defects that were in the Ontario Planning and Development Act, and a number which the Treasurer has introduced in order to make things worse. The first and greatest defect of the bill is the fact that it does not provide for adequate consultation. I have been looking at some of the minister's comments in his speech last night in order to see just how they did bear on the way in which this particular plan will be implemented.

He kept on telling us that the proposal is simply a proposal, it's a device to initiate consultation and consideration by affected municipalities, by citizens in the area, and so on. He kept on claiming that this document that we have before us today, the parkway belt document, does not represent government policy. After three years we would really like to know what does it represent then?

Is the minister trying to tell us that he is quite willing to scrap all of the work of three years—is that right? Or is he telling us that none of this has any meaning at all? Or is telling us that the main lines that have been sketched in the parkway belt plan do not represent a government policy?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, before an idea can be discussed someone has to introduce it. This bill we are now debating introduces a proposition by way of a proposal. This proposal will go through the elaborate consultative processes which are embodied in the Ontario Planning and Development Act. We are not wed to the shape or size or colours on the map with respect to the parkway belt east. We have to start at some place and last night or yesterday afternoon when the member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Stokes) described the planning process as he had observed it in the Thunder Bay area and as he thought it should be done, he was describing in fact exactly what we propose to do.

Somebody has to introduce an idea using internal inputs with whatever outside advice is feasible and desirable. Then that proposition has to be offered to municipalities, members here—did I say municipalities?—groups of organizations and the citizenry itself. Now if this parkway belt is too fat in some places, as I inferred from the Leader of the Opposition's remarks, or too thin in other places, or it should be that way instead of that way, we are quite prepared to change it.

We are not wed to the details of the proposal. It is offered for the sake of consultation.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Frankly—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: If you will permit me, on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since the hon. minister used that vehicle to make a comment while I was speaking—with your permission and my apologies. Surely if the minister is going to put that connotation on the parkway, it should have come forward in the form of the booklet saying this is the government recommendation.

But when it comes forward as a bill, then that appears to be government policy; certainly the government is going to hold hearings but essentially the form of the parkway has been established by government decision.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The Treasurer is switching his proposal and his rules.

Mr. Cassidy: I think the minister is switching ground, and, frankly, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe the minister. I don't believe there is that kind of flexibility. Once these lines are drawn I don't believe that more can be done in the hearing process, which is, of necessity and according to the Act, relatively short.

Hon. Mr. White: The hon. member doesn't believe anything from anybody.

Mr. Cassidy: The Treasurer has been pretty incredible these past few months, and that is one of the reasons why I find him difficult to believe in this particular instance. The record shows that the government does not understand how to consult. It is doing it in Peel county right now; it is ignoring the county council right there. It has done it again and again and again over the past few months and the past few years.

Hon. Mr. White: On a point of order, I am meeting Peel county at 4 p.m. on Thursday and this is not the first meeting by any chance.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Friday!

Hon. Mr. White: So my hon. friend is incorrect once again.

Mr. Cassidy: I would point out, Mr. Speaker, although it is off the subject, that Peel county council by a vote of about 32 to 10 has asked that the entire bill be withdrawn right now because of the way in which the wool was pulled over their eyes by the Treasurer's predecessors.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That was regional government.

Mr. Cassidy: I challenge the Treasurer to accept that advice and to withdraw that bill for a period of time in order that Peel county council and the people in that area can engage meaningfully in discussion of the future of their region rather than having a plan created by the Premier (Mr. Davis) imposed and stuffed down their throats for the benefit of the developers who work in that particular area. Because that is what is happening.

Now if I can return to the parkway belt, which is what we have in front of us right here. You know, Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer again and again sweet talks the municipalities, sweet talks citizens, gives us the kind of talk that we had in this House last night and had here right now, in order to try and prove that he is flexible and that he is not going to get in anybody's way and that really he is the kindest, most gentle Treasurer one could possibly imagine here in this best of all possible worlds.

He said in a speech on Monday to the Community Planning Association that we will be maintaining working relationships with municipalities to ensure that local plans are compatible with plans developed under this Act or under the Planning and Development Act. When you look at the Act you find that in fact the Treasurer has powers to ram these things down the throats of municipalities and he does not have to maintain any kind of working relationship with them.

Again in that same speech he talks about close consultation with the municipalities. But when he got to talk about it last night there was no elaboration of what that consultation meant in the time before a proposed plan was prepared.

We have a proposed plan right here. There has not been effective consultation about this proposed parkway plan for the past three years, while the task force has been working. It has not been subject to public scrutiny in any way. The alternatives that could have been explored and on which citizens and municipalities could have commented have not been put forward before the public. The Treasurer has simply gone ahead and drawn lines on the map and now seeks to make everybody believe that he is incredibly flexible about this.

The background paper on planning and development in Ontario stated that consultative machinery would be provided for during the course of plan preparation. That's not true, Mr. Speaker. That is simply not true. There is the vaguest reference in the Act which governs this particular bill on consulting the municipalities and nothing more.

In the background paper of a couple of weeks ago, and the minister also in the House last night, stated that the powers that he would take under this bill and the other bills would not parallel or duplicate the more detailed plans of municipalities or individual programme plans of specific provincial or federal agencies.

Once again there are no guidelines laid out in this bill to ensure that is the case; and that was true the other night, too—no guidelines at all. And yet the Treasurer's speech last night was the best argument that I certainly have heard of for those guidelines in order to ensure that the province sticks to its own last rather than interfering in things which are not properly the matter for provincial government. And the known and open framework that the minister keeps on talking about, in which all concerned individuals and groups can make their views known before plans become policy, is literally a sham.

The minister asks us to expect that in a minimum of three months, and probably not much more, that people who have not been involved in the planning process of the parkway belt can somehow bring their forces to bear after the ministry has sat in camera for a period of three years and prepared its plan.

He asks us to believe that a plan in which his department has invested three years of time, energy, effort and money, does not already carry a tremendous weight of commitment as far as the ministry is concerned. He asks us to believe that he, as minister, is prepared at the drop of a hat, or at the instigation of municipalities, to abandon work which has been going on, to which his own people are committed and which they will push before him on a very, very strong basis. We simply find that that is incredible.

The minister is not credible on this. He may as well say what kind of planning he is doing. The kind of planning he is doing is centralizing the planning for the parkway belt, just as it is centralized planning for Haldimand-Norfolk and for the other areas that have been mentioned. At the last minute he will bring the public into his confidence; give them two or three months to comment. There are no guarantees that they will be listened to; there are no guarantees of municipal autonomy where that autonomy ought to prevail. There are no guarantees, period—and we deplore that, Mr. Speaker.

The parkway belt plan, which the minister has now given to us, has been described a number of times in some of the documents that have been coming out of the ministry. We have had tantalizing glimpses of this rather paradisaical new concept, which the ministry wants to promote, of combining transportation corridors and recreation space.

In the Toronto-centred region plan of 1970, Design for Development, the government talked about the two-tiered arrangement of cities—which it is going ahead with—separated by a parkway belt of open space with mainly non-urban uses containing high performance transportation and other trunk services. Well, the suggestion was certainly there that non-urban uses would predominate in the parkway belt. In other words, that it would be more park than expressway—and that is not borne out in what we have seen in the minister's plan.

Last year the minister's predecessor spoke during his estimates about the parkway belt and said specifically that the parkway belt was designed to "develop a broad and recognizable demarcation line between communities." He said that the emphasis should be on "natural boundary features and the avoidance of the completely artificial." He said:

Therefore, by using natural features such as ravines, river valleys and hills, and combining these with utility corridors, lines could be drawn around urban communities within the overall regional system, and in this way these communities would have an opportunity to develop a life and an identity of their own.

Once again, the implication was that there would be some genuine separation and separation between major communities in the areas east, west and north of Metro.

He talked about green buffers and about protection of headwaters. There are only two headwaters out of quite a number which are protected on the plan that the minister has brought in. And he talked about the possibility of appeals when the green belt was set out, and this has not been carried through. The indication we had had, in other words, was that the parkway belt would be green and not grey. The reality that we now have is that the parkway belt is going to be grey and not green.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): They are going to paint the asphalt green.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, they are going to paint the asphalt green? Well that would be a suggestion I might seriously recommend to the minister; and he should paint the Hydro towers and the pipelines green, too, because there will be very little else that is green on this so-called greenway, or parkway.

Mr. Speaker, I've heard so much about urban sprawl from the minister and the Premier and other people in the last week or so. I don't think they really understand what it means. I think they understand that if you put 700 or 800 ft of expressway every 10 miles, somehow you've prevented urban sprawl. They don't see the way in which, in fact, they are encouraging it.

The audio-visual presentation we had said that the government wished to prevent high-rises spreading from Oshawa to Clarkson or some other cities like that. Port Credit and Brampton, according to the leaflet on the parkway belt west, would meet by the year 2000 in an almost solid mass of buildings if something weren't done. I think the minister was right and his ministry was right. If something isn't done, Port Credit and Brampton will meet in an almost solid mass of buildings. There is nothing in this plan which will prevent that because there is no more than about 1,500 ft of parkway in two separate locations which will, in fact, separate Port Credit and Brampton at the year 2000, according to the parkway belt plan.

The continuous, formless city sweeping uphill and down dale that the government said it was seeking to avoid, is exactly what's going to be created west of Metro because of the ineffectiveness of the parkway belt plan as we have it here today; I would suggest probably because of the government's unwillingness to come to grips with the land speculation which so dominates that region and which makes decent planning almost impossible in the present kind of climate created by the government.

This government is encouraging urban sprawl while it mouths the words of progressive planning and says it's trying to get rid of it. It's encouraging it by the creation of expressways and other utility corridors which will lead to more and more development west of Metro. It's encouraging it while violating the Toronto-centred region plan by bringing forward the parkway belt west and stating that it's another year or more before the parkway belt east is finalized in the form where the government can dare to bring it before the public.

That means, in other words, that it's development priorities are still to the west of Metro despite the clear intention of the Toronto-centred region plan that development should be shifted toward the east.

Let's look at the functions of the parkway belt according to what the minister, or the study, put forward: "To define and separate communities and thus to provide people with a sense of community identity." Well, the definition and separation of communities is being done for the most part by very narrow expressway strips and any pretence that they may serve as parkland is just an absurdity. If the minister believes that people can really play football or sit quietly and go bird watching in an area with Hydro towers on one side and an eight-lane expressway on the other, he is obviously deaf, blind, insensitive and immune to air pollution and noise pollution. Because that's what's going to happen in those particular areas.

Another function is to link communities with service corridors; in fact, the parkway belt will do that. We're willing to grant the government that that is the case.

"To provide a land reserve for the future, anticipating land uses which cannot be foreseen today." That's a very curious kind of intention, Mr. Speaker, because the only significant reserves of land which are being provided in the areas that are now urbanized, or near the areas that are now urbanized, are existing golf courses, conservation authorities and other recreation areas, plus a few hundred acres of parkland which the government would have acquired anyway but which it is subsuming, in this particular plan, in order to dress it up and make it look attractive for the people of Ontario.

The only really substantial reserves of land are somewhere over there between Burlington and Oakville, and therefore will have very little relevance for the need of the next 10, 15 or 20 years. There is not really any possibility of having a land reserve for the future when the parkway is only the width of the highway unless the minister suggests that new hospitals, community colleges or other institutions should, in future, be suspended over highways as a means of land conservation. Frankly, we find that rather difficult.

Then: "To offer open space and recreational facilities where they are most needed, right at the backdoors of our urban complexes." Well, the minister has a complex about that, because the recreation space provided in the plan is not at the backdoor, it is 20 or 30 miles away from where most people are living by now. Secondly, the plan to combine ravines, river valleys, and other natural features as division points between various communities, but also to run utilities and highways in those areas, means that the quality of the parkland that is to be preserved under this particular plan is going to be degraded. The minister is going to create Don Valley Parkways, with the quality of park that surrounds the Don Valley Parkway, right through the area between Hamilton and Toronto.

The minister apparently subscribes to the view of some of the Metro Toronto high-ways officials, who say our park is the most used of any in the city because 100,000 people drive up or down the parkway every day and, therefore, have the opportunity to enjoy it.

That misses entirely the point about why people want recreation space and what they require from recreation space in an environment which is increasingly urbanized and where the need to escape to peace, quiet, greenness, trees, lakes, and to get away from man-made artifacts, therefore, becomes more and more pressing as far as the public is concerned. That is not going to happen, because every one of these things will have a Hydro pylon at one corner, an expressway at the other and noise coming in. In fact, many of the parks may be spoiled rather than improved under this particular plan. But that is what the minister says he wants.

Mr. Singer: Which minister are we talking about?

Mr. Cassidy: We are talking about the Minister of Treasury, Economics and Inter-governmental Affairs.

Mr. Singer: He isn't here.

Mr. Cassidy: I know he isn't here. It is interesting to note that when the minister introduced the bill there were only three Tories in the House.

Mr. Singer: Later it got down to one.

Mr. Cassidy: Later it got down to one or two. I count four right now since the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Mr. Wardle) came back. That suggests just what kind of a commitment there is to genuine planning or consultation in this particular House.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): Count again. The member knows better than that.

Mr. Cassidy: The only primary objective of the four which this plan meets is that there should be a unified service corridor which looks after pipelines, Hydro lines and expressways. The parkway belt, therefore, is misnamed. It should be judged solely as a transportation and servicing network, rather than being disguised or pretending that it is a green belt. Under the guise of a green belt the government is seeking to push through a massive system of expressways. What we should be talking about in this House, and later in the committee, is how to save the green area in the region between Toronto and Hamilton; how to provide the maximum amount of recreation space there; how to prevent it from being degraded by expressways; and how to provide separately rather than together recreation space and transportation corridors that may, in fact, be required.

The minister's priorities would go down a bit more easily on this side of the House, if instead of constantly being concerned about private automobile transportation, he had said that the development of some of the second-tier communities would be oriented to public transportation. If, in fact, through the corridors of Highway 403, 407 and 410, or through some of them, there had been provision for public transportation with the possibility at some future date that a low standard of private transportation would also be provided.

That is not the way the minister works. His priorities are still in the direction of automobiles. Therefore the bane of wall-to-wall development, which he says he is trying to avoid, is exactly what he is going to get in the area between Toronto and Hamilton. If we look at the plan in detail, we find that north of Mississauga, which is the area of greatest development west of Metro so far, the parkway is all of 800 feet wide. In the minibelt between Mississauga and Bramalea, it is 700 feet. In the area between Streetsville and Oakville north, an area which hardly could be described as highly developed at this time, one half mile is the maximum extent of the parkway. A half-mile is barely enough to accommodate an expressway without having environmental consequences on either side.

When one is crossing from Streetsville into Oakville north at 30 miles an hour, it will take all of one minute to cross this supposed separation between the communities. Between Oakville and Mississauga, the minibelt is approximately one-half mile again. It isn't until one gets to areas which are totally undeveloped, namely, between Oakville north and Burlington north, that the parkway belt has any significant size at all which would permit its being used for recreational purposes as well as for the purposes of transportation and utilities.

It is interesting that on the map, Mr. Speaker, the town of Milton has been very neatly surrounded by green belt on three sides. Its identity, its future as a community, is clearly protected by the green belt plan. The town of Streetsville, on the other hand, which is equally clearly defined on the map as a separate entity, is not to have a separate political identity but is going to be submerged into Mississauga to the south. That simply doesn't make any sense at all to us.

We don't see why the developers who control Mississauga should also be allowed to control the combined council which includes Streetsville.

In view of the things that are being said on Peel county council, and the things that have been said by Streetsville people—the residents as a whole and not just their council—we don't see why the legitimate aspirations of that particular community should not have been met. It seems to us that the parkway belt plan in itself provides the best justification that has yet been offered for the case that Mayor McCallion and the other people on her council of the town have been bringing for so long.

If one looks at the plan all through, most of the bulges of recreation space are in public hands already. Many of those that are not in public hands are golf courses which, apparently, the government assumes will remain as green space and will not be put aside for development. The only substantial areas of green belt are remote from Toronto, remote from Mississauga and are in the areas north of Oakville and Burlington, and in the area around Burlington and Hamilton which have already been covered as part of the escarpment plan, and therefore cannot legitimately be considered as part of this particular plan.

It is really, in the main, just a transportation corridor, Mr. Speaker, and nothing else. It is as a transportation corridor, therefore, that I would like to look at it. The parkway belt is formulated in such a way that it will encourage an enormous urban growth in the areas north of Mississauga and of Streetsville; in the area north of Oakville; and in the area north of Burlington.

We don't know, because the minister hasn't stated it yet, what the population projections are for those particular communities. We do know, though, that the population is going to be very much larger than now. As I recall, from the projections that appeared in 1970, north Oakville will have a range of population that is probably greater than 100,000; north Burlington will have a range of population also approaching 100,000 or more. North Oakville could go as high as 250,000, according to the projections that exist right now for that particular area.

If I recall correctly, as well the population forecasts for the area west of Metro overall call for close to a million and a half people, almost a million more people to be living in that area by the turn of the century, according to the Toronto-centred region plan, whereas east of Metro the total population will grow to something around 800,000.

That may have changed because of Cedarwood, we do not know; but nevertheless it is very clear, by the precedence given to parkway belt west and by the delays in the parkway belt east, that the government is still intending to encourage enormous development west of Metro and that this is simply one of the ways by which it will facilitate it.

Quite simply, it is putting in an expressway network to service that population of 1.4 million, or 1.5 million—whatever the figures may ultimately turn out to be. It is equally clearly leaving the development of that land in private hands. It is clearly violating the Toronto-centred region plan. It doesn't seem to understand that it is not enough to set out transportation corridors, but that more needs to be done and it has brought in no indication of the kind of phasing which it would consider to be acceptable and part of a plan in the area west of Metro.

If there were phasing that showed that the area west of Metro was going to be restrained and kept back until growth was clearly under way east of Metro, then we could be more sympathetic to this parkway belt plan. There has been no such indication. The ministry task force which worked for three years gave no such indication, and as far as I can see, Mr. Speaker, it's simply full steam ahead.

I would point out too, Mr. Speaker, that even within the 55,000 acres of the parkway belt west, the government is being, to put it kindly, timorous about the way in which it is going ahead with this particular planning. There are a couple of indications of that.

One is that it is only acquiring 15,000 acres out of the 55,000 acres that are there to acquire. I am not clear whether the 10,000 acres now owned are in addition to or part of that 55,000 acres. But it is only acquiring 15,000 acres. When you look at the ministry's reply, when the Treasurer bailed out the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development and gave us some answers about land acquisition costs in the parkway belt, you find out that one half of the land acquisition costs in the region for the parkway belt plan are intended to be for transportation purposes.

In other words, this is rights of way being acquired for freeways; this is not for recreation, this is not for open space, this is simply reserved rights of way for freeways and nothing more. That's $72 million out of an estimate of $147 million that the ministry gave as the cost of land acquisition in that particular area. Then the Hydro corridors and the pipeline corridors will cost an additional $33 million.

Now clearly, both the money for the highway corridors and the money for the utility corridors would have had to be spent anyway. There is no new money in that figure which the minister gave at the slide show the other day. There is no new money at all, and therefore it was simply an attractive PR gimmick designed to make people feel that because the government was conjuring in large sums of money, that it really meant business about planning west of Metro!

Then we come down to the fact that the government is intending to spend only $42 million on lands for parks and recreation—only $42 million, Mr. Speaker, or barely one-quarter of the total amount of money which it said it is committing to the parkway belt land acquisition programme. When you look at how much of the parkland in the plan is already publicly owned and how little remains to be acquired, you can see that there is no real commitment to new recreation lands beyond the minimum that the government would have had to acquire anyway.

In the last election the government made a commitment to acquire the lands at Bronte Creek. Next election it would have been Joshua Creek and the election after that one or two other parks within the parkway belt; and over a relatively short period of time, that $40 million would have been spent on parkland anyway, without any additional and new kinds of parkland or recreation space coming into the picture at all, because there simply isn't the money for it.

What's particularly disturbing about the land acquisition programme is that if this government really meant what it said about planning, if it really meant what it said about protecting the public purse from speculative pressures, if it really meant what it said about orienting development in the parkway belt and around the parkway belt, then it would match that commitment with money and it would match it quickly.

But the ministry officials clearly told the press, and the press reported it last June 5 and June 6, that the acquisition programme of $150 million to $200 million would be over the period of 30 years. In other words, it would be at the rate of maybe $5 million to $7 million a year.

So when you put it in those terms, it looks pretty piddling, Mr. Speaker. The minister is really a piker when you get down to it. He comes up with pretentious plans and enormous sums designed to dazzle the public, but when you come down to it, he is talking about an average expenditure of only $7 million or $8 million a year for land acquisition in the parkway belt, and no more.

When you come back to that question of recreation land, it would be very interesting for the minister to tell this House what phasing is planned for acquisition of recreation land. Will recreation land acquisition have priority, or is that the land he intends to acquire in years 20 to 30 of his 30-year acquisition plan?

When one looks at the map here, is the recreation land in the main going to be around Milton—which apparently is favoured because it is represented by a government minister—in that relatively broad belt between north Oakville and north Burlington? Or will the recreation land be in areas where people can use it now, and will it be acquired soon near Mississauga, near the northern parts of Toronto in other areas where it is already desperately needed?

We would like some answers on that because we suspect that even the $42 million which the minister has spelled out as being allocated for acquisition of recreation land, is for recreation land that is of no earthly use to people in the next generation, but is something that will be reserved for sometime past the year 2000. We don't dispute that that land ought to be acquired; we think it ought to be acquired now. We don't think the right kinds of priority exist, though, if there is not also recreation land acquisition near Metro, near the places where people are concentrated at this time.

Mr. Speaker, the other point about land that worries me is this. The Tories have sort of put a blueprint for speculation out in the western part of Toronto. They have reserved certain parts of land, and wonder of wonders, in a development that only a Conservative government could do, they have restricted development on a wide swath of land, or a substantial swath of land, but they haven't restricted land prices.

The development freeze could be there for years and yet land prices could continue to escalate over that period of time. The Conservative government, having stated that it intends to acquire a significant proportion of that land, has not been prepared to limit the price it will pay to the market value at the time that this plan was announced. That, we think, is ridiculous. It is simply a means of robbing the public purse in order to pay off landowners in that particular area.

We don't see why the principles that were applied at Pickering of a land value freeze could not have been applied in this particular case. We would suppose that, in fact, the government simply didn't want to step on the toes of its corporate and business friends who own so much land in that particular area.

The ministry gave us some figures, Mr. Speaker, suggesting another area where the government ought to move and wouldn't. I can't vouch for the figures; they appear to be rather low to me. But they suggest that there are approximately 60,000 acres of undeveloped land in north Oakville, Oakville, Streetsville and Mississauga, if those regions can be understood as being the major regions which are covered by the parkway belt. Those areas of underdeveloped land are in addition to the land designated in the parkway belt plan, 60,000 acres; enough, in other words, to house two or three times the number of people who might be housed in the area in any sensible kind of planning, enough to more than adequately house the people who were intended to be put there by the Toronto-centred region plan.

We believe that the time for the government to act in a major way on the land speculation problem and the ownership problem around Metro Toronto is now, and that when the parkway belt plan came in it should not simply have designated expressway and utility corridors but that the government should also have declared its intention of acquiring a major portion of development land that was available in those areas in order to ensure that that land was developed under public ownership and under public control and was not allowed to revert to the private sector, but was leased rather than being sold.

Mr. Speaker, the reasons the government will not act on that basis, I suspect, are because of the connections between the large land development corporations on the west side of Toronto and the Conservative government, and because of the financial backing that companies like that give to the Conservative Party.

Markborough Properties Ltd. has 3,900 acres in the Streetsville area; McLaughlin in Mississauga, 3,700 acres; Canadian Equity and Development Co., 6,800 acres; Bramalea Consolidated, 3,400 acres—and that, Mr. Speaker, comes to a total of approximately 20,000 acres out of the 60,000 acres which are available in that particular area. Is it any wonder then that the government refuses to move in on its corporate friends and to acquire the land in that particular area? The companies which are active in that area are making millions out of land speculation and land development. The government simply countenances the system that takes money out of the pockets of tenants and private homebuyers and puts it in the hands of a very small, very wealthy, and very powerful corporate elite that is closely linked with the Conservative Party.

Mr. Speaker, if you take into account the cash-flow of depreciation from properties that do not depreciate in market value, and if you take into account the capital gains that are made on land, companies like McLaughlin are making $12 million or more a year, and Markborough, $5.5 million a year. Their profits are going up by incredible rates. In the case of Markborough up by 80 per cent between 1971 and 72; in the case of McLaughlin, which is almost solely concentrated within the land covered by the parkway belt, profits up 22 per cent; in the case of Canadian Equity, profits also up, in that case by 65 per cent.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, these companies are doing very well in the land economy which is being created by the Conservative government and there is no question that, short of positive action, they will continue to do even better in the climate which is created by the parkway belt, because of the access to communications, to expressways, to utilities and other things which the government is laying down at public expense in order to service the land which is currently owned for speculative purposes by developers and which they will develop just as soon as they can. I would suppose the government expects to take some profit out of it in terms of contributions to its election funds.

Mr. Speaker, the housing situation in that area has become critical, just as it is in the rest of Metro. In Mississauga in only three months, between December of 1972 and April of 1973, the average price of a house rose by five per cent, that is 20 per cent over the course of a year.

In Oakville, moving a bit further west, house prices rose by an average of 12 per cent in that three month period to something around $39,000, or at an annual rate of something like 50 per cent a year. In Burlington, even further to the west, house prices rose by 15 per cent in that period of only three months.

Mr. E. M. Havrot (Timiskaming): And right across Canada, too.

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, I know, but this government is responsible for this province and it is responsible for the fact that lots in that area cost from $15,000 to $20,000.

Mr. Havrot: Prices for new homes in BC are $53,000.

Mr. Cassidy: The member should tell that to his people up in the north. Ask them if they can afford $20,000 for a lot.

You get that kind of comment and then you have this, you have pretty pictures of Erin Mills with Bill Davis opening up a project somewhere between Mississauga and Oakville, and being quoted as congratulating the developers "on their very real social conscience." He said living in Erin Mills will be a truly human experience.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the social conscience of a company which sells lots at $15,000 to $20,000 doesn't impress me very much and it doesn't impress my party. Sure, it is going to be a human experience for people living in those areas when they are trying to pay housing costs of $500 and $600 a month in order to afford the houses which will be built there, thanks to the developers and thanks to the connivance and active co-operation of the Conservative government of the Treasurer and the Premier.

Mr. Havrot: Hogwash!

Mr. Cassidy: It's not hogwash at all

Mr. Havrot: It's hogwash.

Mr. Cassidy: It's not hogwash at all.

Mr. Havrot: The member doesn't know what he is talking about.

Mr. Cassidy: Certainly I do. I know that people like Eddie Goodman and other good, strong Conservatives are linked up with the development industry, very directly.

Mr. Havrot: Prove it.

Mr. Cassidy: I know that during the last election campaign Bill Davis met more than once with developers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The hon. member will please discontinue referring to other hon. members by their first names. He should use the "hon. member for" and so on.

Mr. Cassidy: All right. The hon. member for North Peel met with developers in order to collect election contributions. I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that there is a very real relationship between the policy lines taken by this government of aiding developers and the fact that so many developers were aiding the government during the last election campaign.

Hon. Mr. White: That's a lie.

Mr. Cassidy: Frankly, we find that deplorable.

Hon. Mr. White: That's a lie.

Mr. Cassidy: That's a lie?

Hon. Mr. White: If the members think for one minute that I or any of my colleagues are being in any way detracted from doing our duty by developers or anybody else, he is grossly misinformed. I give him that as a matter of honour.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the minister can say that he has the most honest and pellucid intentions in the world.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: He can say he has the most pellucid intentions in the world.

Hon. Mr. White: The member is a great young smart alec.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, come on!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: With the government, they simply do it naturally. The fact that the government is not moving to acquire land in that area but is moving to provide it with services; to provide it with highways, expressways and rapid access to Metro Toronto; the fact that the government presupposes an enormous development of close to one million more people in that area over the next 25 years all mean that it is lending its stature, its resources and its help to the development industry which will profit not by millions of dollars but by tens and hundreds of millions of dollars from the situation which the government is creating west of Metro. If that is not helping the interests of the developers, I don't know what is.

I think that the minister should withdraw the word he used in the House a minute ago, Mr. Speaker, because I think it was unparliamentary and uncalled for.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre is quite correct. I would ask the hon. Treasurer to withdraw the statement that the—

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, while I—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! One hon. member may not deliberately say that another hon. member told a lie. This is the objectionable comment made by the hon. minister and I would ask him to withdraw that.

Mr. MacDonald: It's nice to see the shoe on the other foot.

An hon. member: What if he did?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the ancient adage that two wrongs don't make a right. But if a man stands up and, in my view, deliberately deceives the members here with—

Mr. MacDonald: Is the minister withdrawing or arguing with the Speaker?

Hon. Mr. White: —misinformation, I think a strong response is absolutely essential—

Mr. MacDonald: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, is he withdrawing or arguing with you?

Hon. Mr. White: —if the whole system is not to be poisoned by these—

Mr. MacDonald: Is he withdrawing or arguing with the Speaker?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: —corrupt and incorrect allegations.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister is arguing with the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. White: I'll be glad to withdraw the word and I now ask that these allegations be withdrawn.

Interjection by hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Open up the books of election contributors!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right Mr. Speaker, when we see some disclosure—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: —and then the public can judge the accuracy of your protests.

Mr. Cassidy: —when we find out just how much money has gone in—

Hon. Mr. White: And the disclosure, I trust, will show all the UAW helpers the NDP has on its payroll.

Mr. Cassidy: —and we find positive evidence to refute the links between the government—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order, please.

Mr. Cassidy: —and we find positive evidence to refute the link between the development industry and the Conservative Party, I would be happy to withdraw any remarks I may have made. Right now, Mr. Speaker, everything in the public record points to that kind of influence; the fact that Bill Davis is willing to interfere with the—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Again, will the hon. member please discontinue that sort of reference?

Mr. Cassidy: All right, I beg your pardon. The fact that the Premier is willing to lend his influence to Erin Mills; the fact that the Premier is willing to lend his influence to a city plan in Peel county with which, I believe, the Treasurer is privately very unhappy. I believe the Treasurer is very unhappy or so I have been told, with the three-municipality plan in Peel county, but that it has been shoved down his throat and the throat of his officials by the Premier. Now, will the minister confirm that?

Hon. Mr. White: Once again, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is wrong again. I am not unhappy with three municipalities at all.

Mr. Cassidy: The Treasurer is not?

Hon. Mr. White: I am completely dependent on people who know the area well—including the members from the two ridings, including the county council, including most of the municipal councils—with the sole exception of Streetsville. So that we have a concurrence of, I suppose, 90 per cent—which isn't too bad.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, I don't think that a 32 to 10 vote on the Peel county council opposing the plan, taken a couple of weeks ago, suggests that there is the kind of unanimity that the minister speaks about.

Hon. Mr. White: They took one before that was almost unanimous.

Mr. Cassidy: I don't think that a 12 to 10 vote on the county council for the three-municipality plan suggests that there was complete unanimity either.

Mr. Singer: How about getting back to the parkway bill?

Mr. Cassidy: I don't think the fact that five municipalities voted against the three-municipality plan and only five for it suggests that there was complete unanimity. I suggest that if the minister did not know the facts, then he was misinformed and misled by his staff; and if he did know the facts, then in fact he is misleading the House.

Mr. Speaker: Well, now we will get back to the bill, please.

Mr. Cassidy: I am getting back to the bill, Mr. Speaker, but it was the minister who strayed from the bill; certainly not myself—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: At any rate, Mr. Speaker, if I may recap, I suggest that it is absurd that there should not be a land value freeze on the land that is being acquired by the government. I think it is absurd as well that the government should continue to serve the interests of the development industry by—

Hon. Mr. White: I think the member is making himself absurd.

Mr. Cassidy:—leaving 60,000 or more development acres there, by increasing its value and putting that value into private pockets rather than taking it over for public purposes.

We would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that land west of Metro ought to be planned and developed mainly publicly. I would draw the minister's attention to the Dennis Fish report at the federal level on the amount of land ownership that is required in order to successfully influence a land market. The Dennis Fish report, Mr. Speaker, suggested approximately 25 per cent of land holdings would be adequate. In this case, that would mean another 15,000 or 20,000 acres.

We would suggest that the government should go considerably further than only acquiring an extra 15,000 acres; but at any rate the government ought to be the major developer of land there. It ought to be ensuring that the land is developed in order to provide decent housing at reasonable costs in order to avoid the kind of speculative developer profits, which are an inevitable result of the planning that is happening west of Metro because of the government's reluctance to interfere with the private land development industry.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the minister will get up and say, "Well, we couldn't afford that." And he will bring some figure out of his hat, the way he is known to do.

The Dennis Fish report suggested and pointed out very clearly that it wasn't a matter of not being able to afford public land ownership, but it was a matter of whether we could afford not to have public land ownership around our major cities, with Toronto being the prime example. It was suggested that over the period of only 10 years that if we went to public land ownership on the limited scale that they have suggested that the savings to the economy and to housing purchases across the country would be of the order of $1.75 billion to $2.75 billion; and the savings would get progressively greater, Mr. Speaker, with every decade.

This is the kind of opportunity which the government is losing by its unwillingness to come to grips with the urban land problems in the area west of Metro; and we believe that it ought to come to grips with it.

One can quite easily estimate that in that area alone—with a million people moving in—that the cost of the government's lack of policy on urban land in that area as part of the parkway belt plan will be perhaps $1 billion, perhaps $2 billion. That's the kind of cost the government is putting private individuals to because it refuses to move — let alone the lack of planning, the problems of dealing with developers, and other things which will be created from the government's refusal to have public ownership.

Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of other points about the plan which I want to raise. One is a matter more of confusion at this point than anything else, because the government has not exactly been lucid in its adoption of the golf course principle for tax remissions on land which is underused or which is overplanned. I must say that I am rather concerned about the suggestion that the government, rather than down-zoning some of the land in the area will, in fact, be zoning it upward, which suggests that its development urges will get the better of it and that the wall-to-wall highrise it keeps warning us about will be created by the government, by the Treasurer, and by all of his staff.

The golf course principle is being adopted in a very limited way, for only three years and no more. It appears to me that what this means is that after the three years possibly there will be an exemption from any tax liability beyond that time. Is it correct that the extra burden of tax that would have been paid if the land was used to its full extent will no longer be payable after three years? Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. White: I will deal with that when I speak.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister will deal with it later. It looks to us like a sop; it certainly does not look like an adequate measure to stabilize land use in the area pending development; and it's possibly a means by which the government is going to be forcing land out on the market.

Mr. Speaker, I have given a number of reasons why we cannot support the bill. There is not adequate consultation; their parkway is not a parkway, but it's really a utility corridor; it will interfere with recreation land; and there should be separate plans, in fact, for recreation land and for the transportation network. We believe that land in the area should be developed publicly and that far more should be owned and acquired publicly. The phasing of the plan involves a very small commitment of funds over the near future because of the length of time that the government intends to take to acquire the land. The government's promise that land will be available for recreation at people's backdoor is phoney, because most of the open land being acquired is either in the escarpment or in the area north of Burlington.

That's the basic case. I'd just like to read one final comment about the government's policies. This is a poem which, in fact, was inspired by the green belt among the people in the area now known as Cedarwood.

Where is the green belt, the question we ask?

Bill Davis wears it to hold up his pants.

Mr. J. R. Rhodes (Sault Ste. Marie): God! That was hilarious.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): That was really witty.

Mr. Cassidy: I don't hear the member speaking in the House very often.

Mr. O. F. Villeneuve (Glengarry): I wouldn't want to if that is all I could say.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, after that rendition I think the last member who spoke should look on his left to the member for Lakeshore, if he wants to quote poetry. I enjoy the poetry of the member for Lakeshore much more.

Mr. Cassidy: This is the poetry of the people, though.

Mr. Good: There are a few remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make regarding this bill. Last night we gave in great detail what we felt was wrong with the whole planning and development concept in Bill 128. In this bill we have the first application, or the first designated area, under Bill 128, and it's brought in in a separate bill.

One of the deficiencies of Bill 128 was that there was no designation in the bill as to where the minister could name a planning and development area, and here we then have a separate bill. The green belt concept is one that's a number of years old, and one which had great expectations when it was first brought in by planners. I think all of us agreed that the preservation of open areas and green belts was a good idea. The NCC plan in Ottawa and the whole concept around Ottawa with its open spaces, I think, is one which in the long run is approved by all people.

The great fanfare with which this was introduced and the jargon that was used about northern links, southern links, mini-links and all the up-and-down links and crosswise links, more or less consisted of catchy phrases. They do give the concept that some study had been given. In fact, if the provincial Treasurer, Mr. Speaker, would look in the front of the book that was given to us on that day, it definitely states in large print, "government policy for the parkway belt west."

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): That's right.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That's exactly what it says.

An hon. member: No suggestions.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, if I may just elaborate. This is the best effort of our staff. It is now going through a prolonged—

Mr. Cassidy: What is the minister saying about his staff, then?

Mr. Good: They're sitting there.

Hon. Mr. White: —consultative process enabling municipalities, MPPs, associations, citizens and others—

Mr. Cassidy: And they're totally flexible.

Hon. Mr. White: —to make submissions to hearing officers, who have the right in the statute to make recommendations requiring the government to face the issue publicly—and either modify the plan or not, presumably explaining the reason for its decision—requiring the government to accept the responsibility here in this Legislature and in the province, and not hide behind some intermediary such as a board or commission.

In all of these matters—there will be more to come, no doubt, whether it be Haldimand-Norfolk or the Trent-Severn system—a bill will be brought in, I expect, setting forth the outline of the proposal, which is policy pro tem—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Oh, policy pro tem!

Hon. Mr. White: —which will then go through the process and which will be modified in accordance with the wishes of the people concerned.

Mr. Good: Mr. Speaker, the minister has made quite an about-face right here this afternoon when faced with the large print in the front of his book, "government policy for the parkway belt west."

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Not policy pro tem; not suggestions.

Mr. Good: Perhaps in one week the minister has already realized that all the book has really done is join up existing land holdings, whether they be land held by the conservation authorities or the purchase of land in the Bronte Creek area, or existing cemeteries and golf courses, and added some potential new highway rights of way for 403 and 407 above it—the extensions—and built them around a greenbelt concept.

We think it's entirely inadequate. The manner in which it was done was not proper. In fact, I think that many local area planning boards would have done a much better job of specifying areas to be left in green belt in perpetuity than this particular Act designates in the book. And they have done it.

Other than our prime disagreement with the concept, which was gone into detail last night, there are some areas which I would like to question the minister about. First of all he said that this is temporarily—

Hon. Mr. White: Well sir, if I may say so—

Mr. Singer: Oh no, come on! Let the member talk. Order, order!

Mr. Good: —restricts the entire area for agricultural use. Mr. Speaker, I believe that I would like—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: I want to talk with the member.

Mr. Singer: Only one member can have the floor.

Mr. Good: —to finish my remarks, Mr. Speaker, at this time.

Hon. Mr. White: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Point of order!

Hon. Mr. White: On a point of order, we're taking this bill to standing committee because—

Mr. Singer: That's not a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Good: Because he's had second thoughts about it.

Mr. Singer: Where is the point of order?

Hon. Mr. White: It is impossible on second reading to ask and answer questions, so this bill will go into committee.

Mr. Singer: He has to have permission. Mr. Speaker, he is out of order.

Hon. Mr. White: The questions may be answered there when we have all kinds of time to answer them.

Mr. Singer: He's out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I believe he is but it's useful in this exchange.

Mr. Good: Yes, all right. I am easy, Mr. Speaker, you know that.

I'm beginning to think that the minister is beginning to have second thoughts on these two bills in particular and I'm sure—

Hon. Mr. White: The member is wrong again.

Mr. Good: —on the Niagara bill as well. He is now beginning to say that although the book says “government policy for the parkway belt west,” as he said a few moments ago, if the people in the area say the green belt should go that way and the government says it goes this way, we’re going to let it go that way. I’ll believe that when I see it, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. White: I didn’t say that either.

Mr. Singer: The Treasurer certainly did.

Mr. Good: The Treasurer used his arms in two different directions. He certainly did.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He said they would have ample opportunity to express their views.

Mr. Singer: Yes, to a hearing officer.

Mr. Good: The minister has indicated in the book that almost 50 per cent of the privately held land within the designated area is compatible. Well, this is fine, because in many areas the green belt is nothing more than a highway right of way which will be purchased, if it hasn’t already been purchased, for transportation corridors. Twenty per cent of the privately held land is not compatible with the provincial government plan for the green belt. And, of necessity, local plans must be amended so that they are compatible with this use. Then he goes on to say what will happen in certain areas, in certain instances, where assessment is raised because of the imposition of this plan.

What I am more interested in right at the moment, and it hasn’t been mentioned at all in any of the presentations, nor do I find anything about it in the book, is what happens relating to the property mentioned on page 30. It says:

Industries and homes which are already established within the parkway belt, although possibly incompatible with the intent of the belt, will not be disturbed. Thus established occupants will continue to use and enjoy their property.

I presume, Mr. Speaker, that they will continue to use and enjoy their property as nonconformists in the parkway belt. In those areas where the minister wants to purchase their property he will have to pay, as he mentioned, the market value. But what restrictions will be put on these persons who own property who are designated as nonconformists. Well, there is nothing said. We’ll get back to that in a few minutes.

But then in section 5 of the bill it says: “Where assessment on such land is increased because of such designation, then the minister will enter into the fixed assessment arrangement.”

Now I presume this fixed assessment arrangement is comparable to the fixed assessment which is allowed in the Municipal Act for golf courses. It says: “The fixed assessment arrangement which must be agreed to by the minister,” [we see in subclause 2] “and to which the minister may add such other terms and conditions as he sees appropriate” [And this I have great reservations about] “will continue on the land at least for a three year period or longer.

“The municipality will be deprived of taxes from this fixed assessment, but this deficiency in taxes due to the fixed assessment will be made up by the province to the municipality.”

Well, this is fine. Under the Assessment Act on fixed assessment in perpetuity, if the golf course remains a golf course, it pays a lower rate of tax and the taxes which should have been paid, and were not paid, pile up as a lien against the property. And at such time as that property is sold for a higher and better use, other than what it had been zoned for at that point under fixed assessment, then that money must be paid to the municipality.

And I presume the municipality in this case would not receive it. In fact it will not under the terms of the bill. But the minister then would get the moneys if the land is sold and allowed to have a different use. Well, that is fine where people want to escape paying high taxes because their land has been assessed at a higher rate due to this bill. But I don’t think there are going to be many lands. I can’t think of any instances, where the imposition of this parkway belt will increase the assessment on the land. But conversely, the imposition of this parkway belt plan is going to, in many instances, decrease the assessment or the effective use of the land.

Then the province is either going to have to buy the land if it wants to revert it to a lower rate or it is going to have to say that the municipal zoning regulations must be amended to conform with the provincial parkway belt plan. This is in the bill. It has to take place.

Now I am asking: what compensation will there be? And I think this is a very important question which many people in the area are very much concerned about. It there going to be compensation for the loss in assessment, for the loss of a higher, and better use for the land? Is there going to be compensation in fact for loss of development rights within the area? The principle of this bill says no, there will not be.

In that case I think we revert right back to our original concept that there has to be provision for open space. There has to be provision for green belts. The farmers of this province should not have to pay the whole load for the provincial planning of open space in this province.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The Minister of Agriculture and Food should.

Mr. Good: No, I am not here to promote the proposition put forth by developers who unfortunately have bought land in areas which are now going to be designated "not suitable for development." If their land is zoned agriculture, and they have been sitting on it for five or 10 years and paid a fancy price, and paying the interest on it, well, I'm sorry, that's too bad.

One wonders, just in passing, whether the member for Peel South might have some pecuniary interest in this bill, and whether he was privy to a cabinet consultation when the parkway belt was drawn up when we remember the long list of land holdings held by him in fairly adjacent areas.

To get back to the original point. Would the Minister inform the House who was expected to carry the load for land that has been designated for a lower use than that already permitted? If the government is not willing to buy the land, I would say there is a confiscatory programme, or a progress here made towards reducing the person's property to a lower use and there should be, in my view, some compensation.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex-South): It is confiscation.

Mr. Good: Once again, I would say that we are disappointed with the whole provincial programme here as it relates to provincial planning; the deficiencies of the government in previous years in not setting out their broad goals, the concepts of where growth should be, what things should be done and should not be done; and finally at the last minute when development is crowding in upon us, when we have been barely able to thwart the wall-to-wall factories along our lakes, we now find that we come out with a plan, which is coming from the top down, instead of from the bottom up. That is why we oppose this bill.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, in rising to oppose this bill I want to point out a couple of matters. I suppose that first of all the minister is expecting to get land from the municipalities for the green belt area through the five per cent acquisitions as development occurs. As development proceeds along the various highways and lines that he has drawn on the map, I presume that those five per cent areas are added.

I don't know what he is going to do to make certain that the five per cent acquisitions can come within the green belt area. I presume they won't entirely, and yet there must be some way for development land to impinge on the green belt areas so that the five per cent can be taken adjacent and, therefore, incorporated into the areas. This, I suppose, is one of the ways in which the minister expects to get some further acquisitions.

I am not sure what he means by the $5 per acre grant which is going to be given. Now, $5 an acre will not go very far towards purchasing anything in this area, not even now. Perhaps I misunderstand what this whole thing is all about, but it just seems to me that that kind of a grant is so inadequate that it is meaningless.

The other matter I wanted to comment upon was that of fixed assessment. Again, I raise a problem here—a question which was raised by one of the former speakers—as to what the three-year fixed assessment term meant. I presume this is a sort of renewable term, the end of each three years the thing will be looked at and reviewed. But, fixed assessment is a device which says to us—here is a golf course, here is a non-conforming use, here is a piece of land which is incorporated into the green belt, and by the device of a fixed assessment we are going to lock these people in so that the taxes they will eventually owe will be of high value and the owner of that land will not want to sell.

I can only say to the minister that the fixed assessment device in an area like this, is an illusion, and a snare because the value of the land now—beyond the reaches of part of the development in Mississauga and in other areas—is not yet, I suppose, at a value which buildable land will reach in a few years. As development occurs and pushes its way up toward the land which is locked in through the fixed assessment, then that land inevitably goes up in value.

One of two things will happen here. First of all, as the land increases in value then the capital gains on that land far outdistance the taxes that will be owing through the fixed assessment device. So the pressure is on for the owner to sell the land for a high-rise development, or some other compatible development at that time as he sees it, because he can make a great deal of money out of it. That's the first pressure, and if that happens then the green belt land is lost and the whole purpose of the fixed assessment goes by the board.

If that doesn't happen, and the minister wants to hold this fixed assessment land within the green belt, then he has to buy it at the price when it becomes profitable for the owner to sell. So we are caught either way; we're going to lose the green belt to private development, or we're going to be held up to ransom in order to buy it for public purposes.

We saw this happen in North York only recently. The hon. member for Downsview will recall how a certain area, a certain golf course on Bathurst St., the York Downs Golf Course, was, we thought, in perpetuity locked into public purposes or for open space under private ownership. So the fixed assessment agreement was made. At that time we had no idea that land was going to increase in value as it did in the years subsequent to this agreement. But the time came—and I'm not sure, perhaps the hon. member for Downsview could give me some enlightenment on this; what would the land be worth at the time? Perhaps $2 million?

Mr. Singer: Six million dollars.

Mr. Young: No, but $2 million at the time the fixed assessment agreement was made?

Mr. Singer: Yes, I think that's close.

Mr. Young: A million and a half or $2 million. It seemed as if, over the years, this bit of land would be locked in for at least open space and for the purposes of golfing. But as time went on and the land values increased, that land went up to $6, $7, $8 million. Finally the municipality was faced with an application for rezoning for highrise purposes. Then North York saw that it had to make a choice—and Metropolitan Toronto was in on this—either losing the green belt to private building, or putting up the very great amount of money which was demanded for purchase of that golf course. And, of course under those circumstances the public authority prevailed and the land was finally bought at a very great price.

If that land had been purchased originally, instead of the agreement being made—expropriation might have had to be used, I don't know—but in any case, if that land had been purchased at that time for $1.5 to $2 million, it would have saved the public purse a great deal of money. It would have meant that that land would have been saved for public purposes.

Mr. Speaker, the fallacy of this fixed assessment is obvious. The device which is being built into this legislation is a wrong device which is not going to safeguard, for public purposes, the land it is supposed to safeguard.

I simply bring to the attention of the hon. minister, who has again disappeared into thin air, the fact that this device in this law is not going to accomplish the purpose that he sets out for it.

Mr. Stokes: Treating the Legislature with disdain.

Mr. Young: We are simply going to, No. 1, eventually lose these lands as prices go up and as development pressures occur. Or secondly, we are going to be forced, as a public, to buy these lands at tremendously inflated prices in order to preserve them for the purpose for which they were originally intended.

This is another fallacy in this bill. I hope the minister has some answers for us. At the moment experience would indicate, and there has been experience now over some 10 to 15 years in this province in this field, that this just does not solve the problem it is supposed to solve.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, in conjunction with my colleagues—

Hon. Mr. White: Is this too bold for the member? Is this bill too bold for him or too conservative—which?

Mr. Singer: If the Treasurer will just be patient I will tell him. It is the second in the trilogy of the bills designed to establish a dictatorship in the Province of Ontario, and I rise to protest. I don't like dictatorships. I like democratic governments.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: We are not keen about the dictator either.

Mr. Singer: The government is taking them away; that's what it is doing.

Mr. Lawlor: A child of the 17th century.

Mr. Singer: That's what this bill says.

An hon. member: Is it bold or not?

Mr. Singer: Bold or not, it is undemocratic.

It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that this government now has decided the easiest way to govern is to give us broad bills that have no content, broad bills that set out no guidelines, set out no mandatory procedures and leave everything in the hands of the minister who says: "Trust me!" Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that we cannot trust him in this bill or in the first bill that we debated yesterday or in the bill that is coming up, the bill to amend the Regional Municipality of Niagara Act.

I'm not going to cover the same ground that was already covered, and my remarks aren't going to be too long. I just want to say that I find it very difficult to understand how—oh, the minister is gone.

It is really unfortunate Mr. Speaker. The minister bobs in and out and obviously his attention is elsewhere.

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): He is still there.

Mr. Cassidy: Just like the member for Downsview, he weaves in and out.

Mr. Singer: Sit down, I get more kick out of talking to the treasurer's front than to his back. It is unfortunate that one has difficulty in keeping at least the responsible minister here to listen to our great words of wisdom.

Hon. Mr. White: I must keep the ministry moving.

Mr. Singer: Yes. I wonder if he has received a communication saying, withdraw the bill. Is that what the scurrying is about?

Hon. Mr. White: No, I haven't.

Mr. Singer: Well, it is a pity. I thought there was greater wisdom over there, but it hasn't broken through yet.

Hon. Mr. White: I'm listening.

Mr. Singer: What bothers me, Mr. Speaker, is notwithstanding the great and elaborate MGM-type presentation that was made with the spotlights on and the spotlights off, assurances for his staff that it will be all right in a moment, unacceptable slides flashing on the screen, all these documents being presented in summary form or complete form, we are told that there is a government policy for parkway belt west. Then we begin to look at the bills and we look at the elaborate hearing procedures and we find that what is announced, at least in one place, as policy may or may not be policy because we've got this magnificent hearing system set up. I described to some length yesterday how the same type of hearing system doesn't work in the expropriation Acts. The hearing officer is a reporting officer who merely gathers in the information and has no ability to change the policy.

The justification for the policy, whether it be in the parkway belt west, whether it be in Haldimand-Norfolk or whether it be in the Trent canal system, never has to be presented. If the minister has ideas as to why his policy is going to be justified, he doesn't have to express them at any of these meetings. He doesn't have to express them through his hearing officer. The public never really gets to the kind of debate on the merits that the minister is, in fact, talking about. So I don't think really, Mr. Speaker, that's any kind of a safeguard at all.

Looking at the objects of what this particular plan is supposed to do, what the parkway belt west is supposed to do, the No. 1 object is to define and separate communities and, thus, to provide people with a sense of community identity.

It is a pity that I can't have the attention of the minister for more than 30 seconds at a time. It is perhaps a sign of the disdain that they hold for the Legislature and for the legislative process that they won't even sit and listen. After these bills are through there is not going to be any necessity for anybody to listen, as they will have all the power in their hands. The minister is just a little in advance of the passing of the bills. And there is nothing that will bring confidence better than having 76 votes out of 117, and I suppose that entitles them to be arrogant and miserable and disdainful; which is exactly what this minister is doing now.

But, Mr. Speaker, if I would catch the minister's ear for a moment, I thought I would like to tell him about what happened in Metropolitan Toronto when Highway 401 was built. It was believed at that time, in the early Fifties that Highway 401 was going to define and separate communities and thus provide people with a sense of community identity, because there was a large expressway being built across what seemed to be the limit of northward expansion of Metropolitan Toronto and that was really going to be the most northerly mark of development of that area. Well, the highway was built and there is a big wide right-of-way there; it runs several hundred feet, perhaps 400 ft by now with the new addition of eight lanes.

Well, what happened in Metropolitan Toronto, Mr. Speaker, was that it didn't halt development at all; it encouraged development. And development jumped the highway and began to take place north of the highway in as dense a fashion as was possible. And when I look at these maps which are alternatively policy and alternatively a guide, and I see how thin they are in some areas—through a substantial part of them—and I read the text further and realize that they are only a part of a so-called communications corridor which might include highways, which might include Hydro rights of way, I wonder what real deterrents this is going to provide insofar as the expansion of municipalities is in fact concerned.

How, when you have a very narrow greenbelt line, is it going to define and separate communities in any meaningful way. Well, that's the first point I want to make.

The second point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is the real lack of any direction coming from this Legislature insofar as tying the minister, or his nameless and faceless officials, down to any specifics that were brought before this Legislature and approved by it. How do we know if this is policy or if something else slightly modified is going to be policy; that the minister will not, in the sanctity of his office, quietly and without any fanfare, change it. How do we know that it won't be changed at the behest of certain people who happen to have the ear of government from time to time.

I don't know, Mr. Speaker, if you caught certain questions, as yet unanswered, put forward by my leader in the past few days. He asked how many changes had been made in the Toronto-centred region plan to the land designated as greenbelt. The best we got from the minister was that he would look it up and advise us in due course. That advice has not, as yet, been forthcoming.

He specifically asked if there was a change on April 13, I think it was, in the municipality of Mississauga, where a greenbelt line was moved which allowed 1,000 acres of land, which heretofore had been designated as greenbelt, suddenly to become industrial. And that question has not, as yet, been answered.

Now, that is what makes us skeptical, Mr. Speaker, because if the information I have just relayed, and the questions we have asked are factual—and I believe that they are—the moving of that greenbelt line without any public knowledge of it allowed somebody to turn a useless piece of land into a piece of land which now has a potential of something upwards of $10 million.

I want to know, Mr. Speaker—and there is nothing in this legislation that indicates it to me—how, even when we have all of this hearing machinery finished and a decision, how we are going to be able to depend on the fact that the lines as established are meaningful.

You see, Mr. Speaker, as I was trying to enunciate in my remarks on the second reading of the earlier bill, the great fault in this legislation is that it's subjective, it's not objective.

And the testing comes by reason of the judgement of the persons making the decisions. And the persons making the decisions are the minister or his unnamed and hidden civil servant, or other people that we have no way of getting at. And once the decisions are made, perhaps because of the colour of a person's hair or whatever other subjective test the government is going to apply, then they are gone. They are gone forever. And whatever profit there is to be made out of the manipulations of greenbelt lines will be made and will have come and gone probably before we ever find out about it.

Now that, Mr. Speaker, is why we are objecting to this trilogy of bills. The same theme runs through them all. There are no legislative determinations. The minister comes to us and says: "Let me make ministerial determinations." And we say: "This is no way to run a democratic country." For those reasons, Mr. Speaker—and when I see greenbelt lines drawn on a map that the minister says in one voice is policy and the next voice says is a suggestion and when we don't get the answers to questions we have asked, and those questions are not just off the top of our heads.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister should know how many changes there have been made in the greenbelt designation of the Toronto centre region plan. And he should have come before us in advance of these bills and said this is how we have done it and these are the reasons. And when the question was asked about a specific date it shouldn't have taken him several days. Several days should not have elapsed, particularly when he knew that this legislation was here.

He should have been able to come to us and say: "Yes, we did it. We did it on that date in April and this is why we did it."

I'd like to hear that explanation. But I say, Mr. Speaker, that the ability of members of this Legislature to control what is going on in this province is being taken away by an arrogant and unaccountable majority which wants to make itself a dictator rather than a governor in accordance with our democratic system. And it's for that reason that we cannot support this bill.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, having listened to my friend and colleague for Downsview on several occasions on precisely the same theme, which now amounts almost to the verges of monomaniacal, the quotation—

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Monomaniacal!

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, a monomaniacal gesture from time to time.

Mr. Lewis: If you are going to do it, do it right.

Mr. Lawlor: He is really hung-up on 17th century gestures. He rallied his party behind him on the most plebian of principles, direct quotations from the last pages of John Locke written immediately before he died—and he died in agony.

Mr. Singer: Because he knew I was going to quote him.

Mr. Lawlor: The point about John Locke is that he was willing to recant.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Too bad the hon. member was told by his caucus to support us.

Mr. Lewis: And what's more, he is rolling over now.

Mr. Lawlor: The final, the plenary, the absolute right is not the right in property. During the slow accretion of civilization it has taken us almost 350 years to learn that rather simple lesson. But it hasn't really penetrated.

Mr. Singer: The member for Lakeshore doesn't listen and doesn't understand the difference between democracy and legislative government.

Mr. Lawlor: And the government, to the extent that it recognizes that property is not an absolute right, to the extent that it recognizes that a sense of community, that the sense of the common weal is overriding, knows that the property held by each one of us individually is not held in a way which we can place plenary disposition over it. We never could under any just regimen. All we hold and whatever we hold in this world we hold in trust. In trust for our children in trust for everybody around us, in trust for future generations. Not this purblind backward view of the rationale of real property.

Mr. Stokes: The minister doesn't believe that.

Mr. Lawlor: We sit over here listening to this nonsense, and we are almost disposed to vote for the bills. But the hon. minister, with a deeper prescience than I had perhaps given him credit for, with his insight into the political process, knows what we really think.

Mr. Singer: Will someone explain to him about Legislature and democracy.

Mr. Lawlor: We think, as the minister said, that he does not go far enough. He foreshortens, he doesn't take the—he should have moved into this concept ten years ago, the concepts that are being put forward now, with respect to the public ownership of land, with respect to land banking, with respect to a deep sense of obligation, of not allowing certain captains of industry and exploiters to take full advantage, rake off the profit and walk away with the boodle. That dawning realization is coming to him too and in 10 years time it will be in full bloom and the hon. member for Downsview will still be screaming from the rooftops and won't be in office precisely because he won't live with the times. You don't live with the times for the sake of doing so, but because of the deeper recognition of interpersonal and intercommunal relationships which are necessary to our total development as a people and as individuals.

Mr. Lewis: Hear, hear! Well said.

Mr. Lawlor: And if that can only begin to dawn, we are moving slightly forward. When I look at the thin green lines.

Mr. Lewis: The Treasurer is closer to us on this than they are.

Mr. Lawlor: Oh yes, the red Tory. There's always a red Tory just around the corner.

Mr. Lewis: The Treasurer is closer to Trudeau than they are.

Mr. Lawlor: The weakness, the skimpiness of the Treasurer's plan is portrayed in the map that he has given to us—how it thins out like some people who have been over-exercised by Charles Atlas. It practically disappears completely from the map. It fattens here and there in more recondite regions, but where the need is greatest the lines grow the thinnest. One can, as I say, hardly detect them at all.

Then when one does detect them, what has happened is that the Conservative government has sagaciously chosen a park, and then having got that beautiful piece of greenery spread out before it immediately runs a highway dead through the middle of it. This is its linkage concept in which it sets up the greenbelt concept.

The Treasurer has added very little to the thing. What has been pointed out to him—the Claireville area; just to the north of my own bivouac, in the Centennial Park, he brings into his plan. It has a certain beautiful acreage of greenness on this sketch. It doesn't belong to the government and yet he throws it in. The Treasurer is going to add somewhat to it and that's all to the good, but to plume himself upon things which he himself has not accomplished and which he is simply manipulating and arrogating into a plan and then presenting it as some kind of masterful blueprint of the future, simply belies the true nature of thing upon analysis.

The analysis has been fairly exhaustively done—and done splendidly too by my colleague for Ottawa Centre—

Mr. Lewis: As always.

Mr. Lawlor: —leaving very little. In this particular way he would foreshorten the debate and the Treasurer must be terribly grateful to him for this coherent, straightforward and incisive way in which he has moved in on this particular bill. Very few members given the time at their disposal that we have been given to penetrate this particular piece of obfuscation would have done nearly as well.

In any event, I noticed in a speech that the hon. minister made, Mr. Speaker, at the Victoria Inn in Stratford to the Community Planning Association on June 11, he talks about the parkway belt:

Last week I introduced into the Legislature, the Parkway Belt and Development Act. This legislation will enable us to begin implementing a system of parkway belts or multiple-use corridors around Toronto . . .

The proposed parkway belt plan, along with a later proposal for the Markham-to-Oshawa segment, will go through a public examination and hearing process before adoption as official policy.

That is where we have severe misgivings. True, the Treasurer has written hearing processes into the processes of the legislation, nevertheless his final and plenary power is disposed of to himself. In BC they introduced appeal procedures of various kinds to take away the full arbitrariness that could and might, and therefore since it is there according to Lord Acton, undoubtedly will be exercised and used either by this minister or future ministers. That must be modified and made easier.

Second, in the next paragraph:

In trying to protect this highly urbanized area from sprawl, the parkway belt is really one element in a dramatic new approach to town and regional planning wherein growth will be channelled into a number of expanded and new towns.

And I would like to know, what are these number of new towns? North Pickering or Cedarwood are the only ones that come to mind. There is, I would say, a kind of misrepresentation written into the text on this particular head. Then when he talks about expanded—

Hon. Mr. White: Read a little further and see the answer.

Mr. Lewis: What was that?

Hon. Mr. White: Read a little further and see the answer.

Mr. Lawlor: Certainly he is going to have some expanded towns. I wonder if he really has taken cognizance of the curious fact that when you write one thing into law—you learn this as a lawyer particularly—or make one thing illegal, it makes all the rest legal. It gives a sanction to it. When you look at the map and the white spaces here, the area immediately north of the Oakville segment, the Burlington segment, it is an invitation to expand into those particular areas. Unless there are severe restrictions laid upon population targets of growth, then the parkway belt concept itself can be self defeating, and bring about the concentrations and densities of population that he is seeking to ward off and to bring a secession to, within the overall concept of the parkway belt.

There are a couple of questions I have, I probably can't get to that committee. Other things must be done. In that area I notice that the Treasurer is picking up 55,000 acres; 12,000 are now already publicly owned, 15,000 will be purchased at a cost of some $150 million to $200 million; which is a sweet price to pay for any particular acre as things presently stand, something close to $14,000-$15,000 an acre. Fifty per cent though of the property that is presently privately owned has been zoned for, as he calls it, compatible uses, and it will remain there; and probably subject to the golf course principle will pay a decrease in taxes. On the other side, there is 20 per cent privately owned which is incompatible. I take it his intention with the incompatible use is to move in on it, and over a period of time, that that would represent part of the 15,000 acres that he is proposing to purchase at that very great price. What I really want to know is about the 30 per cent of property that is not mentioned in the course of the report. Is it because it is not zoned at all that it has been left out of account? Or what is reason? How does he account for that? I suppose that three or four per cent of that might be the golf courses. And while he includes the golf courses in it and tries to keep them and maintain them in the same use, as subject to his overall guidelines and to local zoning bylaws, to turn that whole are into green as though it were somehow his inhabited territory, when there must be a dozen golf courses located there — private golf courses at that. Does he intend, as part of his legislation, to make it mandatory that these golf courses serve the whole public since they are within his green belt? And since they are within the public realm? And since the benefits are supposed to accrue all the way along the line? But if they are run privately, and with restricted membership and all that sort of thing, I think it is a gross subsidization. Simply to have the land remain green without its utility to the general public is betraying his own principle in setting up the parkway to begin with. It will be very interesting to learn precisely what acreage is involved in conditions of that particular kind.

My colleague has mentioned the golf course principle as the Treasurer operates it in its so-called modified form. It is not equitable taxation. In those industries or in those residential neighbourhoods which would have a decrease in taxes or assessment in this thing, the benefits were minimal. They only last three years, and while the capital gain accumulation could double or triple, particularly within the restrictions imposed here, they know the Treasurer has set up these development corridors, that their usage will remain in the same form as, for instance, someone sitting on top of a ridge overlooking the escarpment. That home will go up in value as a result.

They could nevertheless apply the golf course principle and true, if they sold, the recapture of taxes plus interest at six per cent could take place, but it is shortsighted and myopic thinking which will not move in to the developmental benefits that the government is conferring upon them.

In the Niagara Escarpment report, they set out four or five various methods. The minister knows them, Mr. Speaker, altogether too well. We perused them. We turned them over. We mulled them but we didn't place them into any efficacy during the course of the taxation hearing.

The English principle of taking something off the top for the benefits conferred by society and by the community as a result of alterations made—as a result of transit routes being laid out, as a result of better communications being established for electrification, any number of other things—that all goes into the private pockets and none of it flows into the public realm, except through the regular income tax provision.

But nothing comes because of extraordinary venture, nothing because of the thing called economic rent, nothing from the extra benefits conferred by direct acts of the public and which accrue to the private beneficence and use of single persons. It is surely an inequitable principle and the government hasn't got the courage or the vision or the imagination, it has some faculty lacking, that it can't begin to move in on that particular situation.

It talks about land reserves and part of its plan being land reserves. Well, with such a paucity of ground, where are the reserves? What land reserves can it possibly use? The only land reserves it could use would be to turn a golf course into a housing development or to turn the strip at the west side of Oakville north—which is about two miles wide; one of the wider strips that the government has—into an industrial park. I trust that that's not the land reserve. Where is the land reserve concept? What does the government mean that its parkway belt makes provision for that?

It hardly makes provision for the recreational facilities. It is basically a service corridor—a recreational facility with Hydro towers running down the middle. You can bask in the immolated sunlight, under the shadows cast by the pylons, and refresh yourself at the heat of the day—particularly if you are not disposed to think, or do not know yourself about the Hydro line running from Nanticoke to Pickering. It is no doubt going to run through one of these corridors. In fact the corridors must be much broader.

You can't have 700-ft or even 1,000-ft corridors. The Macdonald-Cartier Freeway is 1,200 ft across and it is widening every day. Every time I go up on it, I find you can't drive on the thing because they keep on widening it. They have got barriers up all over the place.

The government can't operate the kind of utility features—the gas mains, the water mains, the Hydro towers, the whole works—within the narrow dimensions that it is setting up, and provide any recreational facilities on the side, plus a major expressway pouring traffic through.

So in some ways the government hasn't tackled it forthrightly. It should have provided for wider strips throughout most of this land. It is fairly easily acquired. A good deal of it is farmland that could make up strips that have some kind of potential and which would really validate the concept of recreational land.

The various things that the Treasurer said on that particular occasion to the community planning association, about this and the whole range of matters which we have under criticism and assessment at the present time, give a very fulsome and decorative aspect to them—highly pretentious, a fabric erected with a certain amount of tinsel. I say the minute one places a microscope to it—but one doesn't even have to do that—a fairly efficient eyeglass will show up the very great deficiencies. Ten years ago, for instance, again, the government had set up that corridor. What a rig-concept it really is at the base of Bronte Creek; it is a subterfuge, a way of seeking to segregate Burlington and Oakville. The worst subterfuge is over at the other end there where Burlington verges upon Hamilton.

Thank heavens for the parkway concept coming at this particular time to give some kind of validation and simulacrum of meaning to the regional government bills which will be before us shortly.

In other words, there is a great deal of artificiality worked into this thing, an enormous amount of pretence. If one really gets down to it, it's a bag of beans. As the minister accused us earlier, he does not go far enough; he does not bear out the plenitude of his own concept. The concept has validity; he can make these things work but under the present dispensation and disposition, he is going to get some kind of anaemic entity such as this is. It may die from blood poisoning.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to this bill?

The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: The Treasurer applauds the remarks of the member for Lakeshore, as do we all; and he is right. The member for Lakeshore is—how did the Treasurer describe him? One of nature's men?

Hon. Mr. White: One of nature's gentlemen.

Mr. Lewis: One of nature's gentlemen. I agree with the minister entirely.

The assertion at the outset of the remarks of the member for Lakeshore, the tribute, the recitation of the public interest, the understanding of what it means over the next generation to accumulate the wherewithal to make it possible for southern Ontario to develop in a way consistent with the human dimension in all its aspects, is something which is far too often forgotten in the process of these debates.

Mr. Speaker, I decided to enter this debate for somewhat different reasons because I really hadn't intended to. I had been looking forward to the Niagara Escarpment debate but hadn't intended to enter this one.

Hon. Mr. White: The member doesn't really mean it.

Mr. Lewis: No; I'll tell the minister what prompted me to enter this debate on the parkway belt. I want to enter second reading, and not at undue length, specifically to repudiate the remarks of the Premier of this province during the course of question period this afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

I think the Premier of Ontario put forward a view of the consultative process which is a desecration of the use of the word consultation. I think that the Premier of this province put forth a view of the consultative process which is a perversion of public participation in the development of plans for the citizens of Ontario.

I think that power has corrupted this government, this Treasury Board, not in the sinister sense—not simply or solely or even at all in the sense that it is beholden to certain vested interests, although doubtless it is—but in a much more fundamental sense than that. I think that power has corrupted the cabinet of Ontario in the sense that the ministers now believe not in participation but in manipulation. The great Achilles heel of all of these land-use bills which are now before the House, is the—

Hon. Mr. White: It was the member who manipulated his way into power, behind his leader's back.

Mr. Lewis: —is the manipulative—

Hon. Mr. White: He is the manipulator.

Mr. Lewis: —is the manipulative theme which runs throughout.

The Premier of this province said today, in effect—and I listened to him very carefully—that in the major areas of economic and social development in southern Ontario it was not possible to consult with the public in advance of the proposal or a plan. We repudiate that because that is so arbitrary, it is so unthinking. It is so profoundly antagonistic to every decent principle of consultation, that it shouldn't be uttered, but in fact it is embodied in this legislation; it is embodied in The Planning and Development Act; it runs throughout these bills.

There is not the slightest reason in the world, Mr. Speaker, why the parkway belt west should have been brought into the Legislature in this fashion, or should have been presented to the public at that major visual demonstration in the Macdonald Block.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that it was perfectly legitimate to put a freeze on a vast area of terrain west of Metropolitan Toronto, and to say that following from what is implicit in the Toronto-centred region plan, we are now going to discuss something called parkway belt, or parkway corridor.

And the government sets the whole plan out to the public; it isn't even a plan, it is just a basic principle. It is just a basic concept. And it involves municipal planning authorities, it involves community groups, it involves individuals and it ultimately establishes the document which is presented to the public and then discussed in detail.

The presentation of this plan in the way it was presented to the public and to the House is a violation of every consultative principle. And that is what is wrong with all these Acts, and obviously we cannot get from the Premier or from the Treasurer, an exchange on this basic, fundamental, philosophic difference, which totally separates the parties in this House.

What the Treasurer is saying and what the Premier said today, offensive as it was, is that every major development in southern Ontario must emanate from an elitist group of civil service planners. On the basis of that elitist plan, we are then prepared to put the proposal out for public discussion, and we are then prepared to write into legislation certain safeguards by way of public consultation. That's wrong, Mr. Speaker.

It runs counter to everything we know about public participation. It runs counter to every definition of consultation that is available because the consultative process must precede the proposal. Otherwise, we are faced with a fait accompli. Otherwise, in truth, this is a finished product, and of of course that is what it is. This is the finished document. The only thing the government will do is amend this in a trivial fashion.

The Treasurer has invested too much money in his audio-visual presentation across the province. He has invested too much money in the emotional and intellectual commitment of your planners. He has invested too much political hope in the credibility of the government in promulgating this document. He has invested too much to alter it. He can't alter it now, the Treasurer committed to it, absolutely and totally committed to it.

Mr. MacDonald: It is in a bill.

Mr. Lewis: As a matter of fact, it is now embodied in legislation, and everything he establishes—

Hon. Mr. White: If I may interrupt.

Mr. Lewis: Sure.

Hon. Mr. White: Any government that would stop Spadina and withdraw the energy tax is certainly sensitive to appropriate change and will remain so.

Mr. Lewis: Well, well; the Treasurer is now making a virtue of humiliation. You know to elevate humiliation to a principle, is really quite something.

Hon. Mr. White: If those areas aren't right they will be made right.

Mr. Lewis: If the Treasurer says to me that the safeguard for Ontario is his abject public reversal on Spadina and the energy tax, I say to him, he is untrustworthy — because his reversals are chaotic and unpredictable. I refuse to rely on them and I don't see the reversal written into legislation. So I will not accept it.

But you know, and I know, and all of us know, that this parkway belt west is sacred law. It is inviolate. It is written. It is holy writ. The Treasurer won't alter this. Oh, he may expand the corridor from 200 feet to 400 feet; he may expand the highway from two lanes to four lanes; he may include a golf course you hadn't intended; he may acquire 56,000 acres rather than 55,000 acres, but this is the plan. And in the process of the plan, the minister violates every principle of consultation.

And that the Premier should have loaned his authority to so perverse a definition of consultation, I found frankly unbelievable. I couldn't believe what the Premier said at question period today, because it was as though he had thumbed his nose at the people of the province. As if to say: "We in our inner sancta will decide on the basic propositions to govern, and then you can be assembled to pretend to amend them. But we know, in advance, what is best for the people." That's a real corruption of power; it's terribly condescending; it's a tremendous assumption of authority and knowledge which the government has no right to assume. And the government certainly has no right to impose it the way it is imposing it.

Hon. Mr. White: I think the hon. member is describing these socialists.

Mr. Lewis: Well, you know, it is interesting how anxious the minister gets on this point, because I am not accusing him of what everybody else is accusing him. I didn't call him a tsar yesterday. I know something about the tsars, as a matter of fact, having studied a little of that history.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: They were ineffectual.

Mr. Lewis: Well, the minister is not in their league so I won't desecrate that word by calling him a tsar. And I didn't call him a dictator. I didn't use any of the type of descriptive adjectives which are being applied to him with such facility on all sides these days. I don't really want to do that.

Hon. Mr. White: As a substitute for research, it might be said—

Mr. Lewis: I don't want to do that, because that makes the debate a kind of irrelevant exercise. There is a fundamental principle at stake here. The principle is what the Conservative Party sees as consultation and planning, and what the New Democratic Party sees as consultation and planning. And we repudiate the Treasurer's definition of consultation. And therefore we repudiate—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: We repudiate this kind of bill which pretends to consult after the fact, but which actually manipulates public opinion to accept a fait accompli. And that is completely and totally unacceptable. Particularly when he could have done this from a tabula rasa. He didn't have to come in with a plan that is fully defined. He could have made this a model of the way in which the government brings the community in to participate.

As a matter of fact, look how hypocritical it is. On page four, under the heading of "Principles," the first principle is to define and separate communities and thus to provide people with a sense of community identity. How does the minister provide people with a sense of community identity by imposing the community structures in advance of the community participation. What kind of definition of consultation is that? It flies in the face of reason and of logic.

Hon. Mr. White: I hate to interrupt again, but if the hon. member means imposing a structure relating to the regional government bills or to the parkway belt west bill, he should know that in each case there's been enormous input and thousands of submissions. After the regional government bills, or after the proposals were introduced, there were dozens and dozens of meetings all through the areas concerned. And a seemingly infinite number of letters and other submissions came in to me and my colleagues. If he is referring now to the parkway belt west—

Mr. Cassidy: And every one was ignored.

Hon. Mr. White:—there certainly has been a variety of input. For instance, all the municipalities have been involved to some extent in the preparation of the proposal. And now the proposal goes to hearings and through an elaborate consultative process which includes the fact that the minister must consult every municipality, that the minister must consult every ministry, and which provides for advisory committees, hearing officers and so on.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister really believes it, doesn't he? He really believes it.

Mr. Lewis: I really don't understand that. I understand that after the event the government will do all that, while reserving for itself the ultimate authority to decide. And if the minister sees the consultative process as we see it, which is to draw from the public approval for that which is already laid out, then, of course, he can be happy in his bailiwick, content in the world, knowing that he has manipulated opinion.

But if he had consulted around the parkway west with a variety of input—what a lovely phrase, to describe consultation, a variety of input—the minister would have listed it when he introduced the bill or when he summed up. I haven't read of any public hearings. I haven't read of any hearing officers or about the proposal of a parkway belt that came out of the Toronto-centred region plan for development. I haven't heard of community groups being given the expertise, the facility, economic or financial support to prepare proposals. I haven't heard of major public meetings covered in the press.

But I do know that there was a tightly-knit group of civil servants who fashioned the design and then revealed it to the world on that gray day in the Macdonald Block. That is not planning and that is not consultation. And that is what is unacceptable to us. He is talking about all the consultation which will allegedly follow. That becomes a sham. If it doesn't come at the outset, then what follows becomes a sham.

Let me go on to the second point I wanted to make very briefly, Mr. Speaker. We also want to put to the minister the continued violation of the Toronto-centred region plan. And that is important. The Toronto-centred region plan had been rendered obsolete by the parkway belt west. The Toronto-centred region plan had been rendered a shambles by parkway belt west. The underlying principle of the Toronto-centred region plan was to somehow re-orient growth to the east. And when we had a major debate on the airport in this House he will recall that his predecessor (Mr. McKeough) said that the reason an airport to the west of Metropolitan Toronto was not acceptable in the final analysis was because it would have violated the fundamental precepts of the regional plan. And that is why the airport was going to the northeast. And yet the minister brings in the parkway belt west plan which encourages major urban growth and development north of Burlington, north of Oakville, in the northern part of Mississauga. It encourages development moving up to meet that parkway belt and to do exactly what Provincial Secretary for Resources Development said should not be done in his presentation at that meeting: to build this conglomerate, this contagion of urban society from Oshawa right through to Kitchener, or wherever it will one day end.

He is doing exactly what all his colleagues said he would not do. This is a bill designed to encourage urban sprawl and urban growth in exactly the same area in which the design for development said it should be discouraged. And he does it so barefacedly. He has no qualms. He has a Cheshire smile about it. He has no embarrassment at all that the Toronto-centred region plan, upon which he had placed so much faith, is now a document about which historians will amuse themselves.

The third point I wanted to make is best put by a little quote I found from Norman Pearson. Remember Norman Pearson? That very fine planner whom the government has used on occasion in discussing recreational resources. Back on February 20 of 1970, Norman Pearson, at a seminar of the Centre for Resource Development in Guelph said, and I thought to myself how fantastically prescient Norman Pearson was. He said:

Unless we change our ways the only remaining open spaces in the midst of this sprawling megalopolis could be the airports, a great deal of abused and abandoned farmland, the lands under the Hydro towers, and some densely travelled, worn out parks. And the open spaces of today will be the slum greenery of the worst kind.

Well, what an apt description of the parkway belt three years in advance. The parkway belt, Mr. Speaker, is a highway with broad shoulders. That is what it is. The parkway belt is largely a service corridor. The parkway belt has very little capacity for all of the recreational aspects which the minister attributes to it. And as such, it is not defensible.

That brings me to the last point: The basic question, the public ownership and the public-private interests was raised by the member for Ottawa Centre and very vividly by the member for Lakeshore. And that is also a crux of philosophic difference in this bill and in the Niagara Escarpment bill. The minister has 15,000 to 55,000 acres that he is taking into public ownership for $10,000 to $12,000 an acre. A total of $150 to $200 million is what his advisory group suggested. I will have something to say tomorrow about the way they arrive at figures and how suspect those figures are. But at $10,000 to $12,000 an acre, I'd very much like to see the analysis of land costs which went into those figures, but I gather we don't have them, maybe we could have them on clause by clause.

Another 12,000 acres is within the conservation authorities. Another 29,000 acres, I take it, is under, or will be under, some kind of zoning or development control, or whatever. But it again, like the escarpment, damn it, will be subject to all the private pressures which have obviously destroyed the possibilities for recreational green belt, or the maintenance of agricultural land — all the things around the urban centres we consider most important.

And if one believes what one says about the need for recreational space around urban communities, then commit yourself to public ownership rather more than the 15,000 acres of urban lands to which the Treasurer has committed himself. If he can't go that far then there is a perfectly legitimate right to purchase the development rights in the other 29,000 acres. One purchases mineral rights all the time. One may purchase all kinds of rights in this province while still allowing for ownership and use of land.

Why can't the government purchase the development rights in the other 29,000 acres? Why can't the Treasurer at least make of this pathetic 55,000 acres a public resource, which will not be subject to private pressure and private exploitation.

Hon. Mr. White: The member is quite a little advocate for the developers, I must say.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, advocate for the developers; I tell you, less of an advocate there could not be! Not only is the Treasurer giving the parkway belt west over to the developers, but he is giving the whole Niagara Escarpment over to the developers, and that's 1.3 million acres.

This party couldn't possibly reach the Treasurer's commitment to private development and, if he says to me that development rights cost money, I say to him better the acquisition of development rights, or the outright acquisition of the land, even at major cost, than to watch it all go down the drain at public expense and be lost to public use.

Of course, for this government, every developer is paid off immediately out of the consolidated revenue fund. Alternatives by way of bonds, or anything else, never occurs to this government. All they know is that they acquire land, they pay for it in total and that's that.

Let me tell the minister, his idea of consultation is wrong, fundamentally wrong. His idea of the parkway belt is wrong in the way in which it destroys the essential ethos of the Toronto-centred region. The parkway belt itself is flawed because it is still largely a highway and transmission corridor incorporating certain golf courses, private parks and conservation areas.

As my colleague from Lakeshore pointed out: What are they going to do with those other 29,000 acres, with the zoning bylaws and the controls which have been applied for the last 30 years of Tory rule and the consequence of which has been the destruction of recreational resources in southern Ontario.

For all those reasons, we can't support this bill. For all those reasons we can't support the next bill; and for all those reasons, all three bills add up to a catastrophic error in land-use planning on the part of the Tories in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to participate? If not, the hon. the minister.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the use of superlatives by the opposition parties in these various matters make words almost meaningless. I suppose we've had—

Mr. Lewis: Consultation is meaningless.

Hon. Mr. White: —about a catastrophe a day all of this session and now we've got another one.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): If that's true it's the government's fault.

An hon. member: The Treasurer is personally responsible.

Hon. Mr. White: In point of fact, it's a strange use of words—because these three bills taken together are probably the boldest and most modern step forward in the history of planning in this province.

Mr. Cassidy: Who is using superlatives now?

Hon. Mr. White: The parkway belt west which we're debating at the moment, which is the first block in a great succession of such moves—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That is what Billy Nickle said back in 1958.

Hon. Mr. White: No doubt as the decades march on will safeguard enormous quantities of land for future use.

The idea that this land should be seized in some fashion, as was suggested by the member for Ottawa Centre; or that we should pay for down-zoning while getting no credit for up-zoning, as was suggested by the member for Waterloo North—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He didn't. He said the government is going to have one it should have the other.

Hon. Mr. White: —are at the opposite extremes and we find ourselves, once again, thank God, in between the reactionary Liberals and the radical socialists. As we bring this plan into focus, as we bring this proposal before hundreds, perhaps thousands, of people affected—

Mr. Cassidy: Will the minister use the audio-visual aids before every hearing?

Hon. Mr. White: As we bring before it every ministry and municipality for comments and suggested modifications, we have left all existing rights in place.

Mr. Lewis: Oh sure! The Treasurer is committed to it and he knows it.

Hon. Mr. White: Now I quite understand what my hon. friend from Lakeshore has said about the acquired right to property, and philosophically I have some very real reservations about that, but it happens since 1666 when Charles the Second returned, that private ownership has reclaimed all of these rights from the Commonwealth.

Mr. Lewis: Which Charles lost his head?

Hon. Mr. White: Charles the Second of England.

Mr. Lewis: Lost his head!

Hon. Mr. White: Charles the First lost his head, and during the Cromwell era the state took back to itself the right to private property.

Mr. Foulds: In good King Charles' golden days.

Hon. Mr. White: And then when Charles the Second returned — I have forgotten the date now, I think it was February or March, 1666, with Samuel Boswell there to record the event.

Mr. Lewis: As a matter of fact it was April 16.

Mr. Cassidy: If the minister thinks it was seven years ago there is something wrong with him.

Hon. Mr. White: Those advocates of private rights and the lawyers they hire succeeded in once again re-establishing that ancient tradition of the Anglo-Saxon culture, and that is the prominence of private property.

Mr. Cassidy: Don't blame the member for Lakeshore for the actions of his fellow lawyers.

Hon. Mr. White: It is, I suppose, only since World War II that these rights have been to some extent abridged. I remember very well when I was elected here in 1959, almost immediately thereafter getting some number of complaints from London families who had leased land at Rondeau Park and who had had cottages standing on that land for one or two generations, for decades, and who had invested a great deal of their treasure and their emotion in those cottage sites to the point that they were infuriated when Mr. Frost decided that these leases would not be renewed and that these lands would revert 20 years later, or something of that sort, to public use.

I saw that then, and I see it now, as one of the early manifestations of over population, because this part of Ontario is one of the most densely populated places in the world.

Mr. MacDonald: Talk about superlatives, there is another one.

Hon. Mr. White: Now then, whether it should have been done at that time or not is almost beside the point. This government of William Davis is moving in a way that no predecessor government has done.

Mr. Foulds: That is right, that is true; in its death throes.

Hon. Mr. White: And I venture to say in a way that no other government in Canada has done, even including Premier Barrett who brought in an extraordinary, dictatorial land-control bill from which he fled in full retreat.

Mr. Lewis: Come on, come on! At least they have appeal. They have a land commission, they have compensation.

Hon. Mr. White: We have a lot more protection for the citizens in this bill than they have in their modified bill.

Mr. Lewis: They are responsive to public opinion, they don't attempt to manipulate it.

Hon. Mr. White: Now I hear on the one hand the Liberals arguing, as several have done, that this too strong; "dictatorial" says the member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: No, I said it was dictatorial because the Treasurer doesn't say what he is going to do in his statute, that's why.

Hon. Mr. White: I hear the socialists say not too strong and dictatorial.

Mr. Lewis: Why doesn't the minister deal with the substance instead of political polemic.

Hon. Mr. White: I am coming to it. Too small, too timorous were the words that were used; and once again we find ourselves between these extremists, and I find myself again in accord with President Eisenhower who said: "The extremists are always wrong;" and so they are.

Mr. Cassidy: We both know the Liberals are wrong but we are telling the Treasurer that he is wrong.

Mr. Lewis: President Eisenhower, now that is a mentor for you.

Hon. Mr. White: Well he doesn't look too bad in retrospect, if one thinks about it.

Mr. Foulds: Who was his vice-president?

Mr. Lewis: He chose his associates well.

Mr. Singer: The Treasurer must have a quote about Nixon too to get up to date?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: They are modelling their administration after Nixon.

Mr. Lewis: From Charles to Eisenhower, that is not bad. Has the minister thought of anything in the 1970s?

Hon. Mr. White: Well I will touch on some of these matters and then—are we going to debate this again tomorrow, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Lewis: Not if the minister winds up.

Hon. Mr. White: Perhaps I will spend five minutes now. I would like very much to come to grips with certain details in the committee when we can use maps and so on so; give me just five minutes, if I may.

Mr. Lewis: The minister can take as much as he wants.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister can have as much as he wants. We have heard so little from him on the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: The Leader of the Liberal Party—said it should be extended to the east, if I understand him correctly, and of course this is what we are doing. I am sorry if that wasn't made clear. This is just the first part—the parkway west—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It wasn't presented in total.

Hon. Mr. White:—and there is a parkway belt east being designed now which will be published later.

Mr. Lewis: The minister will prolong that in his public discussions next week.

Mr. MacDonald: This bill makes it law.

Hon. Mr. White: Once again it will be a proposal which, once again, will go through a prolonged consultative process which, once again, will be modified in accordance with the wishes of the people concerned.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Would the minister permit a question? He said it will be a proposal, therefore it will not be presented in the same way as this particular parkway recommendation which is presented as policy and so designated.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, it is a policy proposal—

Mr. MacDonald: This is in the bill. The Treasurer can go on about it, and how he can put this off, I don't know, but it will be interesting to know.

Hon. Mr. White: It is the fruits of the labours of the best people we have available and the best judgement—

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, yes—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The man said that was right—

Hon. Mr. White: —of the politicians in government.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, right.

Hon. Mr. White: We don't pretend to have a monopoly on wisdom—

Mr. Lewis: But the minister does!

Hon. Mr. White: We do not pretend to be the fountainhead—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Not in public, the minister doesn't.

Hon. Mr. White: —for all knowledge—

Mr. Lewis: But the minister exercises it.

Hon. Mr. White: —and virtue—

Mr. Lewis: But the minister exercises it.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Why does he ask for so much power?

Hon. Mr. White: —and having brought in a policy pro tem—

Mr. Lewis: Policy pro tem! It is a bill, it is a statute!

Hon. Mr. White: —we have built into the bill all of the consultative processes available under the Planning and Development Act.

Mr. MacDonald: It is one the ministry intends to pass and table for study.

Mr. Lewis: It is a statute that he is ramming through the House. It is not a proposal.

Hon. Mr. White: Somebody was good enough to send me a little note. As long as we are using quotes, here is a little offering for the meeting—

Mr. MacDonald: There is still five minutes.

Hon. Mr. White: "You don't make the weak strong by making the strong weak"—whoever sent that to me — by Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. Lewis: That was the member for Welland (Mr. Morningstar).

Hon. Mr. White: By Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It must have been. The hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Yakabuski) isn't in the House.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, whoever sent this to me—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: —I appreciate it.

Mr. Lewis: That isn't bad.

An hon. member: It's very good.

Mr. Lewis: What about "A stitch in time," or "Don't cross bridges."

Hon. Mr. White: The Leader of the NDP has suggested we purchase development rights. In point of fact, the development rights, if in fact there are any—

Mr. Lewis: The government could legislate them, and they wouldn't cost much.

Hon. Mr. White: —will be paid for presumably, as the landowners with these rights exercise those rights through the courts.

Mr. Lewis: What?

Hon. Mr. White: The bill is silent on the matter of compensation if—

Mr. Good: Say that again!

Hon. Mr. White: So, well—

Mr. Singer: What rights are there? What legal rights are there?

Mr. Lewis: What is the minister talking about?

Hon. Mr. White: Let me restate the proposition.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, the minister had better.

Hon. Mr. White: The Planning and Development Act is silent on the matter of compensation, as is the parkway belt west. Whatever rights existed—

Mr. Lewis: Yes, of course.

Mr. Cassidy: Doesn't he know the name of the Act?

Hon. Mr. White: —before a week ago Monday exist today. If—

Mr. Singer: Could I ask the minister a question?

Hon. Mr. White: No, just a minute, let me finish one explanation. If the owner of certain lands had certain rights which were compensable, those rights are in no way affected by what we have done.

Mr. Lewis: I understand that.

Hon. Mr. White: The facts of each case will have to be decided by the courts and I, myself, would be extremely irresponsible to predict the outcome of a case or cases in general—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, that's a red herring.

Mr. Cassidy: It's a complete red herring.

Mr. Lewis: What will he do with the 29,000 acres?

Mr. Singer: Can I ask my question now?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister misunderstands me.

Hon. Mr. White: No, I do not.

Mr. Singer: I wonder if the minister could explain to me how he is creating compensable rights above and beyond anything that is in the Expropriation Act? Is there some theory of compensation for change of zoning that exists in the civil law? Is that what the minister is telling us?

Mr. Lewis: There is no such law.

Mr. Singer: Because there is no such thing.

Hon. Mr. White: My hon. friend misunderstood me. I said that this legislation, these three Acts—

Mr. Cassidy: It is very easy the way he is going on.

Hon. Mr. White: —do not alter the rights of property owners. Whatever rights they had before the bills came in—

Mr. Lewis: We understand that.

Mr. Good: President Johnson.

Hon. Mr. White: —insofar as compensation is concerned, they were in no way affected by our bills.

Mr. Lewis: How does the minister protect the 29,000 acres from private developer pressure? How does he protect it?

Hon. Mr. White: The official plans will be brought into conformity. I do believe we should get into this in the committee.

Mr. Lewis: This is fundamental.

Mr. Cassidy: No, this is fundamental here.

Mr. Lewis: It will be subject to the same pressure it has always been subject to.

Hon. Mr. White: The official plan will be brought into conformity with the provincial plan, the bylaws will be brought into conformity—

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps.

Hon. Mr. White: —and behind them will stand the overall legislation. So we have three lines of defence, so to speak.

Mr. Lewis: Right. The word "will", "will pay."

Mr. Cassidy: Buy them—companies like Fidinam and Canadian Equity and companies like that.

Hon. Mr. White: Does the member really think for one minute that purchasing all of this land would give some further safeguard when land can be sold or bought at any time by a successive government?

Mr. Lewis: They have no security on several sites here and on the escarpment.

Hon. Mr. White: The fundamental protection is the attitude of the citizens.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on! Some protection.

Hon. Mr. White: Does the member think that London, Ont., could not have sold off Victoria Park in the heart of the city? Of course it could, legally, but it was impossible to do so, much as some politicians were tempted from time to time over the decades, because the citizens stood on guard. And so it is with these green spaces.

Now I want to move along.

Mr. Lewis: What about all the development in Mississauga.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Hon. Mr. White: I am trying not to be quarrelsome. It is difficult, though, when I am interrupted so much.

Mr. Lewis: I don't think that is sound at all—relying on the developers in the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. White: Reference was made to our attitudes toward Crown lands, provincially-owned lands. Some years ago, several years ago, we decided not to sell more Crown lands but rather to lease those lands for cottage developments and such like. We have, as the Minister of Natural Resources has been able to tell us from time to time, bought far more land in the last 10 or 20 years than we have sold. This becomes another move forward as we acquire green spaces for our people for future generations.

This legislation is said to be too strong by the Liberals, although too weak by the socialists. The fact of the matter is that we are now acquiring for ourselves the same kind of power that municipalities have had for 25 years or more. No more and no less, except that it is applied on a broader basis.

Mr. Singer: Except that there were appeal procedures and justification procedures. People could be heard, and if there was a municipal bylaw that would be defended.

Hon. Mr. White: The members opposite persist in misinterpreting the function of the hearing officers. The hearing officers are entirely different from the federal hearing officers whose responsibility it is to summarize the points of view offered to their hearings, but who make no recommendations.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The points of view will be offered to their hearings like the hearing officials in Brantford today.

Hon. Mr. White: These hearing officers are required by law to make recommendations which in themselves become a public document. In the face of that public document with recorded recommendations the government moves either to modify its plans in accordance with those recommendations or to be prepared to—

Mr. Singer: That is exactly what the federal expropriation Act says. That is exactly what Mr. Swackhamer said. The government hasn't changed a thing.

Hon. Mr. White: —or to be prepared to defend its decisions—modified or not modified—in this parliamentary setting; and accepts full responsibility for the decisions which it has made.

Mr. Singer: That's the trouble! The minister is not modifying them in a public setting. They are modified in the secrecy of an office.

Hon. Mr. White: The golf course principle came into the remarks of one of the members and I am reminded that these agreements are renewable every three years. There is no definite time limit. No definite time limit is placed on the length or number of renewals. The taxes become repayable by the owner when the agreement is voluntarily terminated—which is to say, not renewed—or the land use changes to a higher use indicated on the approved development plan.

Another uncertainty expressed by one of the members, the member for Yorkview, has to do with the $5 per acre. This is not a grant for purchases but is rather part of the formula for grants in lieu of taxes on Crown land and it parallels certain other legislation which, incidentally, is now under review.

Mr. Speaker, it must be said that I have not made use of the material I have in front of me to recapitulate the enormous advantages of this legislation—the benefits that will flow from that for generations for the people of this province.

I am not doing so in part because of the rather extensive presentation made a week ago yesterday and in part because, as we take this legislation into the standing committee, we will be able to recapitulate the advantages, explore the alternatives, reactivate the consultative process which we are pledged to—

Mr. Lewis: He means create it, originate it, commence it.

Hon. Mr. White: —together with maps and data and experts at our disposal.

Mr. Lewis: “Reactivate the consultative process.”

Hon. Mr. White: So I now invite every member of this House to support this modern and farseeing legislation.

Mr. Lewis: It needs resuscitation not reactivation. It needs exhumation.

Mr. Speaker: The motion, of course, is for second reading of Bill 130; however, my eyes tell me it's 6 o'clock. In view of that fact I declare it to be 6 o'clock and I therefore leave the Chair. We shall resume at 8.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Since there will be a division on this bill, would it be acceptable to the provincial Treasurer to have the vote taken at 8 o'clock. Although I know he himself will not be here, unfortunately.

Hon. Mr. White: I would like very much to be here to set the style, so to speak—

Mr. Lewis: Like the withdrawal of the bill.

Mr. Good: We would support that.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): As long as he walks in here backwards.

Hon. Mr. White: —by leaping light-footedly to my feet. But I am speaking to the Toronto Junior Board of Trade about the accomplishments of the Conservative ministry—

Mr. Lewis: That will take him all of five minutes.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: —and I am afraid I won't be back at 8 o'clock.

Mr. Lewis: So the Treasurer doesn't want us to vote. We can hold the vote.

Hon. Mr. White: Why don't we do it now?

Mr. Lewis: It will take up until 6:30 before the minister's people are here—they are not here today.

An hon. member: Three minutes will be enough.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Of course, that's precisely what I had in mind and I see no reason why we can't proceed with the vote when we resume at 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. Singer: Would you presume then, Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, that the division has been called but you won't be able to ring the bells until you see that it's 8 o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: There will be no division because I'm not sure—I can't do that; I haven't been told there is a division. I must put the question to the House first.

Mr. Lewis: Put the question, Mr. Speaker? Your vision is faulty!

Mr. Speaker: I am therefore rising. I am exercising my authority to declare it to be 6 o'clock. I do now leave the chair and we shall resume at 8.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 12, 1973

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

PARKWAY BELT PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT ACT, 1973 (concluded)

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, may I draw to your attention the presence in the west gallery of the many members of the Downsview Liberal Association and ask you and the members of the House to welcome them?

An hon. member: The east gallery.

Mr. Singer: East gallery.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: —on a point of—

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): You can tell there aren't many—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I always thought that was west over there.

Mr. J. H. Jessiman (Fort William): As usual, the member doesn't know which way is up or down.

Mr. Lewis: —on a point of order, since the member for Downsview, in his own—

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Government Services): That is north up there.

Mr. Lewis: —humility failed to mention it—alas, his constituents should know that he has already spoken in this debate and therefore the House and the world will be deprived of the surrealism of hearing him yet again tonight.

Mr. Singer: Oh—

An hon. member: It's a pity.

Mr. Speaker: When we arose at 6 for the supper hour, we had completed the debate on second reading—

Interjection by hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: —of Bill 130. I had not placed the motion before the House, but the motion was Mr. White's motion for second reading of Bill 130.

The House divided on the motion for second reading of Bill 130, which was approved on the following vote:

White and MacDonald

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 46, the "nays" 27.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: Mr. White and Mr. MacDonald are paired.

Mr. Speaker: All right.

Mr. Singer: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since when do we have pairing in this House?

Mr. Speaker: The provision is set forth quite clearly in the standing orders.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Who is the Premier (Mr. Davis) pairing with?

Mr. Speaker: Shall the bill be ordered for third reading?

Mr. Lewis: No.

Mr. Speaker: Committee.

Mr. Lewis: Standing committee.

Mr. Singer: Standing committee.

Mr. Speaker: Standing committee.

I think it had been indicated that the bill was to go to standing committee.

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the previous bill went to the standing committee and they wanted them as a group, as I understand it.

Clerk of the House: The 19th order, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 144, An Act to establish the Ontario Transportation Development Corp.

ONTARIO DEVELOPMENT CORP. ACT
 (concluded)

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) adjourned the debate. However, he is going to defer to the member for Sudbury.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Sudbury has the floor.

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate. While I wasn't in the House yesterday to hear the minister's (Mr. Carton's) remarks, may I assure him that I did read the debate as it has transpired so far and I also read the debate of the member for Downsview.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): The rabble over there—let it be noted that they walked out on the only authoritative spokesman for the working people of this province.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, the member for Downsview indicated that there were quite a few vagaries in the bill and he wasn't quite sure what was intended by the legislation. I think it is apparent in the bill that the minister had to make the statement in one of the paragraphs that this is not a Crown corporation—or it is not an agent of Her Majesty.

Now usually you can tell a leopard by its spots. You don't have to go around and hang a sign on the leopard saying, "This is a leopard." In this case the bill is so confusing, and the intent of this corporation is so confusing, that we have to reiterate in law that this is not a Crown corporation. It is probably for this reason why I, and the New Democratic Party, cannot support the bill.

There is ample evidence in the history of this province and in the history of our country to indicate that the private sector has not been able to supply us with transportation facilities. In every case the public sector has to come in to solve the problems. I am surprised that while the minister recognized in his statement that the private sector had failed in its responsibilities in supplying research and development to expand on the urban transit scene and at the same time admitted there was a weakness in this sector he saw fit to bring the private sector into the incorporation of what I consider to be a Crown corporation.

It seems to have all the trimmings of a Crown corporation—except that 49 per cent of it is going to be held in private hands. I think this flies in the face of the objectives of government, and the statement by the Premier—if I could just quote the Premier's statement when he announced that an agreement had been entered into with Krauss-Maffei—to the Legislature on May 1, 1973, and I quote from the first paragraph.

This was a policy aimed at providing Ontario cities with transportation facilities that put people first and was directed toward meeting the economic, social and recreational needs of urban residents.,

Now, if the minister is going to be true to that statement that he is going to develop transportation on the most economic basis, he has to forego the profit motive. As long as he has private investment then he is going to have to go for profits, because that is the only way that he can attract private investment. If he is going to go for profits, by going for profits he is going to raise the costs of transportation in Ontario. So I think we are going in exactly the wrong direction.

I'd like to get down to the bill, Mr. Speaker. The corporation will have on its board nine directors. The first chapter indicates that. It doesn't say what kind of salaries or wages these directors are going to get. It doesn't say what the term of office is. It only says that a meeting of the shareholders will determine who the next board of directors is going to be. It doesn't indicate when the first meeting is going to be, and it is not uncommon for corporations not to call shareholders' meetings, and this might go on for a lifetime before these people saw fit to call a meeting. It sounds to me like it could easily be a self-perpetuating board, and that this Legislature, or even the shareholders, wouldn't have very much to say about who their representatives are.

I also feel that, as there is going to be a large public investment in this corporation, the Legislature is losing control or transferring responsibility for funds to people who are not responsible to the electorate by forming this semi-private corporation. It appears to me that the Province of Ontario is going to take most of the risks, in that the province will accept the debt obligations of the corporation. So I can see that this could be a never-ending stream of public funds going out to keep this corporation afloat, and yet the board of directors would not be responsible to this Legislature, or this Legislature would not be responsible for the operation of the corporation.

I think anytime we are expending public funds of this magnitude there should be very tight control from this Legislature, because I think it is part and parcel of the democratic process that when public funds are extended then the elected people should have direct control over them. This diversification of responsibility into the more than 300 boards, commissions and committees that the province already has is unacceptable and this in effect is another one, only we have less control over this than we would have, say, over the Ontario Hydro Commission, because it is in fact, as stated, not a Crown corporation, it is some kind of bastardized organization and it is probably the first time in this province that such a setup has been formulated.

I had suspected, due to certain statements, that we would be getting a corporation somewhat like the federal government instituted when they formed the Pan-Arctic Exploration Corp., which has federal government participation to a majority degree, but they do, in fact, carry on the active exploration; they do not farm it out as is envisaged in this bill. It was this kind of a corporation that I thought we were going to have. I had hoped that it would be a Crown corporation, but failing that, I had hoped that whatever we did get would actively participate in research and development. But, lo and behold, the bill indicates that it will, and I'm quoting from the bill: "Undertake the design, development, construction, testing, operation, manufacture and sale of all or any part of transit systems related to public transportation."

That implies something to me, Mr. Speaker. It implies that there is going to be some manufacturing done by this corporation, some testing, some selling. And, lo and behold, when the minister made his statement last night in the House, I was surprised to read that he had, in fact, gone right against the intent of that chapter of the bill. And I will quote from the minister's statement last night, in Hansard of June 11, 1973:

It is not our intention to engage in the production and manufacture of transit equipment in competition with the private sector, but rather to ensure this competition by creating a broad distribution and availability of the technology to as many competent firms as possible.

I think what has happened is that the minister and this government is hung up on the free-enterprise system. They think nothing can happen unless someone makes a profit. It appears to me therefore that this corporation is just going to be the goat for the private enterprise system which will absorb whatever knowledge and production techniques this corporation produces. The private sector will then go out and exploit that knowledge at the expense of the people who have to use public transportation in the province. So we are flying in the face of the Premier again and his remarks that he is going to devise the most economic system possible for urban transit in the Province of Ontario.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose a few questions for the minister. They have to do with statements he made to the effect that we had acquired great rights and licences in entering into this agreement with Krauss-Maffei. It was stated that for a very limited amount of money we would be gaining certain exclusive rights in the Province of Ontario, non-exclusive rights in Canada and non-exclusive rights in South America and—well, all of North America except Canada and the United States and all of South America.

But when I look at the licence agreement—and I think that the bill doesn't make any sense unless we have the other documents in front of us, and thanks to the minister we do have the licence documents. I look to paragraph (a) of section 4, which says: "To acquire, develop, adopt, use and license patents, inventions, designs and systems for all or any part of transit systems related to public transportation and rights and interests therein and thereto."

As far as I can understand the wording on page 7 of the licence agreement we did pay $1 million for certain licences. And it was implied that this was the sum total of all the royalties that we would have to pay in order to get this right for ourselves. Now that the licence agreement is before us, I see that there is a never-ending demand for royalties to the end of the 12-year term.

It appears to me that even if we do not realize the royalties from sales or sub-leasing, this corporation is bound to pay the lessor, Krauss-Maffei in this case, a minimum of $435,000 a year in royalties beginning in the third year. The first $1 million carries us to the end of the second year. And at the beginning of the third year: "In each contract year, commencing in the third contract year the royalty is payable under paragraphs (b) and (c) above".

It indicates under (b) that $2.5 million a year in royalties is required and, failing to make the necessary sales to pay those royalties, then we are bound to pay them $435,000 a year until such time as that $2.5 million is accounted for. And if we fail to meet that $2.5 million requirement then we are going to be paying interest at the rate of eight per cent.

I just can't understand why we were committed to such a deal as that. And forever after, while we don't have the $435,000 commitment, there is the continuing 10 per cent royalties for every year after that until the 10th year. So it's difficult to say what will be the final cost of these licence rights by the end of the 12-year term.

If I am reading this section properly, Mr. Speaker, I can readily see that we are paying about $3.5 million for the rights, and depending upon what sales, leases or subcontracts that we pass out it could amount to any figure, as far as I understand this. It's not as good a deal as the one proposed in the original statement.

Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of other things I would like to comment on. The corporation has the right to reject any subcontract as far as the civil engineering is concerned. I think that is an integral part of the transportation, or the transit development contract. And I don't know why the minister had that in there. I would hope that he would determine that all this civil engineering would be done by union labour. I hope that that would be one of the reasons should he ever reject a certain subcontractor. I wish the minister would see fit to answer a few of the questions that I have raised.

I understand that this bill will be going to the resource development committee and probably we can go at it a little more in detail at that time.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, is the minister intending to close off debate, or does he wish other people—

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): No, I am just answering the questions.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, that's fine.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I anticipate there will be many entering the debate.

Mr. Singer: How did we get at that?

Mr. Foulds: We certainly don't want to put this Speaker on the spot.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, if you wish to wait to the end. He wanted the questions answered.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: I would be happy to hear the answers to the questions.

Mr. Singer: This is not question and answer period.

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest-Hill): What is your pleasure, Mr. Speaker?

An hon. member: Let Mr. Speaker rule.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York-Forest Hill.

Mr. Singer: Good ruling.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Speaker, in discussing this bill, there are just a couple of points I would like to make. First of all, Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised. I asked the minister a question on Monday, June 4, which he agreed he would answer and he hasn't answered yet. Is he prepared to answer it today? Then I won't repeat the question which had to do with Friedrich Flick, who I believe was head of the Flick group—or maybe is even head of the Flick group now—and about something to do with his record.

It seems that the government is hell-bent for leather to go ahead with this—

Mr. Foulds: There's a new phrase.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Not for the Liberals anyway.

Mr. Givens —and I agree with those speakers who have preceded me and indicated — another new phrase — that this company is neither fish nor fowl, nor good red herring.

The minister is setting up a company that purports to be a government company and it's going to have this shared capital. I don't know what he does with a combination like that. The reason for setting up a company with shared capital is for the purpose, as the hon. member for Sudbury has indicated, of making profits. What happens in a case like that just before an election? Let's say the stock market is down and the shareholders, who have paid $100 for each of the special shares with the par value of $100, are going to wonder what the government is going to do about stimulating the profit in the company in order to indicate that they can make some money out of it.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): By buying votes.

Mr. Givens: It is a kind of invidious position for a company of that kind to be in prior to an election where the government is involved.

Mr. Gisborn: The Tories won't take that.

Mr. Lewis: The shareholders all live in Armourdale.

Mr. Givens: But I suppose they figured this out even though there has been this pell-mell haste to construct this sort of Frankenstein monstrosity, but I don't understand why it is needed. If the government wants to go ahead with a public transit system, go ahead with a public transit system. Why does it insist on creating this unprecedented monster? What does this accomplish for it which it can't accomplish in the ordinary way? The government can get all the experimentation. It can hire brains. It can rent expertise. It can buy it. It can lease it. It can do anything from all over the world. The whole world is its oyster.

Why does the government insist on painting itself into this corner where in effect it is going to build a wall around the province? It says, in effect, that it is a government company, and any other brains and any other invention that is ever invented cannot come into the province because it would compete with the government company.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): A good point. A very good point.

Mr. Givens: Now if the purpose of this bill was to establish a government company for the purpose of expropriating all the uranium in the Province of Ontario, for the purpose of expropriating a natural resource because it is afraid that in the future it is going to run into short supply or somebody is going to export it, or it is going to be sold across the border, and government wants to preserve this, wants to conserve it—then I can see the purpose of such a company.

But the government is dealing with something that is industrial, something which is inventive, something which depends on brains from all over the world. It could be Germany, it could be Japan, it could be Austria, it could be any country in the world that is doing scientific and technological work.

And the government doesn't know whether 15 or 20 years from now that great giant of China, with a population of 800 million, may come up with new technology that we have never heard of before. They are going to have to compete with this monstrosity that the government is setting up now. How is the government going to be able to listen to anybody from any other country in the world when it is setting up this company, this defence mechanism?

I don't know what the government is trying to preserve and conserve here. The government doesn't even know what the people in Krauss-Maffei are going to produce for it. The government hasn't even had this prototype set up at the Canadian National Exhibition, which is going to run for a couple of months on a 2½-mile system in a controlled manner. The government is not going to be able to determine how its public transit system is going to be able to work from a prototype of 2½ miles. The government won't know until it really puts it into operation.

The government may know a little more when they set it up in Heidelberg. It will know infinitely more when it starts running in Heidelberg than what it is going to get out of this Toonerville trolley thing that the government is going to set up at the Exhibition.

Mr. Haggerty: Another midway.

Mr. Givens: And in the meantime the government is setting itself up this company. What for? It is a straitjacket. The government is going to be ossified. It is going to be hardened in this bed of concrete. And I don't see the reason why it is doing it. The government should leave itself open for the flow of brains and expertise that may come from all parts of the world—now, in the near future, and in the distant future. Because it may take 10 or 15 years by the time the government gets this bill. I don't even know whether this generation of people in Downsview are going to be riding on the Toonerville trolley. And we are all for public transit on this side.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): The member is not. He voted against it.

An hon. member: The member for Scarborough Centre doesn't know what he is talking about.

Mr. Givens: We are for public transit.

Mr. Singer: And expressways.

Mr. Drea: The opposition has got to be kidding.

Mr. Givens: The only reason we haven't had more public transit here was because this government would never subsidize it, would never support it. It subsidized expressways for 50 per cent. It would never subsidize transit; it would never support it. And the government has proven to be half wrong on the Spadina Expressway decision, because it is going to build the subway down there. Never mind this appeal of the cabinet; we all know what is going to happen with that appeal.

Mr. Cassidy: The member acknowledges the government is half right.

Mr. Givens: Now why doesn't the minister have the courage to admit that he is 100 per cent wrong and finish the expressway down there?

Mr. Lewis: As a matter of fact building an expressway through here wouldn't be a bad idea, just as long as one was selective which side of the House one built it on.

Mr. Givens: As long as we keep selling a million automobiles or a million motor vehicles a year as we've done in 1972, 1973 and 1974, the day of the motor car for transportation is not over.

Mr. Drea: Yes, it is.

Mr. Givens: It is not over.

Mr. Drea: It is.

An hon. member: The member lives in a dream world.

Mr. Givens: Go tell that to General Motors, Ford and Chrysler! That's a bunch of nonsense.

Mr. Singer: Or all the employees.

Mr. Givens: The government has already admitted that it is 50 per cent wrong. Why doesn't the minister admit that it is 100 per cent wrong and get it finished? If we are to have public transit—and we have to have both—

Mr. Drea: The member has never ridden on a bus in his life.

Mr. Givens: The trouble with the hon. member in the backbenches is he's got a constipated mind.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Givens: He ought to ventilate it once in a while! He ought to ventilate it once in a while and realize there is no ultimate, final, complete total answer. The answer consists of a number of remedies and public transit is a very important facet of it.

Mr. Drea: And one of them is not building the member's silly expressway.

Mr. Lewis: We are prepared to concede the constipation but not more.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey Bruce): He's not out of order either.

Mr. Givens: In that case, I won't even prescribe a laxative for him.

Mr. Lewis: God help us.

Mr. Givens: The government's entering into this marriage relationship from which there can be no divorce, because once this is set up, it's really embedded in this bed of concrete. Once the parties have been brought together, the Lord shall not be able to sunder this relationship the government is constructing here today.

Let these great defenders of free enterprise remember this: This is a company which is completely subsidized by the German federal government. Now the government is going to subsidize it from this end and I begin to wonder sometimes, who the real socialists are in this chamber.

Does the minister know that this company is subsidized by the federal German government? He is marrying into a relationship, an international relationship, not just with the company but with a foreign government which he may live to regret.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): The Minister of Transportation and Communications.

Mr. Givens: This is unprecedented. This has never been done in Canada and this has never been done, certainly, by the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Paterson: Nor should it be done.

Mr. Drea: Nonsense. It was done at A. V. Roe for years.

Mr. Givens: Let me point out another thing, Mr. Speaker. In the book, the TDS contract—the minister knows the one I'm referring to; the one that looks almost like his beautiful jacket.

Mr. Lewis: How does the member feel about West Berlin?

Mr. Givens: It indicates on page 74, "subsumed under the rubric of adjustments for currency exchange"—I don't want to read it; I hate reading things into Hansard—that the government's relationship with Krauss-Maffei is going to be pegged; the exchange rate will be pegged at $1 to 2.85 deutsche marks. Okay, fine; because the way international currencies have been fluctuating, nobody knows if they are coming or going today with respect to exchange rates so it is a good thing it's going to be pegged.

That would satisfy me except for this; that when one turns to page 75, under the heading of "Price Escalation" there is an intricate, involved, complicated bunch of paragraphs here that describe how extras can be added to the contract, notwithstanding the fact that the government is pegging the exchange rate:

The developer shall semi-annually be entitled to adjust the fixed prices and unit prices of which estimates submitted pursuant to section 7.15 are based as follows, paragraphs (a), (aa), (b), (c), (d), (e).

I defy and I challenge the minister himself or anybody on those front benches or the backbenches or the whizzkids under the gallery—

Mr. Paterson: There is only one in the front bench.

Mr. Givens: —to give intelligent explanations of what the hell those paragraphs mean. I'll tell the members what I think it means—that notwithstanding the fact that the government is pegging this exchange rate, it has sewerpipe loopholes—which the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. White) talked about today—which will enable it to escalate the price of this contract 50 ways to Sunday. I'd like the minister to assure this Legislature that what I'm saying is untrue or incorrect or wrong.

Mr. Lewis: Or all three!

Mr. Givens: It is probably all three. How can the minister, on the one hand, on one page, in one breath, say that the exchange rate will be pegged at $1 to 2.85 deutsche marks; and on the other page talk about price escalation which allows, from what I can read here—and you need a computer to figure this out — innumerable ways of contravening the pegged exchange rate? This is what the minister is letting himself in for at a time when nobody in the world knows. The gremlins down in Austria—what do they refer to them as?—

Mr. Lewis: The gnomes of Zurich.

Mr. Givens: The gnomes of Zurich, thank you. The gnomes of Zurich don't know. We don't know.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Givens: The Treasurer today was trying to explain how we gain money on the cherries, although we lost money on the apples. He said that we didn't do so good in Germany, but because the American dollar went down, we benefited from that. So nobody knows where they are going. Yet, at a time of uncertainty like this, the minister is going to establish a company where he doesn't know whether he is on foot or on horseback and he is selling it to all the members of the Legislature. Nobody possibly knows where they are going and the minister is entering into this kind of relationship.

Mr. Haggerty: They will sink us for sure.

Mr. Givens: Do you know, Mr. Speaker, anybody who would want to enter into a marriage relationship between a man and woman under these circumstances of complete uncertainty? It is all right for Avery Brundage to do what he is doing, but he is a sportsman.

Mr. Foulds: And that is a 17th century definition of the word "sport."

Mr. Givens: I say this on future projects to do with Canadian companies in the transport field. Does the minister remember I asked him the question about Canadian content in another bill that we passed here? I forget which one it was. So much lip service is rendered to Canadian content and and he is writing in something here about Canadian content. He is going to protect Canadian content. The hewers of wood and drawers of water will be Canadians but the brains will be elsewhere.

How is the minister going to develop brains in this country? How is he going to develop Canadian expertise at the upper echelon, at the top level, when he is doing this sort of thing, when he is building a wall around the province, and when he is not going to allow the kind of cross-fertilization which is vital, which is important and which is necessary? This is the sine qua non without which the government cannot have any kind of intellectual, scientific or technological development, where it doesn't have a cross-fertilization of brains from all over the world, because it is sticking itself and the minister is concretizing himself, into this kind of relationship. For what reason? What does he gain from it? He is selling his soul for a mess of pottage. He is really thinking that for these world rights he is entering into, he is going to make a big fat buck. Is this what he is doing it for? He can also lose his shirt or that beautiful red jacket that he is wearing. What is he looking for trouble for?

I say that the minister should withdraw this. He can continue the relationship. He can have the contract for that Toonerville trolley that he is building down there. After it is built we will see whether the darn thing runs properly and then he will make up his mind as to what he wants to do. Do you know what I fear, Mr. Speaker? Do you know what I am afraid of? I don't have a dirty mind, but I have got a sneaking suspicion that the decision has already been made, notwithstanding the way that thing operates down at the midway at the Canadian National Exhibition, that the minister is going to orchestrate a great big announcement for election year in 1975, and that by the time the government announces its election date, it is probably going to have five of these projects in the ground. I can tell what the minister is doing.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): That's what he is going to do to the public again.

Mr. Givens: I have always considered the minister to be an honest man personally. I can't say as much for a lot of his colleagues over there, but I have always considered him an honest man. Now let him be honest and tell us the truth, if that's what he intends to do.

Mr. Speaker, there is much that is said in this House that's rhetorical, that's for the purpose of scoring debating points and to make the government look embarrassed and so on. Never have I been so concerned and never have I been so sincerely determined and convinced within the inner interstices of my soul and my mind that this is wrong, that this is the wrong thing to do, that the minister is buying a pig in a poke, and that he is going to cost this province a fortune. He is not going to know about it for about 10 or 15 years, but this road is fraught with terror. The thing just scares me out of the wits of my mind because we are taking a leap into the dark on the supposed basis, as the Premier announced, that we are doing a great big bold thing. I suppose it would be big and bold to throw yourself off from the top of the Toronto-Dominion Centre, too.

Mr. Haggerty: The biggest bang the member has heard of.

Mr. Givens: It would make a big noise and a big splash. It would be a great day in the political history of the province, if the Premier did that.

Mr. Lewis: The speech is a joy. I don't understand the argument.

Mr. Givens: Mr. Speaker, what will happen, and I say this in closing, is that anybody who gets an idea about public transit—and there have been a million and one ideas which have come about during the past 20 years—I would say, and the minister will agree with me, that in the past 50 years the world has made more progress technologically than it has in the past 50,000 years. We don't know what the next 50 years will bring; we don't know what the next 10 or 15 years will bring. And the government is creating a situation in which anybody who invents anything, or thinks of anything, or who dreams up anything, will not be able to come to the Province of Ontario and discuss it, or sell it, or do anything else, because the minister has created this monstrosity which will not permit him to do so.

And I say this is wrong. The government is painting itself into a corner unnecessarily. I don't see what the advantages are except perhaps, the government thinks, money. And money isn't important in this case. The important thing is that we get a public transit system for the city, for this province, which will be the best anywhere in the world. Well, the minister is not doing it by confining himself to this, by shutting out Hawker Siddeley, by shutting out the Ford Motor Co., by shutting out any other company, or any other country that may come along with an idea, and that's what he is doing with this.

Mr. Lewis: Why are they being shut out?

Mr. Givens: He is doing that because he's—look at the terms of this bill. He is completely eliminating any infiltration or any cross-fertilization that may take place. Because when a company is set up like this it adopts a defensive posture. Any company that the government has ever been a part of becomes bureaucratic just like the government.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, now that is what is wrong with this bloody bill. That it is strictly a Crown corporation without the private sector?

Mr. Givens: I knew the NDP wouldn't buy that, but I didn't think I would sell this argument to them anyway.

Mr. Lewis: Well, the hon. member should try.

Mr. Givens: But I figured free enterprise over here would understand what I am trying to talk about. It becomes defensive, it becomes bureaucratic, and it becomes reactionary. And the government shouldn't do it. Thank you.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: Now, Mr. Speaker, the only real problem with this bill is that it does the right thing and it does it the wrong way. And the reason it does it the wrong way is the fact that the government—

Mr. Lewis: The member for York-Forest Hill is an antediluvian reactionary. I don't believe it of the hon. member. He is much to the right of the Tories on everything in the last—

Mr. Cassidy: On everything that comes forward.

Mr. Foulds: Even of the member for Scarborough Centre.

Mr. Lewis: The member for York-Forest Hill is trying to pre-empt the right wing. And look at his competition; he is to the right of the member for Scarborough Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Amazing, amazing. Yes.

Mr. Lewis: It's not possible.

Mr. Drea: That is slander!

Mr. Foulds: That's right, it is.

Mr. Givens: I never thought that the leader of the NDP would become so apoplectic about what I had to say.

Mr. Cassidy: We hear the member so seldom that it's very difficult not to.

The bill we have before us, Mr. Speaker, does the right thing but it does it the wrong way. And I am surprised at the way in which the government is proceeding with this. We are very surprised at the fact that, given the history of public transportation in this province, and particularly in the city of Toronto, the government would decide, for reasons beyond our ken, that it would let the private sector share in the profits when it is, in fact, in the government's own power to regulate this new Transportation Development Corp.

The whole statement that the minister gave us last night seemed to reek with his reluctance to set up any kind of a corporation that was even remotely within the public sector. And at every conceivable point it seemed, Mr. Speaker, the minister was leaning over backwards in order to ensure that the private sector would be involved, that the corporation would run according to the principles of the private sector, that it would be run by people from the private sector, and that the government would ensure that ultimately the private sector would benefit from information, knowledge and techniques for public transportation which had been developed at public expense.

You know, if the minister's attitude had been followed in Toronto, Toronto would currently have a transportation system worthy, perhaps, of Camden, New Jersey, or worthy of Kansas City, or some other American city where transportation was left in private hands.

Back about 1921, however, the people of Toronto voted overwhelmingly to take over the independent or private transit system, which were running transportation into the ground in the city. They also voted for a very large debenture for the time in order to re-equip the system and Toronto then acquired a transit system which gained enormous public favour within three or four years and has become the envy of North American cities. For a city of its size we probably have the finest system of any place in North America. And that's been done under complete public ownership.

I'd like to ask, Mr. Speaker, what would have happened in Toronto if that company had been run with 51 per cent public ownership; if it had been run with a board of directors of whom three came from the government sector and six from the private sector.

Particularly if they happened to come from railways, or private bus firms, or other companies that had some kind of interest in the field in which they were engaged?

What would have happened, if they had taken their marketing expertise from, let's say, the Canadian Pacific Railway, whose passenger travel has fallen by an incredible degree since the war? What would have happened if they had taken their technology from the passenger train services of North America where there had been virtually no technology developed during the past 20 years?

And yet, the minister is telling us in his statement, and he tells us again—and again and again—that the government will use this company to exploit and develop the research which we, the taxpayers, are paying for down at the CNE, and possibly other things that may be developed in the future. This technology will be developed under the aegis of the Transportation Development Corp.

Private companies in the main will be given the contracts so that they can develop research expertise and then profit from knowledge they have gained at public expense. The capacity to manufacture will be put out to the private sector and ultimately, once developments are proven to be commercially feasible, the minister says the Transportation Development Corp. will even stop collecting royalties and it will simply sell its rights into the private sector.

We simply can't believe this point of view makes sense. And it seems to us that the traditions of public transit should be followed, the traditions within this province should be followed. The corporation should be wholly-owned by Ontario or, possibly, should have some room for participation by other Canadian governments. We would be willing to see that.

The arguments that the minister puts forward for not making this body a Crown corporation, it seems to us fall down as soon as one accepts the point of view that this corporation should be wholly government-owned. It's certainly clear that a Crown corporation can operate beyond the boundaries of Ontario. And there are a number of Crown corporations in this country, both provincial and federal, that do just that. So there is no particular problem about that.

There is no problem, as far as I know, in devising an arrangement whereby a Crown corporation can be owned by more than one Canadian government. There is no problem there. The only objection to a Crown corporation is that private capital cannot be invested in equity form. There's no reason why a Crown corporation cannot borrow private capital in order to help with its financing. However, the money cannot be borrowed in equity form.

We ask what on earth the government of Ontario, which intends to invest $1.25 billion in rapid transit systems, or intermediate rapid transit systems, is doing going begging to Bay St. for a few million dollars, or maybe $10 million to $20 million, from the private sector rather than providing it itself, and thereby ensuring that the private sector will get up to half of the dividends, or profits, which come from developments financed by the people of Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: 'Twas ever thus.

Mr. Cassidy: We simply don't find that acceptable, Mr. Speaker. We don't know why the minister is doing it. Why spend a billion and a quarter on this side and let the private sector get profits from the sale of all this knowledge for an investment of a few million dollars? We simply don't feel that makes sense.

The minister, during the course of his statement, kept insisting that this company will work according to commercial standards. Perhaps I can find the quotation here:

"It is the intention of the government to bring as much commercial influence into the operation of this corporation as possible."

Mr. Speaker, the minister should certainly know that it is the commercial private enterprise sector which has had such a role to play in the virtual extinction of public transportation in so many cities on this continent over the last half century. It was the rapaciousness of the private sector which got public transit into the kind of situations that it got into in many American cities as early as the 1920s when the automobile began to come to the fore. It was the inflated-rate bases which were created, the watered-down stocks, and all the other abuses that occurred in the 1890s and the 1900s which got public transit into a mess.

Maybe the private sector is a bit more responsible now than it was then. Maybe there is more regulation now than there was then. But there is this tradition that the private sector likes to rip off, or to rape, public transit. It seems to us that, since there is no need for the minister to do it, it is only on ideological grounds that the government has decided to let the private sector into this corporation.

Frankly, we part company from the government when it comes to those ideological grounds. We say that this should be a public corporation.

Let the minister tell us why is it that a corporation which is going to develop and sponsor research and do other things in order to promote and license transit developments which are paid for by the people of Ontario, should have to have six people from the private sector on its board of directors and three people—only three people, representing government. Why is it, in addition, he at least opens the door and threatens us with people like the member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root) and the member for Scarborough Centre and the member for Simcoe East (Mr. G. E. Smith), for example, as the government members on this commission? With great respect to the members involved, I suggest that they know very little about it and that there is very little that they can contribute on behalf of the government.

Mr. Foulds: They will finally give their just rewards to the hon. member for Prescott and Russell (Mr. Belanger).

Mr. Cassidy: That's right. The member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman) knows even less about them and he is the vice-president or president of a railway company.

Mr. Drea: Which is doing rather well, too.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): He decreased the freight rates to northeastern Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: Not to northwestern Ontario where he comes from.

Mr. Cassidy: The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the minute the—

Mr. Foulds: The Provincial Secretary of Resources Development admitted that the majority of communities in northern Ontario would not benefit by that grandiose statement.

Mr. Cassidy: That is right, yes. I stayed quiet because I knew that the member for Port Arthur had a significant contribution to make.

Mr. Foulds: You ain't heard nothing yet.

Mr. Cassidy: About two months ago, Mr. Speaker, we had the other side of the coin, we had the minister get up to recite a litany, a paean of praise, for the expertise of the people in his ministry who had been evaluating competitive bids from Krauss-Maffei and from Hawker Siddeley. He didn't mention exactly how they'd come to choose Ford when Ford copped out on the deal when they found that its trains wouldn't run very fast.

But anyway, the minister was tremendously proud of the people who worked for him. He said there wasn't a finer team of transit experts anywhere on the continent, and the way he said it you would have thought there was probably not a finer team of transit experts anywhere in the world. There was this tremendous competence that existed there in the ministry, people who knew not only about what a train should look like but they knew about all the systems, command control, they had done this test and that test and the other test. When the minister hired consultants to come in and tell him that his own people were all right, well, to hear the minister tell it, the consultants were humbled, they really were humbled, they had never seen such a galaxy of talent in their lives and they told the minister so in no uncertain terms.

Well, what has happened in the last two months? What has shaken the minister's confidence in public servants that he doesn't feel they are qualified to serve on the board of directors of the minister's corporation? Has he suddenly decided that there are technical flaws in the advice they have been giving him? Have some of the things we have been saying from this side about the basic concepts of the system—not the technology but the concepts of the system—begun to strike home? Has it begun to strike the minister that maybe some mistakes were made and that he was a bit bedazzled by the people in his ministry? I am not sure.

We have been suggesting some different things from this side of the House, but it is certainly inconsistent for the minister, of all people, to tell us now that he doesn't trust people from the government enough; that he will have more than three appointees out of nine.

He tells us, in addition, that he doesn't see any significant research effort being carried out by this company but that he will have it all performed again within the private sector. The litany continues, only it is a new litany from the tune he was telling us before.

We would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, given the basic position of the minister that it is important if there is knowledge to be gained from the transportation demonstration project at the CNE and from other projects that the government may enter into, that it be exploited; that it be used for the benefit of Ontario municipalities; for the rest of Canada, and, who knows, tomorrow the world. That is important and it is also important that a Canadian company come in on this early—now that the ministry can detect a domestic market of some significance—before the Yanks, or the Germans, or the French, or the Japanese, or somebody else take over.

We accept that argument. We say that in setting up a company to exploit this knowledge he is doing the right thing. However, to decentralize or to dissipate this knowledge among companies, to state in the purpose that the knowledge should go to Canadian businesses without defining what they are, and in the knowledge that, in fact, almost all the companies involved in the transportation business are in fact subsidiaries of multi-national corporations just doesn't make sense.

It seems to us that if the ministry has really assembled talent, if it really has good people on its own staff, then it already has the nucleus for a very significant research group of Canadians to work within this new company as employees of the new company. That is another way the knowledge which may be gained from these new projects will be kept for the people of Ontario, and will be devoted to providing public transportation at the lowest possible cost rather than to the creation of profits for the private sector—the principle into which the ministry has been set.

It seems to us that at the very least about half and possibly more of the research effort of the company should, in fact, be carried out by its own people rather than farming it out and allowing the benefits to be dissipated in the private sector.

Mr. Speaker, that pretty well winds up the main points I wanted to make. There is one area that the minister has been very confusing about and I think it reflects the kind of ambivalence that I talked about in his attitude. He says that he wants to ensure that municipalities are not subject to a—

Hon. Mr. Carton: Monopoly.—

Mr. Cassidy: Monopoly—that's right, thank you—when we will have a competitive supply situation and a monopoly crisis for research and development work, financed by other levels of government.

Now what he means, I think, is that he doesn't want the municipalities to have to buy these licensing rights directly from Krauss-Maffei, or from Bendix, or from Hawker Siddeley, or some other company that happens to be selling it. Okay, prevent that, but we really don't see why that means that that corporation has to be set up in this particular way. Nor, frankly, do I see the possibility of the very many components that go into a transit system creating a competitive supply situation. I suspect that the ministry is talking pie in the sky at this point and initially there may only be one or two suppliers with the capacity to use the patents which the new company will presumably get. But that is a very unfair kind of thing and perhaps the minister will explain this either now or when we go into the committee and can look at this more closely.

Mr. Speaker, there is one other area of concern that I would like to bring up and, that is, like the last bill relating to the Krauss-Maffei system, this bill also really relates to it and therefore I think it is properly within order.

The government or the ministry is sponsoring the transit demonstration project down at the CNE and when it does it will be a ministry project. The minister doesn't seem to have any hangups about doing that. But I understand that the information that is gained from there will then be made available at a certain price to the new transportation development company. I don't understand how a company which the minister says is going to work on commercial principles can begin its life with its future really subjected to the decisions of the ministry or of the government as to how much it will sell those licensing rights for, and all that information that is acquired out of the TDS project.

Will the minister sell it for $1? Because if he sells it for $1 then he is simply subsidizing the private sector who will have 49 per cent of the company. Will he sell it for $10 million or $20 million or something like that? In that case, he may in fact be sabotaging any hope of the company ever to be viable, and the reason he is in that absurd situation is because of the absurd vehicle that he's chosen to make this thing work.

I think the other point to be made is this, we were told that one of the reasons that Krauss-Maffei were chosen was the fact that they guaranteed their system would work and Hawker Siddeley wouldn't. I've only had a brief glance at the contract—I haven't had a chance to look at it all—and a number of the supporting documents that ought to have been distributed at the same time were not made available by the minister when the contract and the licensing agreements were distributed.

Nevertheless, it now turns out that the two deals were not all that dissimilar. Hawker Siddeley wouldn't say whether or not its trains would work at all. Krauss-Maffei says its trains will work for six months. And if they fall apart within six months and if they fail to meet specs for a period of six months, then presumably Krauss-Maffei is subject to penalties or has to do it again or has to in some other way make good on its commitment and I wasn't able to find out—

Mr. Givens: Six months guarantee on the CNE project?

Mr. Cassidy: That's a six month guarantee on the CNE project and no more. That's correct. Now, the first Toronto Transit Commission subway train began to run 20 years ago and some of those original deep cherry red Gloucester cars are still running on that route.

The expected life of transit equipment is of the order of 40 to 50 years, I believe. The TTC is still running with the streetcars which it originally acquired in the middle 1940s.

Is the minister really trying to tell us that the Krauss-Maffei system will last for six months when the expected life of any transit system under the conditions of transit wear ought to be—what?—40 to 50 years? Mr. Foley and the experts would be able to tell me. But surely not six months? Surely there is some continuing liability? Surely the ministry hasn't bought something which could quite easily fall apart after six months and there is then no redress against Krauss-Maffei except a warning not to do it again?

Mr. Foulds: Well, they bought Bill Davis and he fell apart after six months.

Mr. Cassidy: He fell apart after six months too and—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: I think that remark was entirely in order and the analogy was very well put, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure you were only objecting to the use of the words "Bill Davis" and I'm sure the member for Port Arthur—

Mr. J. R. Rhodes (Sault Ste. Marie): Don't start thinking and spoil the whole general trend.

Mr. Cassidy: —knows him by his other names, those that are used in the House and those that are used outside of the House too, which are much more colourful, may I say?

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, we are worried about that. We are particularly worried about the way in which the ministry can rig the profits of this company, can rig its viability, probably for the benefit of the private sector, and we simply don't accept this hybrid, this push-me pull-you kind of structure which the ministry has brought up instead of having a Crown corporation which will belong to the people of Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: Well said.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate in opposing this particular bill from a slightly different aspect than the last speaker, and I'll try not to echo the words of my colleague, the member for York-Forest Hill, who spoke so effectively a few minutes ago.

Basically I'm opposed to the principle of setting up this corporation in the very first place. I assume, Mr. Speaker, that this decision to set up a corporation and develop a rapid transit system was made many years ago—I know this from the minister's comments—and some time before this particular minister took office there had been a firm decision to set up this particular type of corporation to handle the facility so designed.

Now, in my opinion the setting up of this corporation and the knowledge that was put out through the world for this competition sort of gave a fait accompli to the whole deal, because many other companies elsewhere in the world—other than the three companies—might have bid on this. But they wouldn't participate because they knew they were going to have to turn over all the documents and franchises to the Province of Ontario.

Now, as it was, Mr. Speaker, there were three takers in this initial programme. First was Krauss-Maffei company of Germany. Second was Hawker Siddeley. I think it was announced that it was of London, England, but more directly I think it's a subsidiary from Thunder Bay, Ont. But of more importance to myself and I think the members of this House is that it is a company located here in the Province of Ontario. And the third company was the Ford Motor Co.

Now I surmised, Mr. Speaker, that the Ford company could see through this proposal quite early in the game. As a very substantial company in world manufacturing, I don't think they really wanted to waste their time and capital in designing a system with all its components and the ramifications of the deal, and then turn it over to the Province of Ontario.

However, on the other hand, it's my thought that Hawker Siddeley had to play the game, because it is, I believe the largest supplier of transportation equipment in Canada.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the transportation equipment and the facilities in our various communities are subsidized by our province, so they had to be part and parcel of this proposition.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the directors of Hawker Siddeley here in Canada weren't too enthused about designing such a system and then handing it over to the province. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, they too were much happier when Krauss-Maffei did obtain the contract. This, in fact, put the Ontario government in direct competition with the company that employs some 7,000 at the Lakehead in our province. And I think this is a very serious thing.

Now, I realize that we can't go into the specifications in too great a detail at this particular time. I do appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that the minister did provide these specs to our offices and I have had the chance and the time to read most of these today.

But, really, what bothers me is that the contract has gone to a German company, a company which, I believe, is subsidized by its government, and set up in a contract that is going to adversely affect a company that is really based here in Ontario as far as production is concerned.

I feel more uneasy about this particular situation, Mr. Speaker, because I recall—I believe it was in August of 1972—our Premier was over in Germany financing a $31 million deal. I recall the press article that indicated that he visited the Krauss-Maffei test plant at that time to look over the particular proposition. And certainly my personal uneasiness is heightened because of other matters that have come before the public's attention in the past few weeks that revolve around German funds in the financing of other enterprises in our particular capital city.

Now, I, like other members of the House feel—it was expressed by the member for York-Forest Hill—that this Minister of Transportation and Communications is a 100 per cent fellow—honest. I feel that he has been duped by other forces and that he is really not in on this bigger game that is going on in this whole proposition.

Mr. Singer: Messenger boy?

Mr. Paterson: I think that this deal is going to be to the public detriment, and I just wonder how other companies that are involved in rapid transit in other countries are going to feel about bidding against the agents of the Ontario government, this new corporation. How are they going to feel about expanding their particular operations or moving into Ontario as a base of operations?

I turn to the position paper of the Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Kerr). I think we all received this in February, 1973. It's a position paper on national competition policy and on pages 16 and 17 the minister outlines the province's position in relation to this matter. He indicates certain things, such as joint ventures and so forth, and the concluding paragraph, which I will read, Mr. Speaker, sums up what is possibly occurring in this particular instance.

We believe competition policy should be concerned primarily with the prevention of abusive business practices and that the presumption in favour of a high degree of competition as an objective in itself should be shifted to permit desirable restructuring unless substantial public detriment can be shown.

I think this is what is developing with the enactment of this particular corporation.

As I have indicated before, I really feel that this corporation has placed in jeopardy the Hawker Siddeley operation at Thunder Bay and puts an Ontario government agency in competition with Ontario's—and Canada's—largest producer of transportation equipment. I don't feel that this is going to help diversify Canadian businesses as is suggested in this policy paper. I think it's going to make this particular operation—I've been in the plant, as have many members of this House, and I know that the rise and fall in production has great economic consequences in the Lakehead. I feel that the government moving into this area is going to make that operation even more shaky.

An hon. member: Right.

Mr. Singer: It's interesting to note that the member for Port Arthur took himself out of the House.

Mr. Paterson: Yes. I might mention too, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Singer: Fort William, I'm sorry.

Mr. Foulds: Thank you very much. It happens to be in the riding of Fort William.

Mr. Singer: Fort William, I'm sorry. He started to listen and he walked out.

Mr. Paterson: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre indicates that he and his party agree that the government is doing the right thing but they're doing it the wrong way. I personally don't think the government is doing the right thing and that possibly this is going to have repercussions in this particular major industry in our province.

I have, as I have stated, read the objects of the corporation and read the lease agreements. I'm really not too happy about this corporation having to pay 10 per cent to Krauss-Maffei on any sales that it is going to make elsewhere in North America. I'm not very happy, Mr. Speaker, that it has to turn over to Krauss-Maffei all technical information that it may develop in the introduction and the building of this particular system and its adaption to our Canadian weather.

I'm not too happy about the fact that we cannot disclose any information to a third party without the written consent of Krauss-Maffei of Germany, in order to complete a sale. Possibly, you are aware, Mr. Speaker, that this agreement terminates after 12 years when all such agreements cease.

Really, I just can't see how this design system is going to get off the ground—I guess that's a bit of a pun—but in fact, we're going to have—

Hon. Mr. Carton: Elevated tracks.

Mr. Paterson:—one simple operation possibly here in Metro Toronto within that 12-year period after which these agreements will no longer be in force and we will be subject to competition from Krauss-Maffei itself.

I'm sure that you are aware, too, Mr. Speaker, that these other countries are not sitting idle. Most of us know of other operations in intermediate-capacity transportation systems which are in direct competition and are moving ahead in other major cities throughout the world.

Mention has been made about members of the Legislature sitting on the board, which flies in the face of the Camp commission. Members have commented on this. I know I have asked questions before on the Canadian content of the board of directors and the amount of work that is going to go into the building of these particular vehicles and structures. Certainly this is commendable.

In summation, Mr. Speaker, I am certainly in opposition to this particular bill. I don't feel it is needed in our free enterprise society. It's going to damage, or possibly damage, other firms from coming into our province to set up production and competition. It's going to unsettle a major producer already existing in our province, threatening many thousands of jobs. I think it's a bad deal for the taxpayer, a really risky deal for the taxpayers in our province. I further read into the whole ramification of this matter something that I just don't like because of certain other instances that are occurring in the province at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, thank you, I have the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) to appreciate me.

Mr. Singer: Use the philosophic approach.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): I bet he makes it abundantly clear.

Mr. Singer: I'm sure he will.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to consider the bill and the contractual document that the ministry has entered into in connection with the Krauss-Maffei transit demonstration system. There are questions in them that I don't pretend to understand, and a number of them have been raised by the member for Essex South.

As I take it, the reason that we are considering this bill tonight is that the agreements, in fact, call for the incorporation of such a company and that when the company is incorporated, the two basic agreements, the licensing agreement and the transit demonstration system construction or development agreement, will be assigned to the company. I understand that the province will continue to guarantee the performance by this corporation of the obligations which the government assumed in connection with the contract.

With that sort of bare skeleton I would be interested to know the way in which the minister proposes to take down the shares and the consideration to be shown for the issuance of the shares. I would be quite interested to know the reasons for the particular form of share capital structure which is set out in the bill, 20 million common shares without par value and then 50,000 special non-voting shares of $100 each which, if my mathematics are right, is about $5 million of special share capital. I would like to know how that is to be taken down.

The minister's statement last night, which I didn't hear him give but which I had an opportunity to peruse, appeared to me to indicate that the minister himself isn't quite clear as to the purpose of this company and what it is going to do, apart from carrying out the transit demonstration system contract.

Apart from that, I find the framework of the agreements and the minister's statements spelling out the purposes of the company very, very confusing as to what he wants to accomplish. I would like to ask him some of the questions again that the member for Essex South asked and some of which are of concern to me.

As I take it, at the end of the 12-year period when the agreement terminates, all of the patent rights under the licences will revert to Krauss-Maffei, except for any developments that this corporation happens to have the ownership of itself as a result of the work which is done. But for practical purposes they revert to Krauss-Maffei. Krauss-Maffei will then have all of the knowledge and all of the expertise which will have come about through the investment by the government of the Province of Ontario through this corporation of the number of dollars which are required to produce this system.

It seems to me that somehow or other the government hasn't got a very substantial continuing deal, because while they have the licences for the 12-year period for the rest of Canada, and while they have a 10 per cent interest in the United States of America if Krauss-Maffei decides to go into the United States of America, they in fact are going to provide Krauss-Maffei with all of the opportunity to exploit and develop this system. Apart from a 10 per cent payment if it goes into the United States in the next 12 years, the total right is of Krauss-Maffei to exploit the great urban transit market in the United States of America if this is successful.

That sounds to me like a very substantial contribution by the government of the Province of Ontario to Krauss-Maffei's possibilities of exploiting in a mass market such as the United States, the benefits of all of the work which will be done here in the Province of Ontario. That sounds to me like a serious error of omission in the agreement.

So far as the other parts of North and South America are concerned, as I understand it, we have the right to license in those areas on a non-exclusive basis, and therefore that does not exclude Krauss-Maffei. Indeed Krauss-Maffei, as I read the agreements, can grant exclusive licences in that area and preclude us from entering those areas if they have got in there first on an exclusive basis.

Then there are other rights with respect to other countries in the world. I don't know, I think that was inserted for practical purposes, for the purpose of covering the whole of the waterfront rather than to have any particular, specific, tangible meaning at the present time with respect to the rights which this company will have in other parts of the world.

But I come back to the major concern at this particular point in my remarks, the investment by the government of the Province of Ontario in a system which at the end of 12 years will revert totally, so far as the industrial properties are concerned, to Krauss-Maffei, and Krauss-Maffei will be in a position to exploit that in the United States of America after 12 years without any payment to the government of the Province of Ontario or to this corporation, and within the 12-year period can do the same thing by paying us a nominal amount of 10 per cent. That confuses me.

As I understand it, if I may move on to another point, this agreement does not carry any form of royalty payments at all. In other words, the price to be paid by the government of the Province of Ontario is the price for the work to be done as set out in this agreement and in accordance with the formula for escalation, which I may say also rather confuses me. I assume that the minister will be able to explain the indices which are used for the purpose of escalating the prices of goods in the contract. If my assumption is correct then there would not appear to me to be any need, as my colleague, the member for Ottawa Centre said, to have devised a corporation with share capital.

Again, the minister's statement last night seemed to me to be very confusing. There is provision, for reasons which I again don't quite understand, that when this company is incorporated the government of Ontario, that is this corporation, will use its best efforts to obtain the participation of other governments in Canada as shareholders of the corporation. As far as I can see that's the only thing which would indicate that there was any need to have this particular form of share-capital corporation to carry out the purposes of the ministry.

Again the minister's statement last night was extremely unclear. He was very unclear when he moved into the other area: That in some way or other this corporation is going to provide a competitive system by which the people of Ontario will have an opportunity, under sub-licences, to obtain tenders on the best possible price for the exploitation of this transit demonstration system, if the model of it works at the Canadian National Exhibition.

That, in the minister's mind, provides for some form of competition. Because apparently he is going to grant sub-licences to anybody who wants them, anybody who says they can get into the game, and he's going to rely on the skill of the individual sub-licensees to produce the competition in the product and the price. So that when he or a municipality in the province decides to enter into the urban transit, or GO Urban system, they will be able to call for tenders and a number of these sub-licensees will tender on those contracts.

It seems to me to be a rather strange way in which to set up a marketplace in order to ensure competition. But again there is certainly no requirement that if that system or if that framework is to be used there is a need to have a share-capital corporation for that purpose.

Now the point which has concerned our caucus about the bill is that the minister set it up on this basis immediately. There is every indication that there is going to be private or public participation, private in the sense of individual participation or corporate participation in the share structure of this company. Then he's got himself in the position where he is going to have to talk in terms of the return on the investment. If he talks about the return on the investment then he is talking about the profit of this corporation. He is talking about the profit of the corporation going to shareholders and not going to the people of Ontario who are supposed to be the beneficiaries of the public transportation system.

The point which impinged on my colleagues and myself as we were considering this bill was: surely any profit or any surplus of revenues over disbursements, or however one wants to calculate whatever additional funds are available, should be used for the purpose of subsidizing and assisting GO Urban, throughout the Province of Ontario in order to keep the costs of public transportation to the citizens of the province at the lowest possible rate, so whatever fares have to be paid will be at the lowest possible level.

It seems to me, as my colleague, the member for Ottawa Centre said, that this hybrid defeats its purpose in assisting in the exploitation in Ontario of a new system of urban transit at the lowest possible cost, if you are going to pay out profits to the shareholders, be they other governments in Canada, be they private corporations or private persons who may be induced to invest in this particular company. That concern simply defies us to understand why the minister selected this particular route.

There seems to be a fashion among the Conservative Party in the Province of Ontario these days for this dreadful term "re-privatization." Apparently rather than follow the commonly accepted route of a publicly owned corporation set up for this purpose, the minister has decided—and we have very little assurance even in the bill itself—that the private profit-making interests in the country will be able to participate in this corporation and they will have the benefit of the profit arising from this extensive use of public moneys for the purpose of developing this system.

So it seems to me that all-in-all, without adequate explanation from the minister—he may very well give this in his remarks at the close of this debate—that the persons who will benefit in order of priority will be Krauss-Maffei, the shareholders of this corporation, and then, last of all, the people of the Province of Ontario whose moneys are being used in the initial investment to develop this system.

I would have assumed that at the end of this partnership between Krauss-Maffei and this corporation, on behalf of the government of the Province of Ontario, you would at that point have shared 50-50 in the rights to exploit that development and all the work that will go into it in Canada, in North America and, particularly in the United States of America. Somehow or other the agreement just doesn't ring right with me in terms of the immense benefit Krauss-Maffei is getting from it.

I have no idea how much longer the patents have to run. Perhaps the minister can tell me what that period of time is.

I have no clear idea where the 12 years were selected—unless that's the expiration date of the basic patents to be made available for this system.

I can't possibly conceive what interest the private market is going to have in providing the funds for this corporation. It's not a venture business in the sense that people will invest in a private company for profit-making purposes. I am not suggesting that there isn't some risk involved in it. But the minister knows as well as I do that he anticipates at the end of the time that there will in fact be a transit demonstration system at the Canadian National Exhibition and this system will have been worth the money invested in it.

It will be a prototype that can be used, with further development and refinements, for the development of a public rapid transit system in various parts of the Province of Ontario. Indeed, at some time, it may be a total interconnecting public transit system, the like of which we have never seen in an urban society.

I have the feeling that somehow or other —with all the skill available to the minister in his ministry—that they have missed out on some of the very tangible financial rewards in which the people of the Province of Ontario are entitled to have a share, if this whole project is successful. That is the main point I would like to make on the financial aspects of the bill.

So far as the bill itself is concerned, I find the minister's language somewhat hazy on the extent to which and the period of time during which a majority of the outstanding voting shares of the corporation will be held by Her Majesty the Queen in right of the Province of Ontario.

The bill says "shall at all times." I take that to mean that to alter that the minister would have to come back and amend the bill if it was going to go below the 51 per cent. With the majority the government has, it can do that. Therefore, we don't have any protection from the kind of statements in which the minister uses the term "initially will own a controlling interest in the corporation."

We don't know what his long-term plans are with respect to divesting himself even of the 51 per cent ownership. We don't specifically know what their plans are or whether any discussions have taken place and the reason for the insertion in the agreement with Krauss-Maffei about the investment by other governments in Canada in this Ontario corporation, I don't quite envisage how that will work and, indeed, I can't quite see how Krauss-Maffei could be terribly concerned whether or not other governments in Canada invest in this special Ontario corporation.

The other matters in the bill, I think, are relatively straightforward with respect to a corporate body. Any comments that need be made about that skeletal structure of the company can be best made in committee. The whole format of this proposed corporation, dictated by the terms of the two underlying agreements, within the framework of this so-called third agreement, leaves us with little alternative whatsoever but simply to say that any corporation designed by the Province of Ontario in which public money is going to be invested, whose purpose is to lead to a better form of public rapid transit system in the Province of Ontario, should not be a corporation with share capital devoted to the profit motive with a very unclear designation by the ministry of who the shareholders are, and who, if all goes well, will reap the profits.

As I say, the conception appears to me to be flawed because of the failure of the agreement to provide for a continuing partnership between Krauss-Maffei and the Province of Ontario in the ultimate exploitation after the termination of the agreement of the result of the joint effort. That's what it is; it is a joint venture. The province is putting up the capital; they're putting up the knowhow. At the end of the time, each should have an equal interest, particularly in the immense returns which Krauss-Maffei, if this is successful, will obtain from the exploitation of this patented system—as it will be an exclusive system, highly protected by knowhow and secret knowledge even at this time, and of the processes involved in it, even if and when the patents protecting it expire. The minister knows as well as I do that a substantial amount of the industrial property is involved in the technology and knowhow which will revert to Krauss-Maffei.

I hope the minister can answer some of those questions because I find it most intriguing.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, much has been said and, very briefly, I would just like to express my views on this deal. Having had a brief look at the licence agreement here, I would suggest that it is a seller's deal. I would say that if there were competitive firms dealing here, we wouldn't have such a cozy contract. It looks as though in this package of $1.5 billion that we, the taxpayers of Ontario, are laying everything on the line and this firm can do nothing but make a killing. I would suggest that this contract, this document termed as a contract, was written by Krauss-Maffei—I would like to call it Mafia but for the record it is Maffei.

My colleagues in both parties have made inferences as to the love affair in this whole deal, with Mr. Moog being the central figure.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): He's the advance man.

Mr. Sargent: The advance man in fact. We go back a few years when the government went over there; the Premier and his camera crews visited Germany to borrow money. Down through the piece we seem to have this love affair with Germany and how we borrow money there. I think you will find out that Mr. Moog—did he get a finder's fee on the money we borrowed? Was he involved in this transportation deal?

Mr. Reid: Plus the Hydro building.

Mr. Sargent: Why are we so in love with Germany all of a sudden? The news came a few minutes ago that Mr. Moog is now renting another building to the Ministry of Education on Yonge St. It's a new building he has there. What is the big love affair with Mr. Moog and how much is he involved in this contract?

We know of his involvement with OISE and with the Canada Square deal. How much is he involved insofar as this is concerned? We hear that he boasts of going through Europe as the agent of the Premier of the Province of Ontario. Was he involved in the finding of that loan? Was there a finder's fee there? Is he involved in the setting up of this deal?

I understand that when a group was over there some years ago getting money, they saw this plant. The minister had nothing to do with the ministry at that time. I have the greatest respect for the minister but I am concerned as a taxpayer and as a citizen of Ontario that we are getting into bed with some people who can't be the only people in the world who have knowhow in the fast-developing transport needs across the world.

I would suggest we would like to give the minister and his group unlimited funds to go across the world to look at other systems in Japan and South America. But here we are in bed, I say again, Mr. Speaker, in this love affair with Germany.

It is a matter of concern to me that we are going to be paying these people 10 per cent on all future business. This, to me, is a pretty unheard-of deal in the area of business when we pay all the development costs. We are going on the line for all the money involved. All the technological knowhow that we are going to gain, they will gain. In the end, in 12 years, they will own everything that we have been part of in inventing and developing.

An hon. member: And paid for.

Mr. Sargent: And paid for, right. Mr. Speaker, these are, briefly, my concerns in this very complex matter.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to participate? If not, the hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks that I have heard tonight. I begin to feel a little ray of confidence coming through from the opposition members relating to this particular new mode of transit because now we are having discussion about the profits and where the profits will be going. I am delighted to hear that there is some confidence in this new mode.

Mr. Paterson: Strictly from the NDP.

Hon. Mr. Carton: No, from all sides of the House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Singer: The minister can hang his hat on that.

Mr. Cassidy: What the minister means is this is the way of soaking big business. Is that right? He is going to con them and then make them lose their shirts.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, firstly I will try to reply in turn to each of the hon. members who spoke. With respect to the hon. member for Downsview, I appreciated very much the shortness of his remarks. I took this as a sign of confidence.

Mr. Cassidy: So did we.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I really was very appreciative of his remarks last night.

Mr. Givens: How the minister can pan gold out of the speeches he has heard tonight!

Mr. Roy: The minister is a real optimist.

Hon. Mr. Carton: The main point made by the hon. member for Downsview was that there was some concern on his part about the directors and who would form the board of directors of this particular corporation. The bill itself does not spell out where the directors will come from. It just says, in fact, there shall be a board of directors comprising nine members.

I indicated that it would be my hope that there would be some members from the government, perhaps from the civil service, to answer the hon. member for Ottawa Centre's remark.

Mr. Cassidy: But only three out of nine.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Yes. By the same token, Mr. Speaker, and I do not want to get into a continuing dialogue with the hon. member. Some of the members tonight would like to see all the members from the government and some of the members would like to see none of the members of this board of directors from the government. So we have a variance of opinion as to who should comprise this particular board of directors. In any event, the bill itself, which is what we are concerned with here tonight, says simply there shall be a board comprising nine members.

I believe that the hon. member for Downsview wound up with the remark: "Whom are we selling out to?" I hope that when I'm through this evening with my remarks that he will realize that, in fact, we have had an excellent contract negotiated with Krauss-Maffei. I'm sure the hon. members who spoke tonight have read the contract, but those who have not read it should take the opportunity of reading it. Quite candidly, reading it myself, I wonder how we were able to negotiate such a contract. If I had been the lawyer for the vendors, sir—

Mr. Paterson: The minister had his eyes shut.

Hon. Mr. Carton: —there are many things in that contract that I would not have allowed them to sign.

Mr. C. E. McIlveen (Oshawa): Let the minister watch out. He will break his arm patting himself on the back.

An hon. member: That's very good—an Elizabethan disaster.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the hon. member for Sudbury, his first remark was that there was a clause in the bill about the fact that it was not a Crown corporation. I would only point out to him, and point out to all the hon. members of the House, that this is a clause that was taken directly from the Canada Development Corp.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, we have had a great deal of interest from the federal government, from NDP governments in Canada, from Liberal governments in Canada and from a great cross-section of the industrial world. We are just exceedingly pleased with the interest that this whole matter has raised with government and with industry.

Mr. Lewis: Which NDP government showed an interest, does the minister recall?

Hon. Mr. Carton: One of the NDP governments in Canada, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cassidy: There are so many of them we would like know which one.

Mr. Lewis: We just want to relish the note in Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Carton: They are very discerning, Mr. Speaker; that is what I was pointing out. They are very discerning and are quite interested.

Mr. Cassidy: Let the minister wait until 1975.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I would also point out, in reply to the hon. member for Sudbury, that simply because we stated that the 51 per cent, or the majority as it says, in fact would be in the hands of the Ontario government, we did not by the same route say that 49 per cent would be in the hands of the public. That is just not going to be the case.

As a matter of fact, the member for Ottawa Centre, I think, pointed out, as did the hon. member for Riverdale, that the purpose probably was—and I can assure the hon. member for Riverdale this was the purpose—that we do want the participation of the other governments, the government of Canada and the other governments in the provinces across this great country.

Mr. Cassidy: So the minister will accept an amendment to exclude industry. Is that right?

Hon. Mr. Carton: The hon. member for Sudbury mentioned the fact that salaries or terms of office were not mentioned. I said last night, and it is in one of the sections, and I think it was one of the points raised last night by the hon. member for Downsview if I remember correctly, that the exculpatory clause relating to the members of the legislative assembly quite candidly related to the minister. I'm hopeful that I will be chosen as a member of that board of directors. I can assure the hon. member that there will be no additional remuneration.

Mr. Singer: For the minister?

Hon. Mr. Carton: For me.

Mr. Singer: How about his civil servants?

Mr. Cassidy: The minister will have to fight hard with himself whether or not to appoint himself. Is that right?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Right. With respect to the terms of office, I would refer the hon. member to section 107 of the Business Corporations Act. We are bound by the Business Corporations Act, except where it is excluded. The excluding portions relate only to amalgamations, windups, mergers and so forth. Those are the only sections of the Business Corporations Act that are excluded, so under section 107 we would have to have an annual meeting within 18 months.

Mr. Singer: Come on, who is the minister kidding?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Then we would have to have a succeeding annual meeting every 15 months.

Mr. Singer: The government owns 51 per cent of the shares. Who is going to have any doubt about the election? That's a phoney story and the minister knows better than that.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I would point out also to the hon. member that the province does not accept the debt obligations of this corporation. The province does not accept the debt obligations.

The hon. member also mentioned, Mr. Speaker, that manufacturing was included in the objects clause. The only defence I have to that, Mr. Speaker—because it is not our intention to get into manufacturing—is that this is a device of all lawyers when they are incorporating companies. They like to make certain that they have included everything possible that could be included and manufacturing, therefore, is included in the objects clause.

Mr. Singer: The minister excludes the mention of remuneration of members other than the minister.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I believe the hon. member also mentioned that we were non-exclusive licensees in Canada. We have exclusive licences in Canada, Mr. Speaker, and we are not paying $1 million for those licence rights. I do not blame the hon. member for this misinterpretation, because I had that misinterpretation on first reading. I read where in fact we were going to be paying $250,000 the first year, $250,000 the second year and then $500,000.

But if you read into the sub-licence which we will be granting Krauss-Maffei, they then pay us $500,000; so the net payment would be $500,000 for all these rights, patents, etc., that are being funnelled into this corporation.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. minister accept a question?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I will at the end of my remarks. I will be going into committee, I'd suggest, unless you would rather go right into third reading, and we will be able to get into some of these in more detail.

I also believe the hon. member for Sudbury mentioned the civil engineering aspect. The reason for that, Mr. Speaker, is that in fact the civil engineering, which will amount to about $6 million—and this is an approximate figure—will be done by tender. That's the purpose of that.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the hon. member for—

Mr. Foulds: The minister didn't answer his question about union labour.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I beg the member's pardon?

Mr. Foulds: The minister didn't; he is going to avoid that.

Hon. Mr. Carton: No, I didn't mention the question about union labour, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Singer: The minister didn't mention anything about salaries of the members other than the minister.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I pointed out that the bill says we shall have nine directors. It doesn't in fact say that there will be a member of the Legislature on the board of directors. It doesn't specifically say there will be.

Mr. Singer: No, but if there is, it can be presumed that he will get a salary.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I presume not to speak for the government, Mr. Speaker; I can only speak for the minister.

With respect to the hon. member for York-Forest Hill, I would advise him that the man whose name he mentioned to me—and I forget his first name—in the question he asked me on June 4—his surname is Flick—he is now deceased. It is his youngest son who is the head of this corporation and he is now 46 years of age and would be about 10 or 12 years old at the time of the Second World War.

Mr. Givens: Friedrich Flick was the one who was convicted—

Hon. Mr. Carton: Yes, it was a relative.

Mr. Givens: He was the father.

Hon. Mr. Carton: That's right, Mr. Speaker, but I point out that, as I say, the gentleman who now heads it was 12 years old at the time of the war and therefore was not involved in that.

Mr. Givens: I suppose the minister feels we must not visit the sins of the father unto the son.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I think one of the main points that many of the members raised to-night is that we seem to be precluding—I think the hon. member for York-Forest Hill's exact words were "cross fertilization of brains," or whatever. This is in fact not the case. This particular corporation, as I envisage it, will be a corporation that will be dealing not only with the intermediate capacity system, but will be dealing with all kinds of research relating to, for example dial-a-bus experimentation, the buses for that. It will be doing experimentation on buses, on school buses and all kinds of public transportation vehicles. It will not just be dealing with this intermediate capacity transit system.

Mr. Stokes: What about hovercraft in the north?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Good point, Mr. Speaker. This may well be one of the things that could be researched. I anticipate that this particular company will be a research vehicle for this government and, as I mentioned at the outset, it will be controlled by this government.

I am sorry to keep jumping around on some of these answers, but in answer to the member for Riverdale with respect to the transit demonstration system, this in fact will not be assigned to a new company. The transit demonstration system at the Exhibition will be done through the ministry. The only assigning that will take place with respect to this special Act corporation will be, in fact, the licences, the patents, the technological knowhow and so on.

As I envisage it, Mr. Speaker, I can envisage—in reply to the hon. member for Essex South—that Hawker Siddeley, for example, could well be a shareholder in this particular company, and by virtue of being a shareholder in this particular company could benefit by and from the research and participate in the research. While I am on that question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Singer: Are they going to come in? Does anybody really expect them to take a junior position to Krauss-Maffei?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, while we are on that point I answered a letter from the mayor of Thunder Bay relative to the Hawker Siddeley demise insofar as the transit demonstration is concerned, and in that letter—and I am sorry that I do not have the figures here presently, perhaps one of my staff may have them—I can assure the members that when I wrote to him and advised him of the contracts that have gone to Hawker Siddeley in Thunder Bay for GO trains and for subway trains, it is very substantial—perhaps the exact figure is coming here—so much so that I had a nice letter back from the mayor. It's over $62 million. Over $62 million has gone to Thunder Bay through the auspices of GO and subway cars and everything in the past five years; $62 million has gone to Hawker Siddeley.

Mr. Singer: What has that got to do with this bill?

Hon. Mr. Carton: It simply means that Hawker Siddeley is not being neglected, that it has employment by virtue of what we are doing in urban transportation.

Mr. Sargent: It is $1 billion.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, let's clear this up once and for all. I have said this on a number of occasions in this House, and all the members full well know this. The $1.35 billion relates to the six-point programme that was announced by the Premier in November and it relates to all the urban transportation across this province. Out of the $1.35 billion there will be approximately 50 per cent of it dedicated and devoted to this particular intermediate-capacity transit system. It is not $1.35 billion.

By the same token, Krauss-Maffei are not getting the X number of hundreds of millions of dollars there will be within the intermediate-capacity transit system. They will just be one of those who are entitled to tender. They have no monopoly and that is the purpose of our sub-licensing; and we will, in fact, sub-license. For the sub-licences we will in turn get moneys funnelled into this company. We won't tender the sub-licences.

Mr. Singer: He is going to defeat the tender of his own company. That sounds very practical.

Hon. Mr. Carton: It is very practical.

Mr. Singer: Who believes that?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Well, that's competition with somebody else.

Hon. Mr. Carton: The one—

Mr. Singer: No competitors.

Hon. Mr. Carton: The one point I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, was that relative to the development of brains, one just doesn't develop brains, one tries to encourage, and we are trying to encourage. We have a great expertise in Canadian engineering. Believe me, Canadian engineers are probably second to none across this world. They are not so in urban transportation, but they are becoming that way and through the vehicle of this corporation—

Mr. Cassidy: What about the people he has in the ministry?

Hon. Mr. Carton:—through the vehicle of this, with Krauss-Maffei and their participation and the transfer of the technology, this will be a great asset to Canadian engineers.

I will not remark on the election year, 1975; I am sure that will take care of itself. I know that—

Mr. Givens: He will make that announcement at the proper time.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I know that in 1974 this particular transit demonstration will be operational.

Mr. Cassidy: Don't worry, we will take care of him.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, if one had devious motivations—and I would not ascribe them to anyone in this Legislature—one would have said that the transit demonstration would have been successful and proved in the late fall of 1975, or whatever. We are saying that it will be in 1974 and the spring of 1975 that this particular transit demonstration will be in operation, very successfully.

Mr. Givens: The minister is so confident he doesn't even need an experiment.

Mr. Singer: He is going ahead with it anyway—$800 million worth.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the hon. member for Ottawa Centre, again there is some sort of conflict between his views and, obviously, those of the other party, the official opposition.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): And within his own.

Hon. Mr. Carton: They do not want the private sector to share in the profits. By the same token, the other people do want the private sector to be able to share in the profits. The government has 51 per cent of this company. I point out, Mr. Speaker, that we do, in fact, have complete control of this company.

We have complete control through the 51 per cent. We have complete control through the election of the board of directors and it will be our intention to control it completely because of the fact that there are public moneys involved. We do not intend going down to Bay St. and encouraging the Bay St. brokers to get involved in this particular corporation at all. We have had a great deal of interest from the federal government and other governments throughout Canada and we anticipate they will be involved, as I said.

Mr. Lewis: Is the minister saying that they will occupy the other 49 per cent? Or a percentage of it?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Again, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre—

Mr. Singer: British Columbia can hardly wait to invest $10 million.

Hon. Mr. Carton: —wanted more than three government members on the board of directors. The hon. member for Downsview didn't want three members from the government on the board of directors.

Mr. Singer: Who is going to win, Dave Barrett or Donald Macdonald? Who will get the chance to put in the most money?

Mr. Foulds: Which Donald Macdonald?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, by the same token, by virtue of our control over this company we will be controlling, in fact, what happens to the profits. As I envisage it, it will simply be a case that the profits will be put back into the corporation and these profits will be used in turn to keep this research corporation regenerated.

To the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, who called this a seller's deal, I can only say in reply that our business consultant—a very eminent person who sat in on our negotiations; a man with worldwide knowledge on contracts and on exports—said that we had negotiated a better contract than industry would have been able to get. It is, in fact, not a seller's deal.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that contrary to the hon. member's words, it was competitive. We did, in fact, go to Japan. We went all over the world and invited these people from all over the world. It was not just Hawker Siddeley and Krauss-Maffei; there were companies from France and from other parts of the world and they were all invited to participate.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, in reply to some of the other suggestions made by the hon. member, I would point out that this evaluation was made on the basis of engineering criteria. There was no political input whatsoever.

Mr. Roy: That's what we have been told on all contracts.

Mr. Singer: Political input?

Hon. Mr. Carton: We did look at the systems and, as I say this—

Mr. Sargent: Was Mr. Moog involved at all in this deal?

Hon. Mr. Carton: I have never met Mr. Moog and he has not been involved in any respect whatsoever with anything to do with this.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order.

Mr. G. Nixon (Dovercourt): What's the point?

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister answer a question?

Mr. Speaker: Is that the point of order? That's no point of order.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): That's no point of order.

Mr. Sargent: He said he would answer the question.

Mr. Roy: It may be no point of order, but it's a real good point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member wishes the hon. minister to answer a question, he should ask him, not rise on a point of order!

Mr. Sargent: He said yes.

Mr. Roy: He is rising.

Mr. Sargent: I asked, was Mr. Moog involved in any way with this deal?

Hon. Mr. Carton: No, Mr. Speaker, he was not involved.

Mr. Sargent: He was not involved in meeting the Krauss-Maffei group here?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Very intelligent.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the currency exchange, I believe this was mentioned by the hon. member for York-Forest Hill. The currency exchange that's set out on that particular page in the contract has nothing to do with price escalation, it only sets the value of the currency to be paid, and the price escalation determines the change in prices according to an established price index, and this index is published by the country of origin, namely, Canada or Germany.

Mr. Givens: Yes, so if they lose on the price fluctuations they can make it up on the other.

Mr. Singer: Canada or Germany, which one is it?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Whichever the source is, because there will be materials from Canada and there will be materials from Germany.

The six-month warranty that was mentioned by one of the hon. members covers the operation to very specific performance levels under very critical testing methods, and it has nothing to do with the lifespan of the equipment.

As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, Hawker Siddeley and any other company that wants to become involved will be more than welcome to become a part of this great corporation.

Mr. Roy: That is pretty hollow.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Carton: One more remark, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Riverdale. After 12 years most of the patents will have expired and they will be in the public domain, as he knows, and then we will maintain all the knowledge and industrial property. There is no point in paying after the 12-year period.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the hon. members join with us in passage of second reading of this bill.

Mr. Speaker: The question before the House is the motion for second reading of Bill 144.

The House divided on the motion for second reading of Bill 144, which was approved on the following vote:

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 47, the "nays" are 27.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion for second reading now carried.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the bill be ordered for third reading?

Mr. Singer: No, no! Committee.

Mr. Speaker: Committee of the whole House.

Agreed.

PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION AND HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Carton moves second reading of Bill 145, An Act to amend the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex South.

Mr. Paterson: This fairly comprehensive bill, Mr. Speaker, appears to be merely a housekeeping bill, and I'll just pass a few comments on it on certain areas.

Mr. Singer: It doesn't necessarily mean that it is.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: The member has got the wrong bill.

Mr. Paterson: Under section 3, Mr. Speaker, there is a principle enunciated here that possibly the minister might clarify for me in his remarks. It deals with expropriation as such, which is something that we have dealt with from time to time in this Legislature.

The explanatory notes on this section indicate that the power of the minister has been expanded to enable him to acquire such lands as he considers necessary for the purposes of the ministry.

Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the Expropriations Act is that one must prove necessity before one can expropriate, and I just wonder what—

Hon. Mr. Carton: Crown lands.

Mr. Paterson: This is strictly dealing with Crown lands, is it? That's explained quickly. Fine.

Further on in the bill, Mr. Speaker, there is another principle enunciated that has to do with the closing of certain streets for short periods of time. I recall the debate a couple of years ago that enabled the city of Toronto to go into malls in a short period of time—this is section 11, Mr. Speaker.

I am somewhat at a loss as to the determination of subsection (3), which deals with this particular section, and the principle that is being changed, in that the specified period of time cannot exceed 72 hours.

I just wonder what the reason is for that particular change in principle. I think, in the cases gone by, streets have been closed for extended periods of time—and possibly I'm misinterpreting this particular section of the Act.

Again in this section there is the principle concerning the transference of certain roads from the King's highway system back to the municipalities, namely the counties.

As I recall, approximately three years ago in the county of Essex, approximately 65 miles of provincial highways reverted back to the county system; but in giving back the particular roads, which I believe were upgraded substantially—maybe not as much as the county wished—I think the Department of Highways did not give the county the funds with which to maintain and properly service these particular roads.

I know this was a controversy at that time and has been a continuing one with the tightening of the provincial budget in relation to transportation, and possibly the minister again could comment on this particular principle.

Further on, Mr. Speaker, there is a section that deals with the policy as it relates to regional governments—I believe it is section 14—bringing the regional government grant structure in line with the county structure. I think this is the correct area to move in; I don't know where the differences were, particularly as it relates to the Niagara area, but it is something that I would like further clarification prior to the carrying of second reading.

The one last area on which I would like to make some comment deals with section 22—

Mr. Bullbrook: The establishment of ferries.

Mr. Paterson: That is right—the establishment of ferries. This is something that involves me in my particular riding. As the minister possibly is aware, the province does operate certain ferries in its highway system—I believe there is the Wolfe Island ferry, and there used to be one on St. Joseph Island—and there seems to be varying rate structures for the carrying of passengers and vehicles.

In my particular riding, Mr. Speaker, we are on an international run, and as such we have been somewhat outside the jurisdiction of the Ontario Department of Highways, in that there is a daily service, weather permitting, between the mainland and the junction of Highways 77 and 18 over to Pelee Island and on through to the Ohio port of Sandusky.

I just wonder if there is an intent of the ministry into entering into agreement with either the municipal council in that area or with the federal government to take over this particular service or alter it in any way to allow the council in that area to enter into a formal agreement with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications for operating this particular service; and if so, as to what the ramifications will be for the people in this particular area. I would appreciate a comment in this regard.

Seeing that we have a new Speaker, I had better terminate my remarks at this point.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on this bill. It is mainly a cleanup of odds and ends of the Act. There is one particular section that I have been interested in for quite a while and it is not a new section. It is section 11(4) on page 5 which indicates that the ministry has the right to transfer any section of the King's highway or any road into municipal control.

Now, in this day of regional government, the municipalities are getting loaded more and more with the expense of maintaining King's highways. Now I recall in the year 1961 when a regional form of government was introduced in my city, we had to take over two or three miles of Highway 69 south and the province did say that they would bring the road up to a four-lane standard if we would agree to take over the maintenance of this King's highway.

Lo and behold, we got sucked in when we saw the terms of the transfer. The municipality was charged with the responsibility of putting in the storm drainage and the street lighting on this particular section of road. The storm drainage was something like $350,000 and the street lighting was another $150,000, so that those two improvements cost more to the municipality than what the province spent on upgrading the surface of the road.

I think that not very many municipalities are capable of handling these long stretches of King's highways, or keeping them up or bringing them up to this standard, now that you are introducing regional forms of government all across this province.

For instance, in the city of Timmins or the city of Sudbury, there are long mileages now for the municipalities and usually it is on the outskirts of the town. Very seldom do people live on these highways. It is not as though they were city streets. They are in fact King's highways, even though the regional boundaries might be five or six or 10 miles beyond the built-up portion of the city.

I just don't see why the government has that power to bestow a highway upon a municipality when the municipality just hasn't the wherewithall to look after it.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of sections here that I am a little curious about. Section 3 deals with—well, the explanatory note says that the section:

Revises the procedural sections used by the ministry for appropriating jurisdiction and control over ungranted and other Crown lands under the legislative jurisdiction of Ontario.

What apparently is contemplated here is that where there are Crown lands in existence, which presumably come under the control of the Minister of Natural Resources, there now seems to be some necessity of bringing them under the control on occasion of this minister. I just don't follow what that necessity is.

If the lands are in the name of the Crown in the right of Ontario, and the Minister of Natural Resources speaks for the Crown in the right of the Province of Ontario, why is it necessary to have this power when those lands can then be used for whatever purposes the Crown in the right of the Province of Ontario deems proper? Apparently, somebody must have thought there was some great principle behind this, but on reading it a couple of times, Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand it.

There's another section here that puzzles me as well. That is section 10, which states where the minister considers it advantageous for the ministry and any other municipality to combine separate work projects, they can enter into an agreement. I have always been under the impression, Mr. Speaker, that that power has always existed. What does puzzle me is that where on occasion the ministry has entered into an agreement with the municipality, there seems to be some basis on which the ministry can extract itself from such an agreement. What comes to mind immediately is the agreement relating to the building of the Spadina Expressway.

If the government is now going to enshrine into legislation the right which I though had always existed, does it carry with it an obligation that the ministry having entered into such an agreement, is bound in the normal course of that agreement and cannot extricate itself? I am just wondering if this is a brand new policy. I'm not that familiar with the situation in London, but I understand there's a similar kind of agreement in London which was entered into without the advantage of this section.

That's the place where the government has this hearing officer conducting hearings to find out if it's really necessary. I don't know if there's an agreement in Brantford or not. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if it really is necessary, since the ministry obviously believes that it has the right to abrogate contracts that it has entered into, to have this kind of a section, because the ministry seems to believe that it is not bound by any contracts and there is nothing in here that says anything else.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, they proscribe the right to get out of contracts once they have entered into them, but I would like to hear the minister's comments in that regard. If we have reached a position where there is now a recognition that they are bound by an agreement, and that they would have the normal contractual obligations that anyone else would have, perhaps even the municipality that they contract with, then I say that perhaps we have made a step forward. I don't really think that's what the minister has in mind when he brings that section before us. If that isn't what he has in mind, what is the purpose of the section?

Those are my comments in connection with the bill.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, with respect to section 11, in reply to the member for Sudbury, negotiations do take place with the municipality before the transfer. This particular Act is to expand it to include the regional municipalities. There was one other remark about section 11, I believe by the hon. member for Essex South, about the 72-hour period. That relates to the maximum three-day weekend situation which commonly is included in municipal events.

We are not currently discussing the Pelee Island situation. I must confess that when I first came into the ministry I heard about Pelee Island almost every day, because it was in conjunction with the Tobermory ferry about which we were negotiating a contract at that time with the federal government. I will check into that particular situation with Pelee. As the members know, we were successful in culminating and negotiating a situation with the federal government relating to Tobermory.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Speaker, might I ask the minister if he is negotiating in any other areas at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Yes, we are negotiating in other areas—namely Wolfe Island, Howe Island, and other ferry-boat systems.

Section 14, which was mentioned by the hon. member for Essex South, is a rather difficult section to explain, but I will attempt to. Basically, the counties presently get 80 per cent for bridges, 50 per cent for their roads, and they also have what we call development road entitlement.

Now, there are two votes; one is the subsidy vote and one is the development road vote—so they come from two sources. Before a county can have access to the development road fund it must, out of its subsidy funds, do the property purchase and some pre-engineering. Presently they do not have enough money in the subsidy vote to do these things and therefore they can't get their hands on the money that is awaiting them in the ministry in the development road vote. The change was at the request of—I think I am safe in saying—the majority of the counties.

I am assured that when this single flow is instituted that if there are three or four counties that are adversely affected it will only be minimally, but by far the majority of the counties will greet this with great approval.

In other words, there will just now be the single flow and they will be able to do what they wish without having that money sitting there that they cannot get their hands on by virtue of the fact they don't have enough money in the subsidy vote.

I probably have confused all the hon. members, but I can only reiterate that it is for the benefit of the counties; that we had many exhortations made by the counties to bring this in. I think it is a significant advance as far as the subsidies are concerned.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Would the minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Carton: On this particular—

Mr. Deans: On section 21. Is it the intention of the Liberals to take it to committee?

Mr. Paterson: No.

Mr. Deans: No. Well, it wasn't our intention either.

May I ask whether the minister might be able to tell us why at this point, recognizing the emphasis the government is placing on rapid transit, he didn't reconsider the 50 per cent subsidy toward expenditure of operating costs.

For the majority of the municipalities, I would think that in order to encourage them to become involved in rapid transit over and against the development of highways, that we might have considered at least in the initial stages a larger grant, perhaps up to 75 per cent on operating costs in order that they can get the thing off the ground.

In the initial stages of a rapid transit programme it is obviously going to be very difficult to sell it to the public. They are going to take time to become accustomed to using rapid transit in many municipalities that might want to take advantage of it; and the problem is going to be in finding the funding, whether by way of fare box or subsidy from the municipality, to cover the additional 50 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I am not certain, Mr. Speaker, that I got the hon. member's question. It relates to the operating costs which are now 50 per cent and he is wondering why we didn't increase our contribution toward the operating deficit—which is now 50 per cent—why we didn't increase it to 75 per cent?

Mr. Deans: Right! Recognizing that the government is trying to encourage more rapid transit and that in the early going it is going to be difficult to sell it, a board wouldn't likely have a chance.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I appreciate the hon. member's concern on that point, Mr. Speaker. However, bear in mind we have certain dollars that we can allot. I may be wrong on my figures, but if I recall correctly the 50 per cent subsidy is based on a formula which is $1 per person up to $10,000 and $3 per person over $10,000 and five cents per revenue passenger. For Metropolitan Toronto it would come to approximately $14 million, so the member can see what we would be into if we increased it from 50 per cent to 75 per cent.

Mr. Deans: Well, what I am really thinking about is this: that there are a number of municipalities that do not as yet have any rapid transit and that the development of and the sale of the whole concept of rapid transit to the public will be a longer process. In Metropolitan Toronto, at this stage at least, there is an awareness of rapid transit; in some municipalities there is no awareness yet, and the cost of operating will be considerably higher because there will be fewer passengers in the early stages of the development.

For those municipalities it would be necessary, I think, to provide a large subsidy at the beginning in order that they can get the thing off the ground; otherwise the government is going to have tremendous public resentment over the amount that must be borne by the municipality by way of deficit.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member, is he referring to rapid transit or urban transit? What cities in Ontario, for example, would be utilizing rapid transit?

Mr. Deans: I suppose I'm talking about both rapid and urban transit because I visualize an extension, for example, of the GO Transit to and beyond the Hamilton area going west, and considerably farther east and north of here. I recognize that in order to make that work there must be urban transit going hand in hand with it within those municipalities.

Selling the concept of leaving one's car at home and travelling by urban transit, rapid or otherwise, to the inter-city transit will be a pretty tough job. The selling of that is going to be a tough job. In the initial years of development the costs that will have to be borne by the municipality will be higher in terms of the subsidy that will be necessary to keep it operating. I think that in the early stages, while the government is still trying to sell the idea, the subsidy should be larger for those municipalities which have not yet been involved in either massive urban or rapid transit.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, I can only reply that certainly the hon. member has a point. I must say that from the ministry's point of view, insofar as available funds are concerned, and insofar as many of the municipalities are concerned, it is, in fact, the capital costs—

Mr. Deans: They are very high.

Hon. Mr. Carton:—which are the important factor. The 75 per cent, I believe—and I hate to say this—is probably the most generous contribution on the continent insofar as aid is concerned.

Mr. Singer: And in the whole world—east, west, Asia, Africa and India.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I hesitated to add that. Again, Mr. Speaker, all these matters can be studied but presently we had not given any thought to increasing the operating cost subsidy.

Mr. Singer: Did the minister answer my two questions?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Sure he did. Wasn't the member listening?

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the bill be ordered for third reading?

Agreed.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF NIAGARA ACT

Mr. Meen, on behalf of Hon. Mr. White, moves second reading of Bill 131, An Act to amend the Regional Municipality of Niagara Act.

Mr. Lewis: What? Hold on.

Mr. Deans: Hold on.

Mr. Lewis: Just a second.

An hon. member: Carried.

Mr. Lewis: Hold it for a moment, Mr. Speaker. Please, sir, what's wrong with the parliamentary assistant anyway? Doesn't he have anything to say about these bills? If one introduces a bill on second reading, one gets up and speaks to it. Let him have some confidence in his legislation, and talk about it a bit.

Mr. A. K. Meen (York East): What the hon. member for Scarborough West is telling me, I suspect, is that he hasn't had a chance to look at the bill and he would like me to tell him what it's all about.

Mr. Lewis: The member is exactly right, so he can talk for a while.

Mr. Meen: Mr. Speaker, I would open the debate on the subject by observing that this bill contains a number of housekeeping items related particularly to the new conflict-of-interest legislation passed last year.

In a number of other instances, it embodies a couple of new principles. All of the items in this bill have been requested by the region of Niagara. We think they're good. One is the exclusive bus lane, for example, which has been pioneered here in Metropolitan Toronto. The Niagara region wished to try that out as well.

They have suggested to us—and you'll see this, Mr. Speaker, in section 2 of the bill—that we could streamline section 54 of the regional Niagara legislation which deals with sewer agreements and the way in which the charges may be made back to the area municipalities.

The present procedure requires that all such agreements must first be approved by the Municipal Board before they become effective. It would appear practical, with municipalities agreeing with the region, that this could be done without the necessity of appearance before the Municipal Board.

Mr. Singer: How is the Treasurer going to control the size of the municipality without going to the board?

Mr. Meen: So we are changing the converse situation here and establishing a right of appeal to the board if any municipality feels itself aggrieved.

Mr. Singer: This is destroying the Treasurer's whole scheme.

Mr. Lewis: For a man with nothing to say, the parliamentary assistant did admirably.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion for second reading of Bill 131 carry? The hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, I have a couple of words to say about this, Mr. Speaker. The only word I would say about the bill, I think, is that I do not see why it is not possible at this time to bring in general enabling legislation for the provision of bus lanes rather than continuing to let this Legislature act as an extension of various municipal councils to which the province is unwilling to give this kind of authority. It seems to me that the least that could be done is that there could be approval from the ministry, either from the Ministry of Treasury and Economics or more properly, probably, the Treasurer.

Mr. Speaker, I was just looking at the Camp committee report while I was coming in here, because it seems to me that the way in which this kind of legislation is put through at the very last minute is absolutely silly. The Camp commission report's thrust was that legislation deserves to be treated with respect and legislation is not being treated with respect by this Legislature.

I think that the parliamentary assistant is accountable to the House on behalf of his minister for the fact that amendments like these were not brought forward during the early months of this sitting from March 22 on, when there would have been time to consider them in a dignified and respectable kind of manner.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: I think it makes a travesty of this place for this number of bills to be brought forward at this time. I think it's ridiculous for us to sit at 11:45 or 11:50 to be told that the heat is up and the heat will continue to be turned up and up and up. I think it is ridiculous for the opposition party—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not speaking to this bill.

Mr. Sargent: Who does more talking than the member for Ottawa Centre?

Mr. Cassidy: I think it is absolutely—

Mr. Speaker: He will confine his remarks to the principle of this bill.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the principle of this bill is that this government does not know how to run the House.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Cassidy: The principle of this bill is that this government does not know how to bring in legislation.

Mr. Sargent: He talks more than anybody else in the House.

Mr. Speaker: This is not on the principle of this bill.

Mr. E. M. Havrot (Timiskaming): Muzzle him.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has remarks to make about the principle of this bill, he may do so.

Mr. Cassidy: The principle of the bill is that the government is quite incompetent to carry out its responsibilities toward municipalities.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is quite out of order. Does any other hon. member wish to enter the debate?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. I really should digress—

An hon. member: Who has the floor, Mr. Speaker?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: —on one of the principles of the bill, which is the reduction of the retirement age of members of the police force to 60 from the age of 65. However, I regret that neither myself nor the research department of the NDP caucus have had sufficient time to look at the bill in order to assess whether or not that is a desirable principle to be adopted at this time.

It seems to me that that may, in fact, be very important. I don't actually know because I haven't looked at it. I am sure that there is not a single member of the government party in the Legislature, apart from the parliamentary assistant, who has read the legislation, who knows either. I don't think that there is a single member of the government party, apart from the parliamentary assistant, if he has read it, who would be in a position to get up and comment.

I would suggest that, if members are here from a riding which is one of the ridings within the regional municipality of Niagara and wish to get up and comment on that, they should. It seems to me ridiculous that on a bill—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is quite out of order again.

Mr. Cassidy: No, I'm talking about the principle—

Mr. Speaker: He is not speaking to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Cassidy: —about whether the age for retirement—

Mr. Speaker: The member is not speaking to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Cassidy: —of police should be reduced from 60 or not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sargent: He is not talking about the bill.

Mr. Cassidy: And I'm suggesting that there is nobody, even from the region concerned, who is able to talk about it for the government.

Mr. Speaker: That is not the principle of this bill.

Mr. Cassidy: It certainly is, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I beg to differ. It's not.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, I think I made my point.

Mr. McIlveen: Yes, to whom?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to bring to the attention of the minister section 6 of the bill, that is the section that permits the police forces in regional municipalities, or in this regional municipality, to retire at the age of 60 rather than 65 as at present.

I was just wondering if such legislation is being introduced now in the Regional Municipality of Niagara Amendment Act, should this not then be general legislation, so that police forces in other municipalities would have that same privilege to allow members of their police forces to retire at an earlier age than at present if they so desire.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to participate?

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): They be should retired.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Foulds: Well, speaking to section 6 and the principle thereof, I hope that the parliamentary assistant would assure us that those policemen who are now going to be forcibly retired at age 60 will not suffer a reduction in pension if they take retirement then.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, my only concern is that this clause says they must retire at age 60. I think that the word "must" is offensive, because there are many cases across the province where they have good policemen who are not old men at 60.

I would like to know if that is a request of the police association, because if that is the reason for it, then maybe there are grounds for it. But it would seem to me that in municipal budgeting, to set up a pension starting at 60 instead of 65 would create a heavy cost across the province. I would like the minister to consider that. This is a very expensive word if you are going to have to retire all your policemen at 60.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Yes, thank you. First of all I seem to recall that it is, in fact, common practice throughout almost all municipalities, to retire policemen at age 60.

I want to ask the parliamentary assistant whether or not this applies to all police, or whether it is still the practice to permit those in the category of deputy chief and above to remain on the force beyond the age of 60?

It is my recollection from previous experience that in fact persons above the rank of ordinary police, in the chief and deputy chief rank, were entitled to work to age 65; and that the councils could, if they so wished, pass bylaws permitting other persons in the employ of the police forces to work beyond the age of 60. I want to know quite clearly what this section means in that regard.

I also want to know whether it is likely that section 7, dealing with the provision of emergency services, includes the provision of fire services; whether under section 7 it becomes possible for municipalities to co-ordinate all prior services and to amalgamate them into one, or whether that matter still can be dealt with at the local level.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to participate?

The hon. member for St. George.

Mrs. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am wondering in section 6, subsection 4, referring to civilian employees who "shall be retired at 65"; could I be advised, not being familiar with the original provisions in Niagara Falls, does that municipality have the same provisions as most other municipalities whereby female employees are retired at 60; and does this extend the time for any female employees to the age of 65?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, a couple of words on this early retirement of policemen. I can't understand what is going to happen to the policeman who operates under the Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System. In order to retire at age 60 the municipality has to contribute 6.5 per cent to the annuity, and the policeman himself has to contribute 6.5 per cent. Now these people have not been contributing to the OMERS plan, and I do not see how the annuity could be paid. Are they going to suffer a loss because of lack of contribution?

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): That's a good point.

Mr. Germa: For this to mature, there is an extra one per cent added onto the payment required by those people, fire and police, who normally retire at age 60. They pay a higher percentage and the municipality pays on their behalf. I just wonder how the minister is going to bring this together so that either the municipality is not loaded with the extra cost, or the employees themselves, the retired policemen or firemen, are not going to be deprived of a full pension.

I would also like to raise the question of firemen. Usually these two categories are listed in the same group, and if we seem to feel that policemen should retire at 60, I think the fire department also should qualify for the same benefits, because the job does rely on a certain degree of agility in the man. I think this is the reason police have been allowed to retire at age 60, provided the municipality went along with it. I just wonder what's happening to the fire departments in this particular instance.

Mr. Speaker: Any other members wish to participate in the debate? If not, the hon. member for York East.

Mr. Meen: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of questions and points that have been raised by the hon. members.

Talking about bus lanes, to begin with, and whether that should be in general legislation, I don't think the government's prepared to extend this authority to every municipality in Ontario. Until the government does feel that way about it, I think we do wish to reserve the right to extend it to those municipalities that have developed a sufficiently sophisticated system that we'd be prepared to live with the consequences.

Mr. Cassidy: That's the government's attitude to municipal autonomy, is that right?

Mr. Meen: As to the time of introduction of the bill, it seems to me the hon. member for Ottawa Centre always seems to find some way to criticize without being too constructive, and in this case it's another instance of the same sort of thing.

Mr. Deans: Oh, don't be nasty!

Mr. Cassidy: The member should speak for himself and for his House leader!

Mr. Meen: The request came from Niagara region in April. It was, of course, incumbent upon us to discuss these various points with the police commission of Niagara, and with all of the municipalities involved, and to determine the degree of consensus which existed. The bill was introduced a week ago Monday. It's been printed since Tuesday of that week, and that's plenty of time for the hon. member, if he was really interested, to have had a chance to look at the bill.

Mr. Lewis: As a matter of fact, it goes beyond the House leader to the cabinet.

Mr. Meen: He obviously hasn't taken a look at section 112.

Mr. Drea: Sock it to 'em!

Mr. Meen: If he looked at section 112—

Mr. Singer: That's no excuse, but it is too late to argue that with the members.

Mr. Cassidy: That's nonsense. We had planning and development bills for the last 25 years, and it is absolute nonsense.

Mr. Meen: This question, this point, may answer the question raised by a number of members opposite—the question on police. What we're doing here is extending the time where presently all employees of the police forces are required to retire at age 60.

I have no specific answer for the hon. member for St. George as to female employees, but if they are employees of the police force—civilian employees of the police force—then their normal retirement age would be 65. What had happened under this section was that they were dragged in with subsection (b) of subsection (3) of section 112, which reads: "Every person who becomes a member of the Niagara Regional Police Force under subsection (2) shall have a retirement age of 60 years." That's the way the Act read in 1968-1969 when it was passed.

It's apparent that civilian members of the police forces who do not have the same privileges or the same retirement scheme as was alluded to—and certainly the hon. member for Wentworth fully understood this—have to be treated differently. This request, like the others, came from them, and we believe that it's correct.

I also think it was the hon. member for Wentworth who asked about an emergency. I would say to him that that is any emergency. What we're trying to do is to give the head of council authority on his own to arrange with the emergency co-ordinator at the region, to take on and organize the combating of an emergency condition, which would otherwise not be the case. Otherwise, it would be required under the Act that there be a resolution of council, and there might very well not be adequate time to get council together for an emergency meeting.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that covers the questions raised by the hon. members opposite, and I urge the support of the bill.

Mr. Sargent: What about the pension?

Mr. Cassidy: Why doesn't the member tell the cabinet to run the business a bit better?

Mr. Sargent: What about OMERS, the pension plan?

Mr. Meen: We're not touching OMERS legislation in this case. This does not affect OMERS.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the bill be ordered for third reading?

Agreed.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: If the House leader finds a minister he might do another bill or two.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I must say, Mr. Speaker, the co-operation has been very good, and before I adjourn the House for the night I would appreciate very much if the members would take down the following numbers, because I had in fact called the bill that we have just passed last evening. Tomorrow we will start with item No. 5 and then proceed to the following numbers: 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 24, 25, 26, 27. On Thursday we will deal with 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12.

Mr. Lewis: May I, just before we close up, lest we not get through all the bills which the House leader predicted for tomorrow—should we bog down for a minute or two on the Escarpment Act for example—will they spill over to Thursday or is he isolating Thursday for order numbers 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, that is correct.

Mr. Lewis: He is specifically assigning those to Thursday?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Lewis: And we are not sitting tomorrow night, are we; if I understand the House leader?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: No, I think that we deserve a night off and we will not sit tomorrow night.

Mr. Lewis: Well, his generosity knows no bounds!

Mr. Singer: He is all heart.

Mr. Deans: How many more bills are still to come?

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 12 o'clock, midnight.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 13, 1973

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our guests in the east gallery today are students from the Eitz Chaim School of Downsview.

Statements by the ministry.

Oral questions.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

ONTARIO EDUCATIONAL COMMUNICATIONS AUTHORITY

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of a number of ministers, for the time being I would like to put a question to the Treasurer, who has, I suppose, the basic responsibility for the financing of provincial enterprises, and it has to do with our educational television organization, OECA.

Since the Treasurer is aware of the resignations from that independent body and the charges of incompetence in its administration—but perhaps most serious from his point of view, the statement by the representatives of the Provincial Auditor's department that it has the worst financial record of any agency ever investigated and that in fact, purchases are taking place without an adequate tendering procedure—will he make a recommendation to the Premier (Mr. Davis) and the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Mr. McNie) that OECA be placed under the trusteeship of the Ministry of Colleges and Universities until such time as a special group within the Provincial Auditor's department has an opportunity to investigate the inadequate control of the $13 million which we have voted for the payment of the services of the educational television function?

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I think it would be improper and unwise for me to make any such recommendation. I think this is a matter that should be contemplated, perhaps, by the minister responsible.

In fairness to the OECA, I think one should keep the difficulties in perspective and recall to one's mind the fact that it has probably won more awards all over the world than any other such educational television facility.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Not for bookkeeping!

Hon. Mr. White: It was the first to recognize its administrative weaknesses, and indeed hired a management consultant firm a year or 15 months ago, the recommendations from which are being acted upon. These administrative weaknesses were exaggerated by the move to new quarters. Some of the employees are highly temperamental and artistic individuals who don't have to be right—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): They would make good cabinet ministers.

Hon. Mr. White: —in the reasons they advance when they leave, dissatisfied for one reason or another.

I think it would be a great mistake if these temporary difficulties obscured the noteworthy accomplishments of OECA and the special difficulties it faces in that particular artistic milieu.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Is the minister aware that, when it comes to these international awards which have been brought to our attention by the ministry on every occasion when this matter has been raised, OECA is supported more richly by this jurisdiction than public educational television is in any other jurisdiction in North America? In fact, it has no real competition because of the fantastic number of dollars—this year $14 million—that it has to spend in the preparation of these programmes?

Is he further aware, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to put this question to the Treasurer, that we simply cannot continue to make excuses because of the management report, since the management report recommended separating the chairmanship of OECA from the chief administrative officer? Yet the government, or the OECA itself, has continued with the services of the same man, even though the recommendations from the management group have indicated clearly that the offices be separated and, in fact, the functioning of the actual production section itself should be removed from Mr. Ide's care.

Hon. Mr. White: I was not aware of the fact that we are spending more on ETV than other jurisdictions. If my hon. friend says so, then I accept that assertion.

I, as Minister of University Affairs, thought that OECA should report to that ministry rather than to the Ministry of Education, the reason being that this particular educational instrument is being used more and more in the post-secondary area, and even more particularly among older groups of citizens who are not enrolled in university. That recommendation was adopted by the government not long before I ceased to hold that portfolio.

At that time I had occasion to travel with Mr. Ide and confer with him on occasions. I gained the very highest regard for his integrity and competence. At about that time, OECA made a multi-million dollar deal with RCA at which time the president of RCA said to the signing officials—I was not one of them—"Can you tell me why it is that you Canadians in Ontario have so much more initiative and imaginative productive capacity in this matter of educational television?"

Mr. Lewis: Because they are artistic and temperamental.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): But they can't read.

Mr. Lewis: The minister's little slurs on creativity notwithstanding.

Hon. Mr. White: Those are not slurs.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, they are.

Hon. Mr. White: Those are not slurs.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. White: I myself checked for those characteristics.

Mr. Lewis: They are slurs.

Hon. Mr. White: Oh, the member is so harsh these days.

Mr. Lewis: They are artistic and temperamental; that's all.

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, indeed they are.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Lewis: So is the minister.

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, and so am I. Let the member shut up.

Mr. Lewis: And so is Ran Ide.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. White: I'm temperamental. Let the member pipe down.

Mr. Lewis: The minister will always be the brave bureaucrat.

Hon. Mr. White: I was in England with Ran Ide and we did visit all of the senior officials of the open university and all of the senior people in the BBC who are responsible for broadcasting the open university programme. Once again, I came to the realization that OECA has an international reputation, in part because of the very artistic and somewhat temperamental people that find their way into these artistic and creative fields. That's not a slur. The member for Scarborough West is too quick off the mark these days.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, yes. It's the way the minister used it.

Hon. Mr. White: Oh, let the member pipe down!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. White: I've got a lot more friends in the industry than the member for Scarborough West has, let him not worry.

Mr. Lewis: That's well. As a matter of fact, they should do something about it.

An hon. member: Why don't the members compare a list of friends?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: Would the Treasurer not agree that among certain of his colleagues in the ministry, probably including himself, there has been careful consideration given as to what can be done under the disastrous circumstances that have descended upon OECA; and would he not agree that it is a very difficult problem to put before a royal commissioner? What does he know? It is a very difficult problem to put before any particular committee of the Legislature, other than the estimates committee which will deal only with the dollars and cents.

Would he not agree that the only rational approach until this sorts itself out, particularly with the report of the Provincial Auditor, is to place the whole organization under the trusteeship of the very minister that the Treasurer said should have the responsibility in the broad sense, that is, the Minister of Colleges and Universities? This is surely the most rational alternative in a situation which is compounding in its difficulty on an hour-to-hour basis.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I am not intimately familiar with these details and it is not my responsibility. This question must be put to the Minister of Colleges and Universities.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, if we agree on certain basics, doesn't the minister understand that OECA is now tottering on the brink of dissolution, both in terms of the resignations from within and the criticism from without, from members of the Conservative Party as well as members of the opposition, about the irresponsible accounting practices; and that before the organization, whose concept is valid, disintegrates before our very eyes, the government has to step in and rescue it? Is this not one mechanism?

Hon. Mr. White: These questions must be answered by the responsible minister.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is abandoning OECA.

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: I think not. I think the hon. minister has responded. This should be answered by the proper minister.

Mr. Bullbrook: May I ask a question, then?

Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that he refuses to answer any further questions, I don't think any further questions will be proper.

Mr. Bullbrook: He didn't refuse, I say most respectfully to you. He suggested that question should be directed to the appropriate minister.

Mr. Speaker: He said these questions.

Mr. Bullbrook: I wanted to ask a question that he has knowledge of, if I may.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister said these questions, referring to these general topics.

Mr. Bullbrook: May I ask a supplementary, sir?

Mr. Speaker: No, sir. The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Bullbrook: I protest!

PORT HOPE EHB HEARINGS

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I have a question of the Provincial Secretary of Resources Development. Is the government going to enter an opinion in the hearings that will begin in Port Hope tomorrow on the application by the city of Toronto, and I believe the CPR for approval to dump 400,000 tons of garbage per year for the next 25 years into the township in the Port Hope area?

Is the ministry prepared to give some official opinion at those hearings, which admittedly are being conducted by the Environmental Hearing Board, an emanation of the Ministry of the Environment, as to the likelihood of a new policy having to do with recycling, which will make redundant this fantastic policy of storing the garbage of the metropolitan area of Toronto in some rural township 40 or 50 miles away for the next 25 years, which is obviously unacceptable both to the people in that area and the thinking people of Toronto?

Mr. Lewis: And to the recycling programme of Ontario.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): Mr. Speaker, I will take that as notice. The minister, presumably, will answer. He won't be here tomorrow. He's at the provincial-federal meeting in Charlottetown today, but presumably he can respond to that on Monday.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): May I ask of the minister if he is considering the private member's bill that I have introduced into the House concerning a waste disposal and reclamation commission being set up by the province to resolve once and for all the problem of waste disposal?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I would think the minister involved is considering it, but again I'll leave it till Monday.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I have no more questions.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

ADVERTISEMENT FOR PHYSICIAN FOR MINISTRY OF HEALTH

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Minister of Health is the physician—the ministry's physician—advertised for this morning for the medical branch of the Health Insurance Plan "to be responsible for the development, maintenance and analysis of statistical and computerized data concerning OHIP payments" to replace Dr. David Kinlock?

Hon. R. T. Potter (Minister of Health): No, Mr. Speaker, it isn't. Dr. Kinlock was replaced by Dr. Gold. I don't know what this particular one is, but I'll certainly find out.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River). What is the salary on this one?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Do all these advertisements which appear under the various ministries just fall from heaven? Does the minister not know that he is advertising for a physician to verify and work through all of the computer data, who is registered with the Ontario College, who is required to have extensive private practice, and whose salary range will be $26,000 to $30,000 a year?

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Ask the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman).

Mr. Lewis: Now, (a) why does the minister want such a man?

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Ask the member for High Park.

Mr. Lewis: And (b) if he believes that extensive private practice in—

Mr. Ruston: The member for Oshawa (Mr. McIlveen) is going to apply for that.

Mr. Lewis:—Ontario is worth $26,000 to $30,000 a year, why is the average physician's income so much in excess of that?

Hon. Mr. Potter: Mr. Speaker, in the first place we do have a personnel director in the department. We have over 22,000 employees.

Mr. Renwick: Do we have a minister?

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): The bosses—

Hon. Mr. Potter: There is no way that I intend to take on the responsibility—

Mr. Lewis: Does the minister mean for a post like this, too?

Hon. Mr. Potter:—of advertising for all of these personnel. They are advertised and the people are interviewed to fill the vacancies.

Hon. A. Crossman (Minister of Revenue): The member must be losing his grip over there.

Hon. Mr. Potter: The vacancies are in the establishment of the organization of the ministry, and I don't make any effort to try to control these.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mrs. Campbell: The minister doesn't know what they are.

Mr. Lewis: This post is to analyse doctors' bills.

Mrs. Campbell: The civil service runs the show.

Mr. Lewis: By way of curiosity, does the minister find $26,000 to $30,000 a year payment for a doctor with "extensive private practice" a quite reasonable medical income?

Mr. C. E. McIlveen (Oshawa): Sure, if he only works eight hours a day.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you. Thank you very much. The member is an eloquent man on occasion.

PRICE INCREASES ON GM CARS

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations?

Now that General Motors has announced its intention to increase prices from $13 to $383 a year on its 1973 models, is the minister prepared to accept that, in light of the extraordinary corporate profits of General Motors over the last year and one quarter, without calling it in for economic justification?

Hon. J. T. Clement (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I read the article; I think it was in this morning's paper. I haven't had an opportunity to see what our position on it is. I share the hon. member's concern with the increase.

Noticing the article, something caught my attention which was to the effect that certain features were to be incorporated as standard features. I don't know what relief that gives to the purchaser, because the company is upping the price for the inclusion of those. We are looking at it to see what role, if any, we have to play in this.

I'll be glad to get back to the hon. member if we have anything of a positive nature to offer.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the 1971 profits of $79.8 million in Canada and a 25 per cent jump in profits in the first quarter of 1973, how can the minister allow these major automobile companies to raid the consumers of Ontario in this fashion by indiscriminate price increases which he knows and I know are unjustified?

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if they are unjustified but I think the problem is much bigger than that of just this province. It's a problem that is common across each jurisdiction, each province of this country.

It was a matter that was touched on informally at the Quebec conference I attended two weeks ago. We think the role to be played should be played and borne by the federal government. An independent provincial jurisdiction enacting any legislation might well find that those articles are not available for the consumer in this jurisdiction, if it happened to be Ontario, and therefore it has to be a united and concerted effort across the country and not just localized.

PARKWAY BELT

Mr. Lewis: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Provincial Treasurer:

Is he familiar with Mr. Nyttai, of his ministry, associated with the Toronto-centred region plan?

Hon. Mr. White: I may have met the gentleman, I can't bring a face to mind.

Mr. Lewis: Is he aware that on May 11, 1973, at Dunbarton high school in a discussion with the People or Planes Committee it was conveyed by officers in the North Pickering development project and the Toronto-centred region plan that a definite plan for the parkway belt would be announced by the end of June, the plan so explicit that it would have every lot that was to be taken listed by number?

Hon. Mr. White: No, sir, I am not aware of that. I have set forth the position of the government explicitly in the debate the last couple of days and I will repeat it now. This proposal is policy pro tem to be examined by a wide ranging series of consultations using hearing officers, advisory committees and other techniques, and only when those affected have a direct input will a final decision be made by the government.

Mr. Lewis: Is the Treasurer publishing parkway east before the end of June?

Hon. Mr. White: Before the end of this month? No, sir.

INSURANCE LEGISLATION

Mr. Lewis: One last question, of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations:

What steps or new legislation is the minister planning to control what the chairman of the insurance advisory committee, Mr. J. A. Weims, declared to be "irksome and totally unrealistic competition" in the commercial-industrial insurance field?

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, we are studying the recommendations of the McWilliams report. I intend to make the full report available within days to the members of this House who have an interest in it. It is a rather voluminous work; we intend to look into it. The Superintendent of Insurance has been studying it for some weeks, and at that time I can probably give some indication of our feelings with reference to the particular matter the hon. member touched upon. I just don't know at this stage.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York Centre.

NEW TORONTO AIRPORT

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Treasurer and the Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs.

The Treasurer will recall that the Premier (Mr. Davis) recently stated he felt the matter of the Pickering airport was purely a federal concern and any inquiry into it was purely a federal concern. Will the minister therefore lift the freeze on the noise land area that was imposed on March 2, 1972, when there was a joint statement with regard to the airport made by the federal and provincial governments?

Will the minister now lift that freeze, since it is only a federal matter, and leave it up to the federal government to take whatever action they want to protect themselves in that field?

Hon. Mr. White: I certainly couldn't recommend that, sir. The federal government has no planning powers which would affect the noise cone area. But I am taking another look at it, because the federal government have now adopted a somewhat different measuring technique, as I understand it, which provides a somewhat smaller area than the 95 CNR line.

I have met with Whitchurch—Stouffville and I have undertaken, by June 15, to answer their request—brought to me by their member, I must say—to narrow down this area which has been frozen on account of noise pollution. But the idea of taking off all such controls which are provincial in nature pending the final decision of the federal government, which obviously has the responsibility for airports, I think would not be conscionable.

Mr. Deacon: Supplementary: Will the minister agree that this is a tremendous economic loss, and also a source of suffering by those in the area affected, purely for the federal government's purposes; and that there should be an arrangement made by the federal government to compensate those affected? Would the Treasurer take steps now to see that those people are compensated for being frozen?

Hon. Mr. White: I'll be glad to relay the suggestion to the federal authorities, and perhaps next time the member is talking to Mr. Trudeau he could mention it.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Oh, yes: "Your good friends in Ottawa."

Mr. Deacon: Supplementary: Since this freeze is a provincial action, surely the provincial government would not take the action without making arrangements for compensation of those affected by the federal government? This government should put the heat on Ottawa; it is this government that is taking the action.

Hon. Mr. White: The member's leader can put the heat on Ottawa.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ontario South.

Mr. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the minister if this freeze that is on at the present time is only for the noise cone, or is it for planning purposes also?

Hon. Mr. White: It's for planning purposes for noise pollution, as I understand it.

An hon. member: Did the member for Ontario South understand that?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Is the minister aware that there are signs posted on the Trans-Canada Highway, Highway 11, at Geraldton and at Beardmore, alerting the public to the fact that there are a series of bumps for 49 miles on the Trans-Canada Highway?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The Trans-Canada Highway?

Mr. Lewis: What happens when one hits 50?

Mr. Stokes: Has the minister received any communication or has he spoken to the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. J. R. Smith) or the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Brunelle), who drove that section of the road with me last Friday—

Mr. Lewis: And will never be the same again.

Mr. Stokes: —and considered it to be in deplorable condition for a Trans-Canada route?

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): We were all shook up by the bad road.

Mr. Stokes: And as a result of that, what does the minister intend to do about it?

Mr. Lewis: What a sign! "Forty-nine miles of bumps, courtesy of Gordon Carton."

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): Mr. Speaker, may I compliment the hon. member on the company with whom he travels, and vice versa. Firstly, this particular stretch of road is subject to the very severe elements, as the hon. member knows, of the far north—

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): One could be the Ministry of Transportation!

Hon. Mr. Carton: —and in the spring with the coming out of the frost there are many frost upheavals. But I am pleased to advise the hon. member that a contract will be awarded later this fall for repaving of 15 miles of that particular stretch.

Mr. Stokes: Supplementary!

Mr. Lewis: Then there will be 34 miles of bumps.

Mr. Stokes: At the rate that he intends to proceed with this section of the road, is the minister aware that it will take him four years to iron out those series of bumps for 49 miles?

Is the minister aware that this is just not acceptable to the people living in that part of Ontario? I have been instructed to express those sentiments to the minister.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: We'll back the member up. The minister has got to fix them before the election.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, in addition to the reconstruction of those 15 miles, we do spend a considerable amount of money on maintenance each year. We spend a much larger amount on maintenance on that particular road than on other roads throughout the province. So in addition to the reconstruction of 15 miles, there will be the usual moneys spent on maintenance, which will aid the situation until we get the road reconstructed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia.

GERMAN FINANCING OF BOND ISSUE

Mr. Bullbrook: A question of the Treasurer, Mr. Speaker: In view of the diligence with which he undertakes his responsibilities, could he now tell us—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That got his attention!

Mr. Bullbrook: I knew he would get some joy from that.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The member made his day for him.

Hon. Mr. White: No, I am bracing myself for the rest of the question.

An hon. member: Brace yourself!

Mr. Bullbrook: Could he now tell us whether he's consulted with the former Treasurer, and could he advise us whether Mr. Moog was indirectly or in any way involved in the financing of the bond issue in West Germany?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, I have, in effect, spoken to the previous Treasurer on the subject. I asked my assistant to query our officials and I'll have a report back, if not today, within the near future.

Mr. Bullbrook: Is the Treasurer—

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Chatham-Kent): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, what's out of order thus far?

An hon. member: What's out of order?

Mr. Speaker: Well, I'll have to listen first and find out.

Mr. McKeough: There has perhaps been some inference in the questioning and I want to make it very clear that I have never met Mr. Moog—

Mr. Bullbrook: There is no inference.

Mr. McKeough: —there was no contact between officials of Treasury, when I was the Treasurer of Ontario, with Mr. Moog. The suggestion that he had anything to do with arranging financing for the Province of Ontario during the time at which I was Treasurer of Ontario, is completely and utterly false.

Mr. Bullbrook: May I speak to that point of order, in first saying—

Mr. Stokes: The member said there wasn't one.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bullbrook: —that if I infer anything in connection with the parliamentary secretary, I won't infer it, I'll tell him what I'm thinking!

Mr. Lewis: What does that mean?

Mr. Bullbrook: The fact of the matter is that there's been evidence before the committee downstairs of which I am a member—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): What's the member's point of order?

Mr. Bullbrook: I'm speaking to the point of order.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): He is speaking to his own point of order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bullbrook: Is the member for High Park everything to everybody? Is he now the Speaker?

Speaking to the point of order, I categorically advise my colleague, the member for Chatham-Kent, that I inferred nothing in connection with his integrity. I want him to know that. The purchase of the question is—

Mr. Speaker: I think that's equal time now.

Mr. Bullbrook: The purpose of the question is to clarify the evidence given before that Hydro committee that Mr. Moog made certain allegations. That's the entire purpose of it.

Mr. McKeough: Speaking to the point of order again, then presumably the member has his answer. So far as I am concerned, the information was false.

Mr. Lewis: As a matter of fact, Mr. Moog hasn't been before the committee. There's only one fellow over there who seems to know Moog.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

PREMIER TRUST CO.

Mr. Shulman: A question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, Mr. Speaker: Is there any way his ministry can assist those hundreds of people who have been overcharged by the Premier Trust Co. in their interest rates to get back the excess payments they have made?

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, I think the question relates to the method of computation of mortgages, a matter which we touched upon some days ago in the House, as to the declining balance, whether the interest should be charged at the beginning of the period or at the termination of the six month period.

It has been a matter of great concern to many people in the mortgage field as to how they truly are intended to compute it. I have had no complaints directed to me with reference to Premier Trust from people affected by that particular company or any others. If I receive some I suppose the only interest that we would have from a consumer point of view is to advise them as to any legal rights that might exist or that they might well consider approaching their solicitors.

It's a very difficult practice, because when mortgages were originally prepared years ago the mortgage was loaned on the farm for five years and the annual payment plus the interest was a simple thing to compute. Then when we got into the monthly programme with the declining semi-annual balance, this is where the difficulty arose. I can tell the hon. member that it has been a matter that's been to the bar association, with which I was associated for a number of years, as to how you truly and genuinely compute it. If someone has been overcharged contrary to the federal Interest Act, I would presume that they would well consider at least threatening an action to recover any moneys that have been overcharged.

Mr. Shulman: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Inasmuch as the minister has not been written by anyone, can he comment on the letter he signed personally in which he wrote to Mr. Rappaport that he planned to deal with such undesirable business practices "by means of appropriate legislation which I expect to introduce very shortly," a letter which he sent out some three months ago?

Hon. Mr. Clement: I forgot that one. It's touched upon in the article, of course, but I couldn't recall that particular letter.

We have had discussions, we brought it up at the interprovincial conference last week, and we have been waiting for four years for revision of the Interest Act. We think it's outdated—all the provinces think it is outdated—and it demonstrates very clearly the situation that the member has touched upon, the difference between simple interest and yield; and it can, in certain instances, be rather significant.

Mr. Shulman: Another supplementary, if I may, Mr. Speaker: Inasmuch as the minister wrote last January that he was going to introduce this legislation very shortly, when can we expect it?

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, I don't recall the particular letter to which the hon. member refers. I will have to take a look and see what we have. I have nothing before me right now for this legislative session dealing with the computation of interest, because it is not within the purview of this province, as I understand the legislation. When I wrote that letter I may well have been considering matters I touched upon in my estimates, namely the Fair Business Practices Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron.

MOTORCYCLE PARK IN GRAND BEND AREA

Mr. J. Riddell (Huron): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development. In view of the fact that the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier) has announced that he intends to establish a motorcycle park in the Grand Bend area, could he tell me if a new policy has been formulated by the minister to provide such services for motorcycle enthusiasts?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I am not aware of any new policy. The closest—

Mr. Singer: Motorcycle parks?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Or even any old policy?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: The closest to a new policy development in relation to that kind of facility, I guess, would fall within the announcement I made yesterday, where we are looking at the whole question of recreational land use in the province.

Mr. Lewis: Symposium on trails.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It is kind of linear recreation.

Mr. Singer: Could the minister give us a list of what he does know about?

Mr. Stokes: What is linear recreation?

Mr. Riddell: Does the minister realize the great consternation that he has precipitated on the part of the people within a 50-mile radius of Grand Bend since his announcement of a motorcycle park in the Grand Bend area? Does the minister realize the insurmountable problems that he is inviting by establishing such a park when he considers that three girls were sexually assaulted by members of a motorcycle society in the Grand Bend area on Victoria Day weekend, and when he considers that the Ontario Provincial Police are reluctant to venture into the park at Kettle Point because of the congregation of motorcycle groups.

Mr. Speaker: That is a sufficient statement, or speech. The question has been asked.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, we just won't stand to have a park established in that area. And the people are up in arms about it. They are going to take action against it.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Is there any response from the minister to that statement and question? If not, the hon. member for Oxford.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Just a gentle smile and a shake of his head.

WHEAT MARKETING BOARD

Mr. H. C. Parrott (Oxford): A question Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Does the minister yet have the result of the vote of the wheat marketing board?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, I do. The results of the vote were 75.9 per cent in favour. The Farm Products Marketing Board recommended to the Minister of Agriculture and Food that the agency plan be established. I approved of it yesterday. It will be in effect for this year's crop.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West.

UNIFORM STORE HOURS

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): A question of the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker: When will he be tabling or introducing legislation in this House providing for—with fully adequate enforcement provisions—reasonably shortened and more uniform store hours in this province?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, a policy statement will be made in reference to that matter in due course, and I would think in due course would be shortly.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

BICYCLE PATHWAYS

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. In light of the tremendous explosion in the use of bicycles and in light of the fact that the summer holiday season will be upon us fairly shortly, does the minister contemplate providing incentives or financial assistance to municipalities to hasten the development of bicycle pathways?

Mr. Lewis: Or parks, for that matter, in Grand Bend.

Hon. Mr. Carton: No, Mr. Speaker, we have not as yet.

Mr. B. Newman: Is the minister considering having the various associations and organizations throughout the Province of Ontario that are interested in the bicycle pathway problem meet so that they could discuss their problems together and come to some resolution concerning a policy for bicycle pathways?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, yes, my officials are meeting constantly on this particular subject matter, and I am sure that they have been discussing this problem with the particular associations the member is talking about. We are cognizant of it, and are trying to come up with a policy.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

JUNIOR HOCKEY PLAYERS

Mr. Foulds: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations: Does the minister not consider the operation of the OHA and the individual teams' handling of their chattel contracts with the junior hockey players on each team—who by fiat of the CAHA cannot receive more than $60 per week—to be unfair entrepreneurial practice in that those players work a full-time job now that the season has been extended to 60 to 70 games a year, and many of those players can no longer attend school? Can his ministry not take some action against this exploitation of youth in our province?

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware personally of the matter. I have no legislation under which I operate in such matters. I generally know the things to which the member refers, but I have had absolutely no exposure to it one way or the other. I don't know whether it is a matter for the Ministry of Labour of some other ministry here; I am just not familiar with it in any way whatsoever.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker, does not the matter of chattel contracts come under your jurisdiction or administration?

Mr. Singer: Does the minister realize our youth are being exploited, because they are now getting $200 a day?

Hon. Mr. Clement: The physical registration of chattel mortgages comes within the personal property registration provisions.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, our regulations and legislation deal with the registration of the document. If the requirements of the document as set out in the legislation are met and it is properly witnessed and the affidavits are completed, we will register it.

We do not, per se, inquire into the contents of the document to see if it covers a particular type of appliance or motor vehicle or anything of that nature. I have no information of any validity for the hon. member other than that.

Mr. Foulds: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister investigate it and see if, in fact, the OHA is circumventing legislation by this dodge and violating the practices of the Ministry of Labour?

Mr. Lewis: My colleague from Port Arthur understands the real meaning of chattel.

Hon. Mr. Clement: I'll take a look at it but the contents of a chattel mortgage, with the greatest respect, are really not of concern to us as long as the legal requirements as to the execution and completion of the document are met. I have no jurisdiction beyond that. I'll take a look at it.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: May I ask the minister if he is aware that the Athletics Control Act provides the athletics control commissioner with the authority to control and license hockey contests and, in light of that fact, that there may be some legislation presently on the books under which the minister could act?

Hon. Mr. Clement: I welcome that advice. I am not familiar with that Act; I have nothing to do with that Act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

CNR TARIFF FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): A question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications: In light of the fact that next week is Senior Citizens' Week—

Mr. Bounsell: Has the member reached that age? Senility, anyway!

Mr. Drea: Fine—would the minister consider asking the Canadian National Railways to drop its prohibitive tariff of $3 for a person to prove that he or she is over 65 years of age in order to enjoy a reduced tariff on that railway? The reason I ask the question is that we have a railway tour—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River is next.

MERCURY CONTAMINATION WARNING

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Minister of Health. Does he agree with his colleague, the Minister of Natural Resources, that, in fact, mercury pollution and mercury poison of fish in northwestern Ontario is not all that serious a hazard to people's health? Would he agree with that statement by his colleague?

Hon. Mr. Potter: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what my colleague said but I've already stated in the House that I am concerned about the mercury levels in the water up there. I've sent out letters to every household. I have information in the hands of all the doctors of everyone concerned in that area.

Mr. Reid: Send one to the Minister of Natural Resources.

Hon. Mr. Potter: I can't tell the member anything more than that.

Mr. Singer: Send the minister a letter.

Mr. Reid: Do I gather correctly from the minister's remarks that he does consider the mercury pollution very hazardous to the health of both the Indians and the tourists who are eating the fish. He does consider it very hazardous?

Hon. Mr. Potter: No, the member does not, Mr. Speaker. In our studies that we have done up there—and I had them go very carefully into it—much was said about the fact that if alternatives to fish weren't provided the people were going to starve. Of course, this is entirely untrue.

Mr. Reid: The minister should answer the question. Is eating the fish hazardous?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Government Services): Does the member want the answer or not?

Mr. Reid: I want the answer to my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Potter: I've been trying, Mr. Speaker, but if he doesn't want me to answer, it is all right with me. We found that very few people indeed eat fish every day; even some of those with high mercury content in their blood eat fish only once a week. We do know that the mercury content is high enough that anyone who is pregnant shouldn't be eating the fish at all. We are warning the people in the area that if they eat it occasionally, it is probably not going to do them any harm.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South.

Mr. Stokes: A supplementary!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay with a supplementary.

Mr. Stokes: Yes, has the minister received a letter sent to him by my colleague from Sandwich-Riverside and myself suggesting that where it is necessary for people to eat fish on a regular and steady basis they be given a supplementary vitamin diet?

Mr. Bounsall: What happens to the minister's mail?

Hon. Mr. Potter: No, I have not got that yet.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside. There are about 50 seconds left for a supplementary.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Has the minister any proven cases of mercury poisoning among the Indians from the eating of the fish in the northern lakes?

Hon. Mr. Potter: No, we haven't any proven cases at all, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I think we can get the hon. member for Cochrane South in yet.

FREIGHT SHED AT PORQUIS JUNCTION

Mr. Ferrier: Yes, my question is of the Minister of Transportation and Communications: Why is the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission proposing to close the express freight shed at Porquis Junction, when this will mean the loss of five jobs and a poorer service to the people of Iroquois Falls in regard to express and freight?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, this has been under study for some time. We feel that the expenses involved with keeping that open are not in keeping with the services provided. We feel there will not be a reduction in service to the people in the area. We are trying to replace the jobs, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce.

EXPANSION OF LOAN PROGRAMME FOR INDUSTRIAL MILK PRODUCERS

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food and I will put the question while he is walking back to his seat. Does the loan programme, applicable to the industrial milk producers, apply when those producers have already applied on graduated entry to the group one pool, even though most of their production is still going for industrial purposes?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it does. Quite frankly, I would welcome the opportunity to enlarge on that if I may. We think there are many people who are in that category—the graduated entry procedure—and some who are fluid shippers now in the class one pool who could expand their production substantially. There is no reason why they shouldn't qualify in this programme.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: If they ship the bulk of their milk in the group one pool, they can still qualify?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes; oh, yes.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Could I raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, last evening this House sat from 8 o'clock until midnight. During the course of that sitting, there were two recorded votes taken and the bells rang on the first occasion for some 40 minutes and on the second occasion for some 35 minutes. In other words, of the four hours of sitting time we had available to us last evening, over a third of that time was taken up by ringing of the bells.

Mr. Drea: Because we couldn't find the members opposite.

Mr. Singer: I think that we waste more time here by letting the bells ring—

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of order so far.

Mr. Singer: Yes, there is, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I beg to differ with the hon. member. He has not made a point of order so far.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, it is a question of the ordering of the business of the House.

Mr. Speaker: I am looking for a point of order, and there is no provision in the standing orders for the ringing of bells for a division.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, the point is that if this House is going to be run in an orderly way, it is up to you, sir.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is quite out of order. He will please be seated.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Well, it is about time something was done around here to run this place properly.

Mr. Speaker: He is quite out of order. I direct the member to be seated. He is out of order completely; entirely and completely out of order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): He is absolutely right!

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Right on target!

Mr. Lewis: One of the things they might do is introduce legislation two months ahead of time instead of two weeks.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Mr. Singer: Or bring some Tories here some time.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Motions.

Mr. Singer: Where are the members opposite when the bells start to ring?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Hon. Mr. White: These bills would have been introduced earlier in the session except for our determination to have greater consultation with those affected.

Mr. Lewis: Sure.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Great consultant!

Mr. Lewis: Sort of smarting under public view.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF DURHAM ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to establish the Regional Municipality of Durham.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Lewis: The Treasurer just established the first independent Conservative in the House.

Mr. Stokes: The member for Oshawa mustn't take it so hard.

Mr. W. Newman: He never will think as the NDP does.

Mr. Lewis: I don't ask him to think as we do.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the establishment of the regional municipality of Durham. It will be a two-tier municipality with eight area municipalities. That is, the city of Oshawa, the town of Ajax, the town of Newcastle, the town of Pickering, the town of Whitby, the township of Brock, the township of Scugog and the township of Uxbridge.

Our original proposals for this regional municipality have been substantially altered as the result of extensive public interest and recommendations.

Among the features of the bill are: The western boundary follows the present boundary of Ontario county, except for the West Rouge area of Pickering township which is to join Scarborough. The eastern boundary will be the Clarke-Hope township line.

The township of Scott will become the new municipality of Uxbridge. The townships of Thorah and Brock and the villages of Beaverton and Cannington will become the new municipality of Brock. Darlington township will be included with Bowmanville, Clarke and Newcastle in the new municipality of Newcastle. The township of Manvers will be added to Victoria county. The township of South Monaghan and Cavan, along with Millbrook, will join Peterborough county, and the townships of Rama and Mara will enter Simcoe county.

Mr. Speaker, this is an area of great future potential and we believe that the municipal restructuring we propose in this bill will provide the residents of Durham with effective local government to serve their needs in the years to come.

This bill will be taken through the legislative process by my parliamentary assistant, the member for Grenville-Dundas (Mr. Irvine).

TOWN OF WASAGA BEACH ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to incorporate the Town of Wasaga Beach.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for a consultation of the municipalities in the Wasaga Beach park community. At the present time the park community covers all—

Mr. Lewis: The Treasurer doesn't know what consultation means.

Hon. Mr. White: —of the village of Wasaga Beach as well as parts of the townships of Flos, Sunnidale and Nottawasaga. They will be consolidated into a single town on the basis of a proposal we discussed with the municipalities and residents of the area.

We are confident the new municipality will provide the administrative and political structure for the government of Ontario and the residents of Wasaga Beach to jointly develop the area's tremendous recreational resource. This bill will be taken through the legislative process by my parliamentary assistant, the member for York East (Mr. Meen).

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF HAMILTON-WENTWORTH ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to establish the Regional Municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Hamilton-Wentworth? Will they get single tier?

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of this bill being given first reading will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."
In my opinion, the "ayes" have it.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, with your permission may I draw the attention of the House to your guests in the gallery, including the warden of Wentworth county, Mr. Jack Southall, some members of his council and members of the Hamilton council. May I say, on behalf of all of us, we are very happy to have them here.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Where are the members of the Hamilton council, pray tell?

Hon. Mr. White: I am told that they are expected.

Mr. Lewis: Where are the members from the Oshawa council for the regional municipality of Durham?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I don't blame the Treasurer for smiling at that.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the establishment of the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth. It will be a two-tier municipality with six area municipalities: The city of Hamilton; the town of Stoney Creek; the township of Glanbrook; the township of Ancaster; the town of Dundas; and the township of Flamborough.

The structure and functions follow substantially our original two-tier proposals. However, the details have been modified extensively following representations from the municipalities and thorough consultations and deliberations with councillors and citizens in the communities involved.

The significant structural changes are that—

Mr. Lewis: By repeating it the Treasurer won't stop smarting.

Hon. Mr. White:—Ancaster and an enlarged Dundas are to be separate municipalities, and the township of Flamborough will include Waterdown and East Flamborough, which were originally proposed as part of the regional municipality of Halton, along with Beverly and West Flamborough.

Mr. Speaker, the bill embodies recommendations of municipalities and residents of the Hamilton-Wentworth community, and we are confident this will give them the local government structure they want to meet their present needs and future challenges.

This bill will be taken through the legislative process by my parliamentary assistant, the member for York East.

Mr. Sargent: Will it be secondary to the escarpment bill?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if it could be made clear as to whether it is government policy that these bills will go to standing committee or only to committee of the whole House?

Hon. Mr. White: I wouldn't want to decide that, Mr. Speaker. I am the servant of the Legislature in the matter—

Some hon. members: Oh!

Hon. Mr. White:—and I think we can decide that later.

Mr. Lewis: Why doesn't the Treasurer consult with us?

Mr. Sargent: Yes, consultation!

Mr. Lewis: The Treasurer is such an avid devotee! He is so servile. He keeps on repeating it as though by repetition it would become the truth.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: Before we move to the orders of the day, I should like to inform the House that in the name of Her Majesty the Queen, The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor yesterday has been pleased to assent to certain bills in his chambers.

The Clerk Assistant: The following are the titles of the bills to which His Honour did assent:

Bill 94, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972.

Bill 95, An Act to repeal the Security Transfer Tax Act.

Bill 113, An Act to amend the Ministry of Education Act.

Bill 124, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Bill 126, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Bill 127, the Construction Safety Act, 1973.

Bill 132, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves second reading of Bill 129, An Act to provide for Planning and Development of the Niagara Escarpment and its Vicinity.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): May I provide some fairly brief introductory remarks here for the hon. member to shoot down?

Mr. Speaker, the policy statement on the Niagara Escarpment issued by the government of Ontario on June 4 has as its overall objective a programme to protect the escarpment's distinct characteristics and ensure a balanced use of escarpment lands in the future. The goal will be to maintain the Niagara Escarpment as a continuous natural environment while seeking to accommodate demands compatible with that environment.

To reach that goal the following objectives will be adhered to: To protect unique ecological and historic areas; to maintain and enhance the quality and character of natural streams and water supplies; to provide adequate opportunities for outdoor recreation through the public and private sectors; to maintain and enhance the open character of the escarpment by such means as compatible farming and forestry, and by preserving the natural scenery; to ensure that all new development is compatible with the goal for the escarpment; to provide adequate access to the escarpment.

And on the same day, sir, June 4, the government had introduced this bill, 129, at that time the Premier of Ontario (Mr. Davis) said the government views the protection of the Niagara Escarpment as an urgent matter and will give early passage to the Act with the co-operation of the Legislature.

So when the Act is passed the government is empowered to set up a commission to be known as the Niagara Escarpment Commission, composed of 17 members appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Nine members shall be representative from each of the eight counties and regional municipalities along the escarpment planning area.

The chairman of the commission may be designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. The Act also empowers the minister to designate an area of the province as the Niagara Escarpment planning area and also to declare that any part of that planning area may be designated as subject to development control. Once the Niagara Escarpment Commission is established, it's to be charged with the preparation of a master plan for the escarpment planning area.

Provisions are included in the Act which will ensure that the master plan is prepared in consultation with all the other ministers affected by the master plan and that it is prepared in consultation with the council of each municipality within or partly within the Niagara Escarpment planning area.

The Niagara Escarpment plan may contain, first of all, policies for the economic, social and physical development of the Niagara Escarpment planning area. It may contain policies regarding the management of land and water resources, the general distribution and density of population, the general location of industry and commerce, the identification of major land use areas and the provision of major parks and open space, the control of all forms of pollution of the natural environment, the general location and development of major servicing communication and transportation systems, and the development and maintenance of educational, cultural, recreational health and other social facilities.

The plan may contain also policies relating to the financing and programming of public development projects in capital works; policies for co-ordinating of the planning and development of programmes for the various ministries of the Niagara Escarpment planning area; and policies designed to ensure compatibility of development by the private sector.

The Act ensures that all government ministries and agencies, local municipalities and the public are kept fully aware of the contents of the plan and consulted, so as to achieve their comments and opinions. Hearing officers may be appointed for the purpose of hearing representations by any interested party, including individual members of the public. The hearing officers are required to issue a public report within a specified time and the minister is required to submit the proposed plan, with or without recommendations, to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, who in turn may approve the plan or approve the plan with such modifications as the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers to be desirable. Thereupon, the plan becomes the Niagara Escarpment plan for that area.

A copy of the Niagara Escarpment plan must be then lodged with the clerk of each of the municipalities and in every land registry office within the Niagara Escarpment planning area. Amendments to this plan may be initiated by the minister or by the commission or by any person or municipality requesting such an amendment.

When the Niagara Escarpment Commission has become established and is operating, any part of the Niagara Escarpment planning area may be subjected to development control. At the present time, land use is controlled by zoning bylaws which create a series of zones or land use areas and establish development standards for all of the uses permitted in each zone.

A bylaw of this sort is prepared according to general knowledge of each zone's physical condition. Because of this, the zoning bylaw cannot set out the particular requirements which would be followed if every individual property was to be treated according to its own environmental elements. Because the Niagara Escarpment area has special characteristics it is necessary that every form of development shall be viewed on its own merits. For this purpose, development control will be used by the commission to review each proposed land-use change and to develop an application on an individual basis.

Where the commission deems a proposal to be compatible with the objectives of the plan, it may issue a development control permit with such conditions as it may think fit, such as individual minimum lot sizes, setbacks of buildings, the protection and provision of tree cover, the prohibition of earth works, excavations and such like, or the commission may refuse a development permit. Building permits may not be issued by the local municipalities unless a development control permit has been obtained from the commission.

The Niagara Escarpment Commission will review the land acquisition proposals and recommend to government accordingly. The government has accepted the principle of land acquisitions to be carried out in the following priorities: one, unique ecologic and historic area; two, new recreational facilities, especially potential parklands near urban areas and the best route for Bruce Trail. The best route for the Bruce Trail will be determined by the Bruce Trail Association working with the commission.

Land acquisitions within the Niagara Escarpment planning area are to be carried out within the provincial programme for the acquisition of recreational conservation land. As part of its policy for the protection of the Niagara Escarpment, the government intends to adopt a restrictive zone in which no new permits for pits and quarries will be issued.

As an interim measure the government has adopted a restrictive zone as recommended by the Niagara Escarpment task force and the Niagara Escarpment Commission will be asked to review the restrictive zone as part of its work programme. In this connection the Niagara Escarpment Commission will be asked to define mineral resource areas in order to conserve for future use the normal reserves of stone, sand and gravel within the Niagara Escarpment planning area.

The commission will be asked to develop policies for the protection of good harbour areas, shorelines and water and access shorelines for public use. It's anticipated the Niagara Escarpment plan will be completed by 1976.

I have some additional data here, sir, but I think it might be more effective if I retained this material and used whatever portion seems necessary to respond to the remarks of the hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Well, Mr. Speaker, at the outset I think I should relay to the House an error in my statement to the House last week with regard to this bill, wherein a government member was charging me with having land in the escarpment area. And in Hansard I am quoted as saying that "I do not have a single acre in the escarpment area." I find, Mr. Speaker, that I am wrong, that in checking—

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): The member has more than that in his lawn.

Mr. Sargent: —the map I was surprised to find, Mr. Speaker, that the city of Owen Sound and the city of Hamilton are integral parts of the escarpment programme. Every bylaw and piece of land in the city of Owen Sound and every bylaw and every piece of land in the city of Hamilton comes under this bill. I do own land in the city of Owen Sound, on the harbour, and I am in conflict as this bill is written. I did not know it at the time, but I find that I am in conflict of interest in speaking on this bill if this is the case. I want to declare that conflict of interest.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): A pretty choice piece of real estate too, I might say.

Mr. Sargent: Well, it has cost a lot of money over the years in taxes; if I could ever sell it I might be all right. But I am stating at this point my conflict in this area to determine whether or not the House wants me to speak on this bill. I did not know at the time that the city of Owen Sound in total was part of the escarpment package, nor did I know the city of Hamilton was also part of it.

Hon. Mr. White: The member had better find out from his leader whether he is in conflict.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): It would be unprecedented if the member was inhibited on any score, so go ahead.

Mr. Sargent: Well, I'm glad the member for York South is here.

You know, I would say that, Mr. Speaker, if—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: I'll leave that until later. If any 10 men read this bill there would be 10 different answers. We have had the top brains in our area who have been involved in this over the years, in these problems of ours since we've been frozen, since we've been so badly treated by this government. A number of our top people have read the bill, Mr. Speaker, and we have all different answers.

In fact, in the main we are more concerned about the absolute power which this minister has in this bill, the powers it gives to the minister; in other words, we are getting sick and tired, Mr. Speaker, of the government telling us what to do. And I've got an aside here in a lighter vein; I have a—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: I have a bar up in Owen Sound and I had the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Clement) up visiting me, and this is the power the government will use to tell you how to run your affairs. So the minister and I were having a few drafts at the bar, and he said to me: "Eddie, how many kegs of beer do you sell a week here?" And I said: "Oh, maybe 50 kegs." He said: "Would you like to sell 60 kegs?" I said: "Yes, I would." He said: "Well, fill up the damn glasses."

Now, that is one alternative, but we have here, Mr. Speaker, a complete—

Mr. MacDonald: A pretty good joke, but unparliamentary.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): I wouldn't invite him back after that.

Mr. Sargent: Well, they've even gone that far. I say that about the minister kindly.

Mr. Ruston: Oh, he's a nice fellow.

Mr. Sargent: However, Mr. Speaker, about five or six weeks ago this government was coming to the people of Ontario to show its financial position and that it could not balance the books—and so it put on the 40 per cent increase in sales tax.

This past week, on June 4, this minister introduced legislation to spend up to $700 million or close to three-quarters of a billion dollars on land acquisition. A few days later they announce a programme to spend $3.5 billion on nuclear power.

Well, for an administration which is almost insolvent, has a total debenture debt of $7 billion dollars—the worst financially-administered government in the whole North American continent. When B.C. and Alberta are debt-free, we are $7 billion dollars in hock. We have to increase our sales tax to balance our budget, and now this minister comes to the House—

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): They can't even balance it.

Mr. Sargent: They can't even balance it, right. They had about $1 million deficit last year, but they did some tricky bookkeeping to cover that one up. And now they come and they say they want to spend $700 million of the taxpayers' money in this hanky-panky bill before us today.

As I said before, no one knows what it means. The minister gets up in his preamble here, Mr. Speaker, and he reads pages 6 and 7 which are in the manual and which were in our presentation on June 4. He doesn't know what's in the bill. The eggheads working for his department wrote it for him. He's like a Charlie McCarthy. They pull the string and he gets up and spouts off.

As far as I am concerned, I know this bill is going to pass, no matter what we would say, Mr. Speaker. If the Lord himself were here to tell us the untruths in this thing and the bad parts of it, it would still pass. All we can do is alert the people of Ontario to the iniquities and the pitfalls in this programme.

The main concern I have, Mr. Speaker, is this, that I firmly believe that the setting up of this commission will develop the biggest grab-bag in history. It'll be a field day for developers. I suggest to the minister that we are being terribly misled through the legislative game of authorizing without appropriating. Authorization of a park and recreational land without appropriating funds will make those on the inside rich.

I believe, when it comes to protecting the Ontario resources for people in our open spaces, authorization should be tied to appropriation; or else a long-term real estate contract should be signed with the down-payment and the balance paid over possibly 20 years.

In this whole package, of which I am shocked to find that the city of Owen Sound is an integral part, the major centre is the city of Hamilton. They are completely bottled up by this plan, giving this minister the absolute authority in which he says that the laws of this commission will prevail against anything else in Ontario. Any local bylaws will be subject to the dominance of this programme.

I find that in the setting up of the commission, Mr. Speaker, we in Grey and Bruce counties, comprising over 50 per cent of the total package, are allowed only two members of a 17-member board. As Hansard will show, Mr. Speaker, over the months and over the past year, that I have been constantly after the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier) or the policy minister to guarantee that we would have fair and equal representation on this committee. And here we end up with having one vote for Bruce, which is 40 per cent of the package, and one vote for Grey. As I mentioned before, we have 120 miles involved in Bruce and they have one member. Grey county with 120 miles has one member; Peel county has about six miles, it has a member; Dufferin county has 12 miles, it has a member; Wentworth county has 10 miles, it has a member. But we have 240 miles involved here against about possibly 60 or 70 miles, with equal representation. We have a very small chance of our people getting a square deal in this area. I suggest to the minister that if he is going to be fair we would be granted at least four members of the 17-member board from Grey and Bruce counties.

Hon. Mr. White: How many would the member give Hamilton-Wentworth?

Mr. Sargent: That's the thing the minister will have to decide; he is being paid to do that. But whether the population or the land area is a guideline, I don't know. I imagine land is the yardstick; it's what we are talking about, wouldn't the minister say?

Hon. Mr. White: If there were 10 people there would the member still want four representatives? I should have thought population would be a better—

Mr. Sargent: We're talking about maybe 150,000 people, in what I am talking about.

Hon. Mr. White: I should have thought population was a better measure.

Mr. Sargent: I wouldn't think that, because we are talking about areas of land. No matter what I say I'm going to be wrong anyway, but I suggest, in all fairness—and this comes out in Hansard and people can judge for themselves—the minister made the statement the other day that the people of Ontario would decide and would be the protector of their rights. I think that's a fair statement because the government is going to find out in another 18 months or two years what the people of Ontario think of the Conservatives in this.

I clarify my presentation to the minister by saying that we want at least 50 per cent of the representation on that board, insofar as the county representations are concerned because we have over 80 per cent of the land involved.

Other things that have concerned me, too, are how long will it take to prepare the plan referred to in section 7? By 1976, the minister says. How much local input will we have? What about the continuing development during the preparation of the plan? What's going to happen there?

The minister says that the government is going to pay taxes for the lands it acquires. I don't believe that one bit because in the township of Lindsay the government hasn't paid its taxes for seven years. The township has invoiced the government for it but it can't get its money. That shows the way the government does business.

Hon. Mr. White: If the township sends the bill to me I'll certainly go to work on it.

Mr. Sargent: I bet the minister would, because we have brought it to his attention now. But why hasn't it been paid?

Hon. Mr. White: I have never heard of it before in my life.

Mr. Sargent: The Treasurer probably hasn't because that's the way this government operates.

Hon. Mr. White: If the member will give me a copy, I'll fix it up for him.

Mr. Sargent: All right, that's a promise.

The whole idea is kind of frightening because we do not really know what the intent of the legislation is. Should there not be a series of workshops to clarify the intent before the legislation is made final? I think in all fairness that it's not right when so much money is involved and when some fellow down here in a high-rise apartment can sit and define the future use of the land in my area.

I submit to the minister very strongly that we should have local input and local approval before these decisions are made final.

Hon. Mr. White: That's what the bill says.

Mr. Sargent: No, the bill says consultation.

Hon. Mr. White: It means input.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to have complete municipal approval, perhaps by a referendum by the people on whether or not they approve of the way their lives will be handled in the future; or the way their lands are being handled.

Who decided that some economist in Queen's Park is better equipped to plan our area than we are? We're not stupid. We think we know what is best for us. Whatever happened to the local autonomy the minister talks about? I kept telling the minister to stay out of the Grey-Bruce area with his regional government, and finally he decided to stay out of there. And he will stay out of there, because we don't want him.

Mr. Gilbertson: How mean can you get?

Mr. Sargent: The member hasn't heard anything yet. Why should all the decisions of our committee of adjustment have to be reviewed in Toronto?

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): There are more Tories here today. Six of them.

Mr. Sargent: Yes.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): The Liberals had two the other night.

Mr. Sargent: Where will the economic base come—

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): How much does the Camp commission pay the Conservative whip? Is it $5,000 to get this turnout?

Mr. Singer: If we had spotlights maybe they could get some more.

Mr. Kennedy: They haven't changed the rate yet.

Mr. Lewis: Yes. This is the team for the Niagara Escarpment.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): The only people who are here are whips or deputy whips or chairmen of government boards. They are paid extra. It is worth noting.

Hon. Mr. White: Can't blame the audience.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): We could not even get a quorum this morning. We had to abandon the bill on corporate law. The member for Downsview wasn't there.

Mr. Kennedy: The member for Lakeshore can be self-righteous.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I have been reading the Gertler report, and the Gertler report—

Mr. Singer: I refuse to work 15 hours a day and then come down here.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Lewis: He gets paid a per diem.

Mr. Sargent: The Gertler report defined areas and sections of land that should be acquired. We could live with that deal, because it wasn't a whole ball of wax. But when the minister takes this map in the back here, and he not only disregards the Gertler report, he takes the whole peninsula, and he includes both shores, the Lake Huron shore and the Georgian Bay shore—

Hon. Mr. White: Does the member think we have gone too far?

Mr. Sargent: I certainly do. For three years he has gone too far. The whole peninsula is in limbo.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, he is setting it up; between the extremes.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Sorry!

Mr. Sargent: That's all right. I'm so confused here. There is so damn much to talk about that I don't think I could do it in one speech.

Mr. Singer: There is lots of time.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Lots of time. We are all listening to an important speech.

Mr. Sargent: The fact is that the minister has taken the whole peninsula and he has drawn a line across it at Warton, and he takes the whole peninsula north, both sides of the peninsula—he has taken the Lake Huron shore and the escarpment shore on the Georgian Bay side—and no one knows what is going on. I know the minister has granted a meeting with Mr. Johnstone, the reeve up there, in another two or three weeks, but panic is the situation up there now because they just know the future is as bad as the past three years. Up the whole piece from Hamilton north we have the escarpment area ranging from two miles to six miles, and down as far as half a mile. So I am asking the minister to take the escarpment side of the peninsula and put a zone a half a mile along the whole length of the peninsula and leave the balance, at least the Lake Huron side, free, because there is a —

Mr. Deacon: There is not much of an escarpment at all up there, is there?

Mr. Sargent: No, it is all just beautiful sand beaches. But the whole area is frozen now. The fact is—and I've said this before, but it is a concern of mine—that families who have paid taxes on their farms and properties for generations now find they cannot sell their land. They can't do anything they want but what the government tells them to do. They can't sell a piece of their land, they have to sell the whole thing or nothing. People have lost control of their lives.

The minister has said that public opinion will protect the people of this province, if following him does not give them a square deal. Well, that's not good enough. The absolute power that this man can have—it's a shocking power.

Hon. Mr. White: I have no power at all. The government—

Mr. Sargent: There's no appeal under this Act.

Hon. Mr. White: The government and the commission have the power.

Mr. Sargent: There is no appeal except to the minister.

Hon. Mr. White: Except until the commission is established.

Mr. Sargent: There is no appeal to the OMB. There is no appeal to anyone but the minister under this Act. Do I read it wrong?

Mr. Singer: No, the member is dead right.

An hon. member: Right on the button.

Hon. Mr. White: If I may, I will clarify this matter. It is perfectly true the government does make the decision and accept the responsibility, but may I remind my hon.

friend that appeals to the OMB are appealable to cabinet. It would be unthinkable to have an appeal beyond the cabinet of Ontario to some kind of tribunal established by the government.

Mr. Sargent: Now, the way these laws should be written—every one of these sections should be amended to say that local autonomy should exist and only will these things be approved, these clauses, if it is with the approval of the local municipal council. Not by what the Treasurer says, or some planner in Toronto says about our area, or about any area in the escarpment. This is the way it should be read into the law. There's little chance of the Treasurer going for that, but he has absolute power and the only appeal is to the minister. And whether or not he is here, it will be continuing legislation offering a blank cheque for land developers who can make fortunes because they have inside and continuing information. We've seen that in the past here.

Now, I ask the minister what is the economic base to support all this recreational development? Are we going to be the playground for Toronto up there? I suggest the Treasurer review the goal and the objectives on pages 6 and 7 in the policy statement. I suggest to him that we have ongoing here a form of invisible government that the people of Ontario cannot cope with.

More and more the thrust of this government is to draft policy that gives unlimited powers to special groups who form this invisible government here in Ontario.

Who are the men the Treasurer is going to appoint from the government? Are they going to be area men? The Treasurer is going to have eight county appointees, as set up now, and eight government appointees. Who are going to be the eight government appointees? Are they going to be men from the area? That's a pretty important point. Can you answer that for me?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, I don't think they are necessarily from the area, but they will be people with a direct interest and responsibility in the area. For instance, I don't know the answer to this, but it may be wise to have the president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture on the commission.

Mr. Lewis: Or someone from the Bruce Trail Association.

Hon. Mr. White: Correct. They will be people with a direct interest, whether or not they live there.

Mr. Sargent: Well, I suggest that the insider information in this is very dangerous. And we've watched before this shadow group who feed upon government contracts and insider information. In this particular instance, for years to come this shadow group will be shaping the lives of millions of people in this whole package here. And the major decisions involving their homes, their lands and their way of life, all this is taking place away from the public view. I cannot stress too strongly the fact that we are being treated like second-rate citizens—the government has foisted this plan upon us. Certainly the minister didn't write this programme. When this government decides upon a policy of acquisition of land it spends several hundreds of millions of dollars.

When it can't run its own affairs, I think the government has a hell of a lot of nerve going into municipalities like Hamilton and Owen Sound, specifically in these two cases. Everything it now has goes by the board. We have a new ball game coming along and everything will be subject to the law of the Niagara Escarpment Commission. I think it is completely wrong. The minister must have a new look at it and say in every section that the local municipal council will approve every section.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose this bill on behalf of the New Democratic Party, as I gather is implicit in the words of the member for Grey-Bruce for his party. I don't imagine on this quiet and splendid Wednesday afternoon there will be any great confrontation on this bill.

Hon. Mr. White: This will be the first day this year the member for Scarborough West hasn't shouted at me.

Mr. Lewis: I will shout at the minister before I am finished. There is a difference between the level of volume and the actual confrontation. I don't expect to be able to draw him in quite as easily on this bill, because on this bill he has nothing to say. On other bills he had a pittance to say.

I think that whatever anger emerges during the course of the afternoon, if such there is, whatever feeling emerges is fairly deeply struck. Many of us in this House, as you will recall, Mr. Speaker, have followed the saga of the escarpment for a good many years and feel very strongly about it. As a matter of fact, some of us have followed it even more closely than the minister himself, although he doubtless now knows as much as anyone else about it. The escarpment for many of us in this House was the sort of quintessential recreational resource in southern Ontario.

I can remember a number of years ago meeting in the office of one of the members of the Clasky task force—I think it was Mr. Klopchic—and sitting in his office for nearly a whole afternoon poring over maps as we discussed recreational potential in the southern part of this province. I can remember discussing the preservation of the beaches of the Great Lakes. I can remember discussing with him the Oak Ridges moraine. No one talks about the Oak Ridges moraine any more since the Toronto-centred region plan was introduced. I can remember talking to him about the Niagara Escarpment as the one last element in southern Ontario to provide a human dimension, as an antithesis to the madness of the urban complex from which we all emerge.

I suppose the legislative trek along the escarpment is now coming to an end. It's coming to an end with this bill, Mr. Speaker, and may I say, sir, that this bill in our minds is the obituary notice for the Niagara Escarpment and the minister is the author of that notice.

Hon. Mr. White: It doesn't go far enough.

Mr. Lewis: It is a graceless, bureaucratic finale to the finest recreational hinterland outside Metropolitan Toronto that we have. This shabby bill is the denouement of six years of promises and expectations. It's the squalid abandonment of the escarpment to the developers, to the pit and quarry operators, to the so-called march of progress. It's an abandonment to rapacious private interests. The public has been sacrificed yet again.

I may say to the minister that there are a great many people across this province who see the bill that way, who understand the report that way, and who feel it that way. Just as in the other land-use bills, for consultation the minister has substituted arbitrary cabinet power, and in the place of so-called controls he has substituted a surrender to private interests. The whole bill is a wolf in sheep's garb. That's the way the minister has designed it and that's the way we think he intends to execute it.

For six years in this House there has been the raging of this episodic escarpment debate. In a very recent article in the London Free Press, as a matter of fact the bailiwick of the minister himself, Harold Greer made a comment on the escarpment entitled, "The Escarpment will be saved for Development."

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: He began it this way:

After six years of lurching around for a policy which will save the famous Niagara Escarpment for public use without interfering with private owners' rights, the Ontario government has come up with a new concept of land-use control and it is enough to make the blood run cold.

Curiously enough the day before in the same paper, under the pen of George Hutchison, legislative reporter for the London Free Press at Queen's Park, it began this way:

In many ways the Tory government at Queen's Park is a lot like the Niagara Escarpment it is supposedly trying to save. Both have been around longer than most modern men can remember. Both are stolid, a mass of impressive greyness, both are eroding. The Tories I sympathize with. The escarpment I bleed for. Governments, after all, can be replaced.

Said George Hutchison!

Mr. MacDonald: And he is a London boy.

Mr. Lewis: Indeed they can. I think he is a London boy, speaking with the perspicacious insights that London boys are given to, with occasional exceptions.

It's rather interesting that these comments would be made by discerning members of the fourth estate. Of course, those comments are entirely dead on. They deal exactly with what has happened in the process of the escarpment debate, because the whole debate on the escarpment has been six abject years of failure and surrender and abandonment. Way back with the Gertler report—when did Mr. Roberts make that first policy statement? Working from memory, I think it was March 10, 1967.

Mr. Lawlor: Right on the nose!

Mr. Lewis: Right? I looked at it five minutes ago. John Roberts first said then that he was going to do something about the escarpment and Prof. Gertler published his report advocating, on an urgent basis, that 55,000 acres be taken under complete control; 35,000 acres under selective control; 300,000 acres under regulatory control. I have come across an article by Prof. Gertler, which I never saw before, in the publication "Regional Planning in Canada", presented to the Canadian Association of Geographers.

It was presented in 1971 after he had had some time to contemplate the contents of his document. When he described to the geographers what had happened he did it so neatly I thought I'd read it into the record.

The first point to grasp about the study [meaning his, the Gertler study] is that it has the uncommon distinction of being launched with a policy commitment.

On March 10, 1967 the hon. John Roberts, Prime Minister of Ontario, announced to the Legislature a wide ranging study of the Niagara Escarpment with a view to preserving its entire length as a recreation area for the people of Ontario.

When the study got under way in June, 1967, we did not therefore have to concern ourselves with the vexing philosophical question of why, but could move directly toward finding the answers to a number of operational questions. What lands should be delineated for recreational and landscape purposes? What priorities should be established? What means should be employed to preserve the delineated areas and resolve conflicts between competing uses? How much will the programme cost?

This underlying policy premise, together with the sense of urgency generated by increasing public concern for a perishable and vulnerable resource influenced the general methods and style of the Niagara Escarpment study. It was high policy and mission-oriented with all the virtues and vices of that approach. It was eclectic in method and data collection. We built upon complete studies and those which were in process in a multitude of agencies interested in some part or feature of the escarpment.

It focused on designing a strategy. The relationship between objectives, constraints and implementing measures was kept constantly in focus. And we finished on time. Our recommendations were in the hands of the government in June, 1968, within one year of the start of the study.

Now, for some reason, Gertler was unacceptable to this government, for a reason I don't entirely understand, except perhaps that he dared to suggest major public acquisition. And the minister has jettisoned Gertler, he's tossed Gertler out, he's betrayed Gertler.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: All of the basic proposals which Gertler made, as I will shortly show, and not at undue length, have been totally discarded by this government. I don't know whether it is a personality conflict within the government, although I can't believe that; it would be too petty. I don't know whether it was a basic policy conflict, because nothing has been said, but that magnificent study—and it's a brilliant study, extremely well documented, as elaborate a position as we could want for the escarpment—prepared five years ago now, has gone down the drain.

The government, however, was embarrassed by the Gertler document. As we recall, it sat on it for a very long time. It didn't get introduced into the Legislature until much later one, I guess it was well onto the end of 1969—I'm working from memory again, I think it was October 1969.

The pressures mounted publicly, and on May 6, 1970, the government made another policy presentation, not from the then Premier (Mr. Robarts) but made on his behalf by the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Grossman) who was then Minister of Correctional Services. Maybe that says something about the way the government looked at the escarpment. And he talked about a large-scale programme of land acquisition to preserve and to protect the escarpment for future generations.

At that point, Mr. Speaker, the battle was on; the desperate frustration to get the government to fulfill the commitments that were made and undertaken in the Gertler report, in the policy statement of government which followed it.

Through the estimates of 1970 and 1971 and 1972, members of the opposition tried valiantly to find out how much the government was spending and how many of Gertler's suggestions were honoured.

I went back and looked briefly at the various estimates debates, and I noticed that in April of 1970, we first went to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Auld), who was then Minister of—I'm not sure what he was minister of then—Department of Tourism and Information. Under the tourism portfolio we asked him to indicate to us how much of the escarpment had been acquired since Gertler had made his report, and he was unable to do so.

I notice that my friend the hon. member for Lakeshore pressed him hard on the—well, I'll read you the question. He said:

Continuing my question as to the second function or purpose that you are carrying out, have you yet, in your department, designated, even tentatively, specific lands on the escarpment for acquisition purposes?

My colleague from Lakeshore may not remember how acute and tough he was that day, and the minister replied: "No, we have not; at least we have not recommended." And that was in April of 1970.

And then the debate, Mr. Speaker, went on. In May of 1970 we approached the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Brunelle), who was then the Minister of Lands and Forests, and asked him how much he had acquired. It emerged that between 1962 and 1969, there had been a total acquisition of 14,365 acres. The minister, when pressed, by the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick), about the total acquisition under the Gertler report, said that he thought it could all be acquired as indicated within the requisite period. He said:

Mr. Chairman, everyone realizes the importance of this area, and we certainly will move as fast as we possibly can. I am optimistic that we will be able to meet our goal within that required time.

Well that was, frankly, an unwitting fabrication. There was never any intention on the government's part to meet the acquisition set out by Leonard Gertler.

And then in April of 1971 we had the extraordinary episode of Caledon Mountain Estates which led to the public enquiry, the royal commission about the inflated land values which the government was paying to private developers because it continued to allow the Niagara Escarpment to be encroached on, mutilated, violated for the private lusts, as it were. And then it emerged in that year, in 1971, that the government had set aside $750,000 for 1971-1972 to acquire escarpment land in the Ministry of Lands and Forests budget, and some $800,000 in the conservation authorities so that there was roughly $1.5 million to meet the Gertler requests for the year 1971-1972.

It began to reach the level of farce when, in the budget of that year they talked about a $20 million land banking programme, and when the then Treasurer, the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough), was asked how much of that $20 million would be committed to the escarpment, he couldn't indicate to us that a single penny would be committed to the escarpment.

Year in and year out the opposition drove the government, begged it, for some kind of commitment to the Niagara Escarpment to fulfil the obligations that it had set out in 1967, in 1968, in the tabling of the report in 1969, in the Minister of Revenue's statement in 1970, and in the estimates of 1971 and 1972. And on every single occasion the ministry proved delinquent.

But as a matter of fact, even though Gertler was traduced on every front by this government, Mr. Speaker, it defied him on land use policy, it defied him on easements, it defied him on co-ordination of purchase, it defied him on the scale of its financial support—even though all of that was true, the public pressure was so great, the embarrassment was sufficient that the government finally appointed its task force.

On May 1, 1972, the Clasky task force was appointed, and in the government document which the Treasurer tabled a few days ago, he said that the Niagara Escarpment task force was to answer key issues that remained unanswered. Let me tell the House what those key issues were as he outlined them: What are the overall goals and objectives which the government should adopt in framing a comprehensive policy for the escarpment? Let me tell the minister something through you, Mr. Speaker: He already had goals and objectives four years earlier, five years earlier, from Len Gertler; indeed from the Parks Integration Board which had set out data which he subsequently disregarded.

And then the Treasurer goes on to say: What kind of planning programme is most appropriate for the escarpment? Does he mean four years after he receives a definitive report, he sets up Mr. Clasky to decide what kind of planning programme is most appropriate for the escarpment? The Treasurer says: What should be the priorities for government acquisition of lands? The government's priorities were set out in an A, B and C operation in a report given to the government in June of 1968, and four years later it is asking the same question again.

The government never had any commitment to the Niagara Escarpment—over all those years, no commitment at all. I will come back to that because it is absolutely central to the position that we are putting.

So the government establishes a task force as a result of the crescendo of public criticism. Now, here I am personally on difficult ground—I don't know Mr. Clasky. All I know is that he comes from the Holy Land, that he used to work for the government of Saskatchewan in the great days of democratic socialism, and therefore I don't understand it.

I am moderated in the level of feeling I have about it, out of recognition for Mr. Clasky's reputation and out of recognition for what he contributed to a province to which I regularly and daily pay homage, but

I don't understand it. I just don't understand it, because I want to tell the members something and it pains me to tell them in the presence of members of the task force—particularly tell the members in their presence—but I want to tell the members that I am staggered by the task force report.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, as he says, he doesn't understand it.

Mr. Lewis: It is a tendentious, superficial document. I am going to have to say these things. It is not the report I don't understand.

Hon. Mr. White: In fairness, he says he doesn't understand it.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, I understand the report very well, but what I don't understand are the motives operative in reaching the conclusions.

Mr. Stokes: Or the reasons for the report.

Mr. Lewis: That I don't understand. I am perplexed and bewildered, because from the enunciation of the first goal of the task force report, on which the government's policy is based, there is an implicit and clear betrayal of the Niagara Escarpment.

Hon. Mr. White: The member is day-dreaming.

Mr. Lewis: The Treasurer is on very weak ground, because in order to be on strong ground he would have to speak to the government's achievements between 1967 and 1972, and since there are none he is hardly on strong ground to accept them, to make comments now.

Hon. Mr. White: There are some and I will give them to the hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: Let me make my case and I have no doubt that the Treasurer will answer it when he is given the opportunity.

The first recommendation of the task force is, and I quote: "The goal should be to maintain the Niagara Escarpment as a continuous natural environment while seeking to accommodate demands compatible with that environment."

Now when the Treasurer talks about seeking to accommodate demands compatible with that environment, let me tell him about the demands: Pits and quarries; residential subdivisions; private acquisition of land for speculative purposes; turning the Bruce Trail into a series of abandoned railroad routes—all of the things which have characterized the Niagara Escarpment in the past five years are now open for future characteristic of the Niagara Escarpment.

If the first goal had said: "To preserve the Niagara Escarpment for public use as the finest recreational resource in southern Ontario and to deny any private use of the escarpment which violates the public interest one iota," then I would say: "This task force spoke to the issue."

But when the task force in their goal immediately set out the accommodation of demands compatible with that environment, then all of us know what is going to happen; and when they set up the methodological route they established, then one can bloody well ensure that it is going to happen.

I think that whole goal is a fatal Achilles heel. I think it's the whole story. There just aren't any references to public rights in the goal; they're subordinate to absolutely everything else.

And I want to tell the minister something else, although it grieves me to tell him. The statement is designed to meet a predetermined end of compatibility that's acceptable to the government.

I don't know whether the task force did it consciously. I don't know whether the task force did it unconsciously. I don't pretend that it in any sense violates the integrity of the members of that task force, but that task force established itself as a means of protecting the private interest on the Niagara Escarpment.

And I say to them, "J'accuse," because I know not what else to say. I accuse the task force of degrading themselves as an instrument of government policy in this report—

Hon. Mr. White: Now the member is proving he doesn't understand.

Mr. Lewis: —of allowing themselves to be used in that fashion of consciously or unconsciously arriving at conclusions acceptable to the government. Maybe they felt they had to. But the terms of reference which were set for the task force need not be interpreted within those parameters, and so the task force has collaborated in the destruction of the escarpment. I do not understand it.

Hon. Mr. White: The member doesn't understand any part of it.

Mr. Lewis: I don't know whether they are so naive, they are so innocent, they have such conviction about what the cabinet will do with their proposals that they are willing to include these kinds of things, but they are wrong. They are dead wrong.

Hon. Mr. White: He is uncomprehending.

Mr. Lewis: They are dead wrong.

Hon. Mr. White: He will not understand that control is not ownership, although his father said—

Mr. Lewis: Well, control or ownership is a distinction which weighs the difference between control and ownership which we have made.

Hon. Mr. White: If he'll read some of his father's speeches he'll understand it.

Mr. Singer: The Treasurer should read some of his own speeches. He should read some of his own.

Mr. Lewis: We have made that distinction in this House many times when trying to get the Treasurer and some of his corporation Acts or some of his resource control Acts to recognize the difference between control and ownership.

He doesn't there and he doesn't here, because basically he doesn't have any feeling for the public sector at all.

Mr. Lawlor: It is a bitter sellout.

Hon. Mr. White: The member doesn't understand it and won't understand it.

Mr. Lewis: Well, the Treasurer can bark at me. It is a bitter sellout and it makes it even more bitter that he has so many senior—

Hon. Mr. White: Honour the works of David Lewis.

Mr. Lewis: The Treasurer won't defame David Lewis by honouring his works! I'll not have him do that! He doesn't visit the sins of the son on the father. Have a little respect!

I'll tell him that neither David Lewis nor Stephen Lewis nor any member of the New Democratic Party needs a lesson on the distinction between ownership and control. What the Treasurer needs a little lesson on is the distinction between the public interest and private rights. That's what he needs a lesson on. And his task force was subservient—

Hon. Mr. White: It was not my task force.

Mr. Lewis: Now I don't want the Treasurer interrupting me that way. Is he up on a point of order?

Hon. Mr. White: No, I got sick listening to the hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: Is the Treasurer upon a point of personal privilege? Or is he up because he is stretching?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I have been making a point of sitting and listening to the incomprehension of the NDP.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister's exercise is significant.

Mr. Lewis: Is that little riposte satisfying to the minister—that little devastating piece of repartee? Is he pleased with it? Okay! Well the incomprehending leader of the NDP is going to continue.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: I want to tell the Treasurer something about the task force report. I am going to make something clear about it. Throughout this task force report there are a number of—

Mr. Singer: Four Tories didn't raise their heads. Five of them in the House.

Mr. Kennedy: Three NDP.

Mr. Lewis: Well, one, two, three, four, five, six—six Tories.

Mr. Singer: Six. It shows how much respect they have for the minister.

An hon. member: Seven.

Mr. Lewis: Well, the fact of the matter is that is an excessive number of Conservatives on any given afternoon—and one should be thankful.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It is positively crowded.

Mr. Lewis: Well, it is crowded.

Mr. Stokes: They have no stomach for this kind of legislation.

Mr. Singer: It is interesting to note the ministerial support he has, too.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Just the paid whips are here.

Mr. Lewis: This task force, Mr. Speaker, dealt with a lot of peripheral stuff, not quite central to the escarpment, although they dealt with central issues, too, and I will come to them in a moment.

But they dealt with peripheral things. They spent some time on restricted zones for pits and quarries—pits and quarries which have harassed the escarpment to the point where everyone is concerned about it. They say in recommendation 12(1), Mr. Speaker:

A restrictive zone should be established to prohibit the opening of new pits or quarries, including wayside pits.

And then they say:

Under this recommendation, present licences would suffer no disruption of their operations.

Imagine a task force on the escarpment saying the restrictive zone on the escarpment should apply only to existing pits and quarries and that the recommendation would have present licences suffer no disruption in their operation.

Hon. Mr. White: It says a lot more than that.

Mr. Lewis: Am I supposed to believe that the task force has a commitment to the Niagara Escarpment which reflects the public interest? Come, now! Come, now!

As a matter of fact, it was even too much for the government to swallow. Even the government is taking a pretty hard look at the 13 aggregate operations that are even now mining the surface of the escarpment in a way which requires that they all be closed down—all of them moved to a more appropriate part of the province, with government support if necessary. But the government has no right to have a single pit or quarry operating in the restricted zone on the Niagara Escarpment. Some recommendation that is!

Then there were silly, kind of gratuitous asides in the report. These are rather interesting. On page 21, under the heading, "Public's Initiative", the task force says:

Many individuals, groups and organizations have been urging governments and private industry to pursue policies and programmes that will help preserve the Niagara Escarpment. In doing so, they have served the useful role of watchdog in preventing new encroachments on the escarpment.

Well, how nice for the task force to acknowledge the watchdog role. On page 22, under the heading of "How the Public Sees the Issues," they say:

Enough has been done by now about the escarpment for everyone concerned to have formed intelligent and useful opinions about the government's programme at this stage.

Well, I hope that was offered tongue-in-cheek. I know not why else it would be offered.

Hon. Mr. White: Come on, the member is getting senile. And there was even the necessity to make the little crack about Barbara Ward and linnets in order to provide the task force with the sense of eccentric academic intelligence during the course of their report.

Mr. Lawlor: It's Bengal tigers.

Mr. Lewis: Bengal tigers, yes! You know it is not the Camp commission writing on the Legislature. It's a report on the escarpment:

Then, there were suggestions of ski slopes to be acquired by the public, but given over possibly to private interests to run. And then there was the facile embrace of the Bruce Trail as though it were a momentous suggestion, that we should have easements in purchase of the Bruce Trail—five to six years after Gertler—in order to preserve it.

The entire report is, in a sense, in a funny sense, an apology for government policy; rather than an adventure into new governmental policy. In many areas it is amazingly uncritical.

In fact, the most courageous declaration of independence in the report is on page 67 when it says:

The lands of the Niagara Escarpment are affected by many government agencies. At the moment there is no organization responsible for co-ordinating these agencies' programmes, many of which are inter-related.

However, Mr. Speaker, all of that is relatively minor. All of that just suggests the peccadilloes of the task force report, which dealt with things which need not have been dealt with.

The government report, which followed the task force report, and the bill which is before us today, are found wanting, desperately, fatally, on four major grounds; again where the task force was a bitter disappointment. I am going to enumerate those four major grounds because they are the four major holes in this bill, we believe.

No. 1. The reports which were tabled and the bill itself have abandoned one of the central strategies of the whole Gertler approach, and that is a park system. I ask the minister, through you Mr. Speaker, what in God's name has happened to the park system for the Niagara Escarpment? That was the central strategy for Gertler; what made the escarpment make sense was the whole park system.

Hon. Mr. White: If the member doesn't mind we are going to have a little consultation with the people involved.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, sure, a little consultation; six years after the event. Gertler said in his article:

The second major element of the strategy is that the Niagara Escarpment should be preserved, planned and developed as a single park network taking into account its special features; the opportunities for diversified recreation; its role as a predominant landscape element; and the requirements of circulation within the escarpment area.

Then he designated the parks; he designated the land requirements; and he designated the financial costs. He set it all out in June, 1968.

Mr. Lawlor: In detail!

Mr. Lewis: In detail. Now, in May, 1973, comes a government task force and a government policy statement and the parks are dealt with in an aside. That's No. 1.

No. 2, Mr. Speaker, is that in the fundamental decision of the government—how best to preserve the escarpment—the task force and the government jettisoned major land acquisition in favour of something called development controls. They jettisoned major land acquisition on grounds so specious, so fatuous, so undocumented as to insult the intelligence. I return to the task force report, page 28: "Implementing the Goal and Objectives."

The most common means used so far to preserve the escarpment lands is public purchase, but it is highly questionable whether a programme based on this method could preserve the whole escarpment. Cost alone would seem to rule out this possibility. The task force has estimated that purchasing only the relatively small area adjacent to the escarpment face would cost more than $3 billion, half the province's total budget. If only because of the costs involved, land acquisition is a technique that must be confined to specific properties.

That's it. That's the blanket statement on which land acquisition was relegated to a subordinate position in the whole setting out of a strategy for the escarpment.

Mr. Speaker, after these reports were tabled we asked the various ministers how did the task force arrive at the figure in excess of $3 billion dollars? For two days the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Lawrence) had no idea. Then the Treasurer tabled a document, one of the most extraordinary documents I have ever seen tabled in this House. It wasn't picked up.

I'm going to read this one-page answer into the record. It's called "Land Acquisition Costs—Niagara Escarpment." Quote:

The question of the estimate of $3 billion for acquisition of Niagara Escarpment lands and the relationship of this to the figures in the Gertler report have been raised. [Indeed it was.] The task force estimate of acquisition costs in excess of $3 billion was based on almost total acquisition of all lands in the Niagara Escarpment planning area, excluding only built-up urban communities. The land to be acquired under such circumstances would cover very expensive lands such as almost all of the Niagara fruitlands, suburban areas around St. Catharines, Niagara Falls, Hamilton, and intensively used recreational lands in Grey county.

Based on market values, high and low, acquisition cost projections were made after consultation with the Ministry of Natural Resources and officials of conservation authorities active in land purchase programmes.

These projections were: (a) Low—assume an average cost of $1,500 cost per acre for 1.2 million acres—equals $1.8 billion. High—assume an average cost of $2,750 per acre for 1.2 million acres—$3.3 billion. This is in contrast to the proposed acquisition programme in the Gertler report which concentrated on land purchase for park purposes in predominantly lower value agricultural areas. Gertler was, quite rightly, able to use a much lower average figure for acquisition costs.

That's all very interesting. And it is, to some extent of course, borne out by the experience of the most recent purchases of land on the escarpment. At least Gertler's contentions were borne out.

In late 1972, the Ministry of Natural Resources tabled the acquisition of land through the ministry, and through the conservation authorities, in very many areas of the escarpment. We took the trouble to take a look at the cost per acre as it relates to land acquisition. Under the Ministry of Natural Resources the single greatest cost per acre in the last year of purchasing was $1,450 at the Forks of the Credit River. That's pretty prime recreational land.

For the conservation authorities, the highest cost per acre was $3,105, although most of it varied from no cost—

Hon. Mr. White: Careful, the member is proving him wrong.

Mr. Lewis:—because conservation authorities get a good deal of land at no cost, rather a larger acreage than I realized, none of which is referred to in the minister's report. Most of it is in the vicinity of $14.50 per acre, up to somewhere around $700 or $800 an acre. The one purchase of 125 acres was an exceptional purchase.

What all of these figures show is that the average cost per acre in the last year of purchase from the Ministry of Natural Resources, 1972, was $239. The average cost to the conservation authorities was $168. The average cost for the minister's task force, based on their estimates, rises to $2,750 an acre; and I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that these figures are false. These figures should never have been introduced. These figures are insupportable.

As a matter of fact, it's really quite something to reply to opposition questions by saying that we have a low projection of $1.8 billion and a high projection of $3.3 billion, and then include only the high projection in his document. What kind of statistical refinement is that? What kind of credibility for the task force is that? They can see the low figure of acquisition—

Mr. Lawlor: Who are they trying to manipulate?

Mr. Lewis:—as being plausible throughout the escarpment, then they project the highest possible figure and they use only the highest figure in their report and in the government report. They don't even try to estimate an average. They just insert the most inflated figure possible.

I say to the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, that the reason they inserted the highest figure possible was in order to make the argument that public acquisition was inappropriate for the escarpment, and that therefore they were self-serving figures and self-serving arguments.

What kind of documentation is this, that they discussed it with officials of the Ministry of Natural Resources and officials of the conservation authorities? The people who should have been spoken to were the officials of the Ministry of Government Services. They do the purchasing. Natural Resources never knows the cost.

The Ministry of Government Services does the purchasing and would have the figures at hand. None of the acreage indicated; and none of the exact cost indicated; no recognition is given to the fact that for the money they are talking about—indeed for the money the government talked about at 20 per cent—it could buy almost all of the escarpment with the exception of those areas immediately adjacent to the southern Ontario cities!

Talking about the distinction between development control and ownership, in those areas, it might have made sense to fix tight land controls on the part of government; but the government could have acquired massive sections of the Niagara Escarpment, and chose not to do so on grounds that are totally specious on the basis of the minister's own material and information.

I don't know what possessed the task force to make the assertions they did without the documentation, or to table in the House figures which have no definition, and then to use the most inflated figures to make an argument. I don't know what possessed the task force to do that, but clearly they are serving government policy. That is simply not acceptable to us, and that is really the crux of the intent of the task force.

They talk about the acquisition of ecologic and historic sites, but none of those ecologic and historic sites are outlined. One of the really unhappy truths about this bill and about the government report and about the task force report is that there is absolutely no commitment to the fruitlands of the Niagara Peninsula at all. The government couldn't even bring itself to make a commitment to purchase the fruitlands. As a matter of fact, government implies very strongly that it may well abandon the fruitlands in Ontario, and that is beyond belief.

This obsession with maintaining the private interest goes so far that the government refuses to concede the value of public acquisition to preserve some of the most indispensable features of the Niagara Escarpment. Let me take it a step further, Mr. Speaker, and move to the third point.

The task force and the government have again delayed plans until 1976. Not only have they abandoned the park system, not only have they relinquished the obvious approach of major acquisition of land on the escarpment, but they have delayed the implementation of plans in an unconscionable fashion. The minister's using all the same manipulative, consultation process that he used in the Planning and Development Act and in the Parkway Belt Act, about which the member for Grey-Bruce is dead on.

I remember being in his riding, God help me; there were very few people I could find who weren't talking admiringly of the member for Grey-Bruce that evening. I may say, whether it was in the media or in certain public engagements I undertook. The entire area that I had exposure to that night felt that the government had turned its back on any of the consultative principles.

They felt, as a matter of fact, that the task force had made a mockery of the consultative process. They run up and pretend to meet with people who will have some close input to the task force proposal. And what is the input? The input is a series of hieroglyphics at the back of the report. The input is a series of gratuitous graphs to show what people thought, although I may say that some of the public feeling was not subsequently incorporated into the recommendations of the task force or the government.

The government has decided to delay the implementation of preserving the escarpment yet again; and how does it expect us to accept that? Does the minister realize that it will be nine years after John Robarts' policy statement?

Hon. Mr. White: Come on! The member is just unbelievable.

Mr. Lewis: Did the minister say I was a great fellow? I am willing, in a modest way, to accept that from him in mid-speech.

Let me tell him something. Does he realize that—

Hon. Mr. White: The member is just beyond reality, completely!

Mr. Lewis: —John Robarts' policy statement was made in March, 1967?

Hon. Mr. White: Does the member mind if we consult the people affected?

Mr. Lewis: The minister brings in a bill in May, 1973, which says that he will have a plan in 1976.

Mr. MacDonald: In the fullness of time.

Mr. Lewis: He is not living in this century.

Mr. Stokes: He is unreal.

Mr. Lewis: He is rooted in some pre-palaeolithic period. He doesn't understand what the march of time means.

Mr. Lawlor: Riding on spaceship earth.

Mr. Lewis: Nine years!

Hon. Mr. White: The member is right out of his skull.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is willing to have nine years intervene before he even has a plan? Who is he kidding?

Hon. Mr. White: No wonder the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) is pawing the ground.

Mr. Lewis: Who is he kidding? My friend from Ottawa Centre paws the ground every time the minister walks into this House, and more power to him.

Hon. Mr. White: The member for Scarborough West shouldn't turn his back!

Mr. Lewis: It doesn't take much waving of the flag to have that bull aroused, if I may say.

Hon. Mr. White: Don't let the member turn his back on him.

Mr. Lewis: No, not at all. I am not quite as nasty in my epithets as some have been known to be.

Hon. Mr. White: I used to caution the member for York South about turning his back on the member, but he didn't take much notice.

Mr. Lewis: Well, is that the minister's defence of the bill? Is that the weight of his contribution to this debate?

Hon. Mr. White: No. I will have something to say.

Mr. Lewis: I am not going to be deterred by the minister's gentle asides. He is willing to let nine years go between Mr. Robarts' statement and a final emergence of a plan, and he knows and we know that there will be no plan in three years' time.

In the process of waiting the three years, the minister has arrogated to himself powers that are hard to believe. He has abused the consultative process and he hasn't protected the escarpment. The whole thing can leave us in the three year period before the so-called plan comes into vogue.

I could set it out myself, but if my colleagues in the House don't mind I am going to read a further little excerpt from Harold Greer, because he put it very well.

There is no official, or unofficial for that matter, plan which the minister must follow in making his decisions. There is no requirement that government regulations be passed setting out criteria he must use.

There is no appeal to the cabinet, the Ontario Municipal Board or the courts from his decision. All this is being done, believe it or not, in the name of encouraging more effective planning at the local level, particularly in regard to the control and use of land.

That was how the Speech from the Throne of last March foreshadowed the legislation and that is how the government, aided by the surrealist efforts of its favourite advertising firm, has now presented it to local governments and the public.

And to be sure, there is an element of local level participation in land-use planning. Whenever, in an area designated for development control, there is an application for a development permit, the minister must advise landowners within 1,000 ft of the proposed development, that such an application has been received.

If no objection is taken, the minister may or may not issue the permit with such conditions as he pleases. If, however, objection is taken the minister must appoint a hearing officer to hold a hearing and submit a report along with his recommendations. The minister may then issue or not issue a development permit as he pleases, along with such conditions as he pleases.

There is also provision in the legislation for the minister to delegate this authority to a new agency, the Niagara Escarpment Commission; or on request to a county or regional municipality within the escarpment planning area. However, the decision of the commission or the municipality may be appealed to the minister, in which case he decides to issue or not to issue a development permit as before.

There is no time limit on the minister's enjoyment of these extraordinary powers. Apparently, it is the government's intention that they shall continue until the Niagara Escarpment Commission, after consultation with the municipalities concerned and after public hearings, comes up with an official plan, which plan after provincial government approval will have the force of law and govern development for the entire planning area.

This process is expected to take at least three years; it will probably take six. In the meantime and, indeed, thereafter, unless the government changes the law, a single minister, aided of course by the provincial bureaucracy, may develop as he sees fit, guided only by the stricture laid down in the Legislature that its purpose is to provide for the maintenance of the Niagara Escarpment, etc.

True, there are many sections of the escarpment where ministerial ad hockery will not be necessary since satisfactory local official plans exist to provide public access and use. But vast stretches still remain where there is no such protection and which have been frozen while the province decides on a policy. Thousands of property owners in these stretches will now individually attend the minister's pleasure.

To call this planning, is, of course, a desecration of language. The whole subject of planning is to arrive at a comprehensive plan which is beyond arbitrary and capricious change. Ad hockery is the antithesis of good planning. One can only marvel at how the government has arrived at this state of affairs after six years of supposed planning.

Let it be said, Mr. Speaker, that once again the consultative process has been destroyed in the implementation of this bill; that once again the minister is taking to himself and to the cabinet powers so arbitrary that they should not be thus exercised; and that once again we risk the escarpment for their intervening three years to capricious government policy, which policy has served the interests of private land developers and private land acquisition for the last six years of desecration of the escarpment.

For three more years we are left to the whims of the government, and that is totally unacceptable. I don't know where the minister feels, or the cabinet feels, it has the right to delay things even further. I don't know why there couldn't have been a major programme of land acquisition this year with a master plan available by the end of this year, and if that plan be entrusted to the Clasky task force, so be it. To demean the Escarpment Commission made up in the majority of appointees of this government is not defensible. That leads me to the fourth point I wanted to make.

Hon. Mr. White: The member will live to rue that particular remark, if not the others.

Mr. Lewis: Which particular remark?

Hon. Mr. White: The aspersions cast in advance on men not yet appointed.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, the aspersions cast in advance on men not yet appointed.

In order to find a policy rationale for this travesty of discarding land acquisition and good planning and the urgent need for design, the minister has emerged with something called development control. My colleague from Ottawa Centre and others of my colleagues will have something to say about development control further in this debate. Development control is one of the neatest devices ever contrived to invite development pressure from every conceivable source.

The only distinction between development control and what now exists—

Hon. Mr. White: All done in public!

Mr. Lewis: —is that the minister is going to have a particular group, designated by government, subject to all of the same private developer pressures. He is even going to designate the land for them which can be brought under these pressures. No wonder it freezes the blood of one reporter and causes another near apoplexy.

Hon. Mr. White: He doesn't understand it, either.

Mr. Lewis: Nobody understands it except the hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. White: Most people here understand it, though the member may not.

Mr. Lewis: No, most people don't understand it.

Mr. Stokes: That is the minister's big trouble. Nobody understands him.

Hon. Mr. White: Everybody understands it except the NDP.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, oh, a little acerbic innuendo across the floor, eh? An occasional nasty crack to compensate for substance, policy or anything else.

Hon. Mr. White: That is not innuendo.

Mr. Lewis: No, as a matter of fact, it is quite a direct affront to the gentlest and nicest fellow in Thunder Bay.

Hon. Mr. White: I am generalizing. I didn't single him out. I was generalizing.

Mr. Lewis: The minister generalized it, did he? How charitable!

The minister's development controls allow for criteria. I just want to hear what he will bring into development controls. The controls allow for alterations to the topography, alterations in the vegetative cover, problems of erosion and siltation, effects of natural drainage and ground water, sewage disposal and water supply, urban design, siting of a structure and architectural features, including building heights.

It is an open invitation to exploitation of the escarpment for private use, that's what the minister's development control is. He says that his zoning bylaws don't work, and that his ministerial orders don't work. Then he sets up a channel which is as bad as anything which has existed thus far.

I make no comment on those who are to be appointed, except this. They will be under exactly the same pressures as any government-appointed body, as has been true of the escarpment over the last five years. In the process, the escarpment has been dismembered and violated as a major natural resource in southern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, there is no change from current policy. They are all the same hazards, all the same dangers, all the same pressures. Development control means saving the escarpment for the developers. That is the real definition of development control. And, frankly, Mr. Speaker, we repudiate this policy of capitulation to developers.

I want to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, just what this bill really says. After six years there is no plan, there is no park system, there is no major land acquisition, there are no greater safeguards, there is yet another agency, there is yet a further delay, there is yet more quarrying, and there is yet further encroachment on the escarpment. And all of this in the name of saving the escarpment!

Well, the government has gone too far this time. It has just stepped over the limits of credibility entirely, and that's why it's an obituary notice for the escarpment. It's a terrible policy. When it comes to the escarpment, hypocritical and moronic.

I want to tell the minister something else, through you Mr. Speaker. That's the real scandal of the last year—this bill above all others. Not the Fidinam affair and not the conflicts of interest and not the Hydro building, but this piece of legislation is the scandal of this government. Because in this piece of legislation the government has written finis to all that most of us believed would be true of the Niagara Escarpment as the primary recreational resource in southern Ontario. It has abandoned it. It has betrayed every principal that Gertler articulated. And if I put that strongly, I do it deliberately.

Hon. Mr. White: The member puts everything strongly.

Mr. Lewis: I do it deliberately, because I really don't understand what possesses the government to have done this particular thing.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, you don't have to be a romantic to realize what is at stake and what we're losing. You don't have to be a romantic to recognize the almost providential availability of the escarpment, right on the edge of an urban industrial complex. You don't have to be a romantic to treasure the conspicuous landscape, the limestone cliffs, the adjacent plains, bays, rocks, soils, woods, streams, marshes, 39 species of orchids, the white-tailed deer—in total this magnificent ecological and recreational phenomenon.

And the government is abandoning it. It is abandoning it to the lusts of private development. The whole history of the last five years is as a counterpoint to what the government has decided to do in this bill. And it has an extraordinary presumption in the process, because in the last page of the government's own report it says, and I want to quote it and take my seat:

It is entirely appropriate that the place designated for introducing development controls should be the Niagara Escarpment. This ancient geological formation and superb wildlife habitat represents the essence of Ontario—splendour, strength and diversity. It is a place where native plants and animals can flourish as they have for millions of years, where people can find refuge from an increasingly man-made environment and discover their harmony with nature.

A positively lyrical statement, Mr. Speaker. On the escarpment, within easy reach of the crowded metropolitan centres of southern Ontario, it is possible to relax, observe, explore and be refreshed by the presence of something that people have no ability to create and no right to destroy.

Mr. Stokes: What hypocrisy!

Mr. Lewis: And yet this bill gives the government the right to continue the destruction of the escarpment!

I want the Treasurer to understand—even as a smile, as always, lurks at the corners of his mouth—we are angry about this bill and his default. We feel very strongly about his willingness to associate himself with something that writes the finale to the escarpment in southern Ontario.

That's why we're opposing it, and we will fight it right throughout the piece—as we will all of his land-use development, which is a total facade in terms of what it pretends otherwise to be.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, I'd like to speak on second reading of this bill, to say that we in the Liberal Party also oppose the concepts that are used supposedly to control the Niagara Escarpment. Those of us who have lived in Ontario all our lives have appreciated the beauty, recreation facilities and the pure wonderment of the escarpment. We go right from Niagara, from the peach belt right up through the Georgetown area, and eventually end up in Grey county, the Georgian Bay area and the Bruce peninsula, which have been prime recreational areas where many of us have travelled from our youth up.

It was many years ago when we were told by supposed experts at that time that if something was not done the whole peach area in the Niagara Escarpment would disappear. It was said 15 or 20 years ago that we'd be importing our peaches from Georgia if some kind of action was not taken.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): That is happening now.
